To provide for operating losses incurred by the Merchant Fleet Corporation the committee recommends the sum of $12,000,000 for the fiscal year 1929. This is $1,400,000 less than the estimate submitted in the Budget. It was adduced during the hearings that certain economies might be effected through reductions in fuel and supply costs and the sale of several lines of vessels. In addition the committee deducted the sum of $350,000, which approximates the annual earned interest on various funds under the control of the corporation. To compensate for this latter reduction, however, a new section has been added to the paragraph making appropriations for the Fleet Corporation, as follows:

(e) All interest earned on the funds of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation is to accrue to these funds and is made available for the purposes hereinbefore set forth subject to the limitations herein established.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am sure the gentleman is interested in establishing a permanent merchant marine, just as much so as I am. Perhaps we differ as to policy and as to the treatment by Congress of this activity. I am wondering if the gentleman's committee has not made a mistake in cutting the Budget estimate a million dollars. I can not find in the hearings any place where a single member of the Shipping Board has suggested, or agreed on, or appeared to be satisfied, with the action of the committee in cutting the Budget estimate a million dollars. The estimate of the board was $14,300,000. The President's Budget cut that amount to $13,400,000 and the committee now cuts that a million dollars.

It is true that the hearings show something of a saving in fuel. It does appear that some of the witnesses evidently assumed that all conditions affecting shipping will be as good in the next year as they were in the past—of which we have no assurance—did not demur; but I call the gentleman's attention to the statement of Chairman O'Connor, at page 781 of your hearings, where he asked the committee not to cut the estimate of the Budget. Will the gentleman give us some idea as to how he expects to help the merchant marine by cutting this appropriation even below the estimate prepared and approved by the Budget?

Mr. WOOD. I will be glad to answer the question. I may say in passing that yesterday the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] made a speech in which he called attention to the fact that some time during the hearings a committee of gentlemen, headed by ex-Governor Miller, of New York, came to this town and had an interview with me and afterwards with members of the Shipping Board on account of the differences arising between them with respect to certain sailings in which the Fleet Corporation had a line of vessels, and the inference was deduced from what was said that as the result of that interview the appropriations for the Shipping Board were reduced in this sum of $1,400,000. I felt at the time that it was very fair in him, and I felt also that there was not a member of the committee but who was in agreement with me as to what the appropriation should be, who entertained for a moment the idea that the reduction had anything to do with that. I wish to commend the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] on his statement of what occurred, and the extracts he put in disclosed what occurred at that meeting.

It is only fair, however, to the gentlemen present on that occasion, headed by ex-Governor Miller, of New York, who is recognized as one of the foremost citizens of that State, and who is, I suppose, one of the best lawyers in that State, representing the line that he was attorney for, to say that they came to my office and told me of the possible desire of that committee to come before the committee and relate their troubles. After hearing in a summary way what they had on their minds, I said:

It strikes me that you gentlemen ought to get together and decide upon whether there should be 4 sailings to Calcutta instead of 16.

There seemed to be a difference of opinion among the gentlemen and the Shipping Board, and I thought there should be some conference between these conflicting interests in order that something might be agreed upon and for the purpose of getting a business connection between the American line as opposed to a connection between the British lines and the American line. The interest of Mr. Miller was an American line. They wanted an additional trip, making 15 or 16 in all. It occurred to me that possibly an arrangement might be made between them. It was with that idea in mind that I suggested that there should be a conference between them, and for that purpose I called upon Mr. O'Connor and General Dalton and arranged for a meeting at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, at which Mr. O'Connor and Mr. Plummer and Mr. Smith represented the Shipping Board. But the result of it was that nothing came of it, and nothing was ever said or referred to about a cut; and I am happy to say to the committee, that in order that there might not be any misunderstanding as to the attitude of these gentlemen and of this committee, I asked Chairman O'Connor and Vice Chairman Plummer to come to my office this morning. Mr. WASON, Mr. VINSON of Kentucky, Mr. CULLEN, and myself were present; and these gentlemen stated that it had never occurred to them that this reduction was in consequence of or because of that meeting.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I have not heard anybody charging that on the floor. I thought the gentleman from Maine made a splendid and courageous statement. I think he was very fair to the chairman and to the committee, and I think that perhaps the chairman is unduly exercised when he takes the position that he must defend himself and the committee even before a charge is made. The chairman ordered the Shipping Board members to come to his office.

Mr. WOOD. No; he did not order anything of the kind. He invited them.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Well, you requested them to come. You requested these gentlemen to appear in your office before they appeared before your committee to present their estimates of funds needed for carrying on the activities of the Shipping Board and Fleet Corporation.

The chairman knew, I assume, that this gentleman to whom you refer and this distinguished gentleman from New York, ex-Governor Miller, a great lawyer, who seems to think he can enjoin the Shipping Board from entering into the territory of our chief competitor under the British flag. These gentlemen came up here at the request of the chairman, and the chairman must have known that they——

Mr. WOOD. What chairman?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I mean the gentleman from Indiana, my friend [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD. You mean when Mr. O'Connor came up?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes; Mr. O'Connor, General Dalton, Mr. Plummer, and Mr. Smith, three members of the Shipping Board. Surely the chairman knew that these distinguished gentlemen had already been before the Shipping Board and had thrashed out their matters more than once before the Shipping Board.

I wish to be fair in any statement about the incident. I have stated no conclusion the gentleman might see fit to defend just now; but is not the Shipping Board the place for these parties to adjust their differences and not the office of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations who has so much to do with providing funds for the Shipping Board?

Mr. WOOD. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Alabama, that these gentlemen came here ostensibly for the purpose of appearing before the committee. After having heard their statements it occurred to me that their differences were such that they ought to be composed without airing their troubles before the committee. I thought that would be infinitely better, and with that idea in view this conference was held. Let me say to the gentleman that I think it is better now than a lawsuit and I think it is better now than having a rate war, costing the United States more than $1,000,000 a year, that these gentlemen get together under one flag and not under a divided flag.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I agree with the gentleman entirely. What sort of a lawsuit has the gentleman reference to?

Mr. WOOD. I will say it was stated upon that occasion, and it was stated here yesterday by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], that they are proposing to bring a lawsuit under section 7 of the merchant marine act, which provides that one line carrying the American flag shall not enter into competition with another American line.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does the gentleman think there is any ground for such a lawsuit?

Mr. WOOD. I am not deciding that law question at all, but there is a chance of having a lawsuit, and I want to avoid that if possible.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not want to burden the gentleman or take up too much time, but the gentleman knows that any money he appropriates for the Shipping Board will not be wasted, judging the future by the past, and the gentleman knows that any money that is not used will be covered into the Treasury, except that which is needed to pay outstanding obligations under the language of the law. That being so, what is the object in eliminating $1,400,000 from the estimate of the Budget?

Mr. WOOD. I will answer that. The hearings in this case disclose that with the disposition of the west coast lines there will be more than $1,000,000 saved in that operation, because the loss of operation covered by the last appropriation amounted to $1,100,000 in round figures. Now, then, with the sale of certain other lines it may amount to twice $1,000,000, and they will save more upon the purchase of oil than $1,400,000 in the next year. There is no trouble about this and the gentleman need not be exercised. I appreciate the interest he has in the merchant marine; I appreciate the interest he has ever manifested in upholding the Shipping Board, and he has rendered valuable support in that direction; but two or three years ago the gentleman will remember, when we made a cut upon this appropriation to cover these expenses, he and other gentlemen here thought we had made too much of a cut. At that time it was agreed tentatively, and it was so expressed and is so expressed now, that in the event the appropriation we made was not sufficient to cover these losses they would not be hurt because of the fact that the deficiency bill could cover anything that might be needed.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Let me interrupt the gentleman to make this observation, or to ask the gentleman if in his honest opinion the very fact that the Congress itself cuts the President's Budget will not have its effect upon the future operations of the Shipping Board and its opportunities to handle more of the world's commerce?

Is not the psychology of it bad? Will not our competitors say, "Over there in America, even the Congress does not agree with the President's estimate"? and the President certainly has not shown any great amount of enthusiasm over this proposition, and will not our competitors say to shippers everywhere on earth, that Congress itself is withholding from the United States merchant marine the funds asked for and which are deemed necessary for successful operation?

Mr. WOOD. I think just the converse of that is true. It was the contemplation of the merchant marine act as soon as possible and under the most advantageous circumstances to get the merchant marine out of Government control and into private control. I believe that the sooner we get all of these lines into the hands of private corporations or individuals that much sooner will we establish as a permanent fact to all the people of the earth that we are going to maintain a merchant marine. No merchant marine has ever been successfully established and maintained in this country except under private ownership. The governments of Europe to-day are only hoping that we will keep dilly-dallying along as we have been dilly-dallying along ever since the close of the war without any definite policy, and that after two or three years, when the boats we now have will be obsolete, and we will have faded away from the sea. To my mind the greatest encouragement and the greatest guarantee for a permanent merchant marine is to get these vessels, as soon as possible, into the hands of responsible operators who are bent upon the maintenance of a merchant marine under the supervision of the Government of the United States.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I suggest to the gentleman that the more we pare these appropriations the more quickly will this be done. Is that the policy under which the committee is proceeding?

Mr. WOOD. There is a whole lot that might be said pro and con upon that question. I say here—and perhaps it is unfortunate we have to discuss this—that there is a divided opinion with reference to the future of our merchant marine. There are a few people, even having their representation upon the Shipping Board, who are in favor of Government ownership. But the great mass of the people of the United States are opposed to it and they subscribe to the doctrine that the less the Government has to do with business the better it is for the people and for the Government. Now, then, with that divided opinion represented upon the board, I do not know how long it may be until we will carry out the letter of the merchant marine act which you will agree with me is ultimately to place all of these vessels in the hands of private owners.

If these vessels or these lines are disposed of at the earliest possible moment, before the ships themselves have become decadent and decayed, I expect the gentleman will agree that if they were placed in the hands of private owners under such restrictions and such requirements as the Shipping Board has the right to make, it would be infinitely better than to permit them to rot away without replacement, because we would soon have nothing left.

It is gratifying to know that we have reduced the cost of operation from about $50,000,000 to $17,000,000, or perhaps $14,000,000.

Mr. McDUFFIE. About $16,000,000.

Mr. WOOD. And the cost has been reduced in some degree by retrenchment in operation, but the vast portion of the reduction has come from the sale and disposition of these lines.

We have not a single cargo line but what is operating to-day at an expense, and it is now proposed to sell the West Coast Line, where we lost $1,100,000 last year. The Roosevelt Line that the gentlemen from New York came to inquire about is losing us more than $1,100,000 a year; and one of the things that occurred to me was that if we could sell these lines to some responsible agency that was bound, under the requirements and specifications of the Shipping Board, to maintain them for a certain period of years, it would be infinitely better than to be paying out $1,000,000 each year as a consequence of their operation.

Mr. CULLEN. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. WOOD. I yield.

Mr. CULLEN. I would like to clear up the situation in so far as it relates to the appropriations of the Shipping Board. There was no disposition on the part of any of the members of the subcommittee having in charge the appropriations of the Shipping Board to take away from them one dollar that they asked for. They came before the committee and the committee gave them everything they wanted.

In regard to the reduction of $1,400,000, it developed at the hearings that this amount of money might be saved on fuel, and it was even suggested, I think through the purchasing agent of the Shipping Board—I think the chairman of the subcommittee and my colleague Mr. VINSON of Kentucky will bear me out in this—that they could possibly save that amount of money plus the sale of some vessels that were out on the coast.

I do not think it is fair to come in here and criticize the subcommittee. I am only a minority member, but I believe I speak for my colleague the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] when I say that the committee was honestly and sincerely giving to the Shipping Board every dollar that they needed for operating and other expenses.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman from New York permit——

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I suggest to the gentleman there is no effort or intention or purpose to criticize in the spirit the gentleman thinks we are criticizing, or that I am criticizing. I am sure the committee wants to do what is right and has done its best, but the best of us make mistakes.

Mr. CULLEN. Right.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It is no reflection on the committee if a Member of the House seeks to get a little information or offers a suggestion to the committee. I hope the gentleman does not feel I am being unfair to the committee in simply calling attention to the fact that the last words of the chairman of the Shipping Board when he left this committee were, in substance, "Please give us the amount we have in our Budget estimate." That statement is on page 781 of the hearings.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. While it may be true that the chairman of the Shipping Board made that statement as he passed out of the room, I will submit that a fair interpretation of the hearing, with all the pages of evidence, will disclose that 99⅞ per cent of the hearing indicated that what we have done was in consonance with their ideas.

Mr. CULLEN. And in addition to that, if the gentleman will yield me a moment——

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. CULLEN. As I said before, I stand ready to provide further funds to keep the Shipping Board provided with the money necessary to continue their operating expenses, but when the purchasing agent comes along and says that there might be a possible saving in so far as coal and oil are concerned, there was no other course left.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But were not the savings in oil conditioned upon the sale of the West Coast Line?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Suppose we do not sell that line or suppose, if you please, we have a coal strike and we have no ships to move the cotton of the South and the grain of the West. Under this paring process the board will not have money enough to put spot ships in the Gulf and other ports to move this additional commerce by reason of the cutting down of the appropriations.

Mr. WOOD. May I ask the gentleman, has the Government of the United States ever failed to meet the emergency he refers to?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Because it has had money enough; and let me suggest to the gentleman, the gentleman said last year $12,000,000 would be enough to get along on, and I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that already they have expended more than that for this year's operation. If we can judge the future by the past, when the fiscal year is up they will have expended about $16,000,000, and yet the gentleman said last year that $12,000,000 was enough. Now, the gentleman might again be mistaken.

Mr. WOOD. Yes; but we have not been hurt, have we?

Mr. CULLEN. If the gentleman will yield, I want it to go in the RECORD that, so far as I am personally concerned, and I think my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], will agree, there is no disposition on the part of the subcommittee, including its minority members, to take one dollar away from the Shipping Board, or to attempt in any way by reducing its appropriations to cripple it in any form, shape, or manner.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am sure of that.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment, please?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. I want to express my appreciation of the sentiment to which he has given utterance. I am very much gratified as one interested in the work the Shipping Board is trying to do.

The gentleman a moment ago said, when it was stated that there might be saved in fuel a million dollars, that there was nothing else for the committee to do but to cut down the appropriation a million dollars. Does not the gentleman understand with me that the saving of fuel was gone over carefully by the Director of the Budget when he recommended that the Shipping Board ought to have $13,000,000 to carry on with?

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that there are two items that are amply sustained by the evidence that warrants the committee in making a reduction. One is the selling of the West Coast Line, and the other the reduction of the cost of oil.

Mr. BEEDY. As long as the committee is in sympathy with the work that the Shipping Board is doing and stands ready to give them the money they need in order to comply with the spirit of the act and acquire a major portion of the commerce, I am myself content.

Mr. WOOD. The committee has always been disposed to do that, and we have stood by the Shipping Board sometimes when it was a pretty big job.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I will.

Mr. DAVIS. With respect to the observation of the gentleman from New York that Members of the House were criticizing the committee because they differed with them, I want to state that we are not criticizing the subcommittee. Some of us, however, have convictions and opinions on this subject, and we think we know something about this problem, and I respectfully submit that we are entitled to express our opinion without being charged with criticizing the committee. The committee is not infallible, and neither are we. The suggestion made by the gentleman from New York is wholly unjustified.

Another thing. It is admitted by the chairman of the subcommittee and others that this reduction of $1,400,000 from the Budget estimate submitted to the House by the President is predicated on a possible contingency. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana in all fairness if it is not rather unusual for an appropriation to be cut down on the possibility of some occurrence which if it does occur will warrant a reduction?

Mr. WOOD. If this was to be the end of the Congress of the United States and the Shipping Board was to continue without hope of relief otherwise, I think the gentleman's contention would be a good one; but it is the purpose of Congress, or ought to be, to save as much as possible without curtailing any activity that is worthy.

Four years ago we had the same question here. It was then announced on the floor that in the event the appropriation should prove insufficient a deficiency appropriation would be made. We are making that now. There is no disposition on the part of the subcommittee or the general committee to cripple the Shipping Board or the American merchant marine. I wish to commend the gentlemen who have been operating this board for their prudence in the reduction of expenditure, and it is through them we are able to make the retrenchment we are now making. It was said by some member of the Shipping Board that "We are making such excellent showing that we are afraid you won't give us anything."

Mr. DAVIS. I want to indorse what the gentleman says about the showing they have made. They are making a splendid record of increased efficiency, increased earnings, and at the same time reducing expenses. I think that in itself is sufficient warrant that they will not spend any more money than is required. The gentleman from Indiana himself knows that this is a tremendous proposition. They have to arrange the program, they have to make contracts; they can not operate such a tremendous enterprise on a month-to-month basis on the possibility that they may be able to come back and get a deficiency appropriation, especially in the face of the statute that prohibits an executive department from exceeding its appropriation.

Mr. WOOD. They will have more than ample money to carry them past and beyond the next Congress before the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made. There is no question but they will have money enough, and if worst comes to worst there is another Congress that can make additional appropriations.

There are two items here which in my opinion would have warranted us in making a $2,000,000 reduction.

Mr. DAVIS. But both of them are predicated upon contingencies. Suppose neither of the contingencies occur, and suppose in addition to that, as the gentleman from Alabama suggested and as has occurred on two different occasions, there should be a vast accumulation of wheat or cotton or other commodities for which they must furnish transportation.

Mr. WOOD. They have funds enough to take care of that; they have a construction fund of $80,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS. But that fund is not available for operation.

Mr. WOOD. It is available for private operators to supply the emergency that the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. DAVIS. They are only authorized to use that fund for making loans for ship construction and for Dieselizing ships. They are not authorized to make any character of reconditioning under the construction loan fund, except to Dieselize the Shipping Board vessels. Is not that correct?

Mr. WOOD. They can Dieselize; yes.

Mr. DAVIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. They are authorized to keep their ships in repair, but outside of Dieselization it can only be paid for out of the funds that we are annually appropriating for the operation of the ships.

Mr. WOOD. It is the opinion of the board that out of the funds they are deriving they can take a portion of it and even apply it to the reconditioning of the Mount Vernon and the Monticello.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I understand very clearly from the testimony of the Shipping Board before the gentleman's committee, that they have just the contrary opinion, that they could not do it. I venture the opinion that no one who is familiar with the construction loan fund, with its origin and with the changes that have been made in that construction loan fund, through legislation coming out of the Merchant Marine Committee, can have any such idle notion of the law as that.

Mr. DAVIS. And another thing—I appreciate the interest of the gentleman and I appreciate his desire to economize. I do not want one cent more appropriated than will probably be needed, but I ask the gentleman if he does not think that it places an improper pressure upon the Shipping Board to put them in the attitude that, before they will have a sufficient amount of funds on hand to continue their operations as they are now doing, they must sell some of their lines?

Mr. WOOD. Oh, no; the action of the committee was predicated upon the fact that they are going to sell some of the lines, and they ought to sell some of the lines.

Mr. DAVIS. I am familiar with that proposed sale, and I want to say that they are far from a sale, and I doubt very much whether it will be consummated. It has certainly not reached any meeting of minds of the parties yet, and I doubt very much whether it will.

Mr. WOOD. Suppose it does not. We will know whether it is going to be a sale or not before this Congress adjourns, will we not?

Mr. DAVIS. Probably so.

Mr. WOOD. Of course we will. The advertisements are made, and the time limit is fixed. If the emergency which the gentleman is talking about and fearing possibly may happen, or does happen, we will be here.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to ask the gentleman a question or two further, if he will permit.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr Chairman, before the gentleman leaves that will he permit a statement on that point?

Mr. DAVIS. As far as I am concerned, I will

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Referring to the decrease in the appropriation, I ask you if the Shipping Board did not evidence an earnest desire to secure the provision which would permit of the reconditioning of the Mount Vernon and the Monticello, and was not a very vivid picture painted to the committee that not only had the operating expense been cut down in the past, but that the operating expense is being cut down now, and that while they wanted provision made to secure $10,000,000 from this construction loan fund, they estimated it would require $2,000,000 additional to recondition these two vessels, and when we called their attention to that fact, they said they had the place where they thought they could get the additional $2,000,000. Is not that so?

Mr. WOOD. That is what they said.

Mr. DAVIS. That has no reference to the matter under discussion.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit, it would show that they were saving money in operating expenses and had been doing it and were doing it, and were in such condition that they could reach out and get $2,000,000 to add to the $10,000,000 that we were to provide.

Mr. DAVIS. I want some member of the committee to tell us where they indicated they could get it.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. As far as I was concerned, I was satisfied that they were in good faith when they made that statement. I thought they were going to save it in the operating expense.

Mr. WOOD. I think if the gentleman will read the hearings——

Mr. DAVIS. I have read them, but I do not remember any reference to that feature of it.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman does not mean to say that he does not see in the hearings where they said they could get the $2,000,000?

Mr. DAVIS. I am sure that I saw no reference to where they could save it, from operation or sale of vessels or elsewhere.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question in this connection?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. In order that the RECORD may be straight about the assurance of the chairman, it is my understanding that the chairman gives the Congress the assurance that in the event that this amount provided for the operation of the ships should prove insufficient a deficiency appropriation would be brought in to cover that deficiency, so that the Shipping Board and the Merchant Fleet Corporation will not have their activities and necessary duties interfered with, so that they can not be performed.

Mr. WOOD. I individually subscribe to that, and I think every member of the committee will subscribe to it.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want that particularly in the RECORD, because very frequently during the seasonal movement of crops in the United States, in the summer season, when the Congress is not in session, it falls upon me to strive to get additional ships for the movement of grain from the West which happens to go through ports of the Southwest and for cotton of the South. I have had a tremendous amount of difficulty from time to time. For instance, as the chairman knows, last year the British coal strike occurred—I mean in 1926—and it required putting into service an additional number of American ships by the Shipping Board to the extent of nearly 100. Without those ships we could not have moved the commerce of the United States to its destination, and it is a matter of great concern that they should have enough money on hand to provide for the reconditioning of and operation of these vessels. Therefore it is a matter of gratification to me to receive the assurance of the chairman.

Mr. WOOD. I would like to extend and insert as a part of my remarks a statement showing the lines operated and operating results:

Statement of revenues, expenses, and losses, by lines, excluding United States Lines and tankers, fiscal year 1927

No inactive vessel expense included.
There have been discussions relative to the possible sale of the American Merchant Lines, American West African Line, and the America-France Line.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?
Mr. WOOD. Yes.
Mr. DAVIS. Was any information given to the committee as to how much the interest will be under the new section (e)?
Mr. WOOD. It varies between $340,000 and $400,000.
Mr. DAVIS. In the next paragraph there is a reappropriation of any funds left over from the last time. Can the gentleman tell us what that amount was, if anything?
Mr. WOOD. Five million dollars.
Mr. DAVIS. And that will be available in addition to the $12,000,000?
Mr. WOOD. Yes.
Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?
Mr. WOOD. Yes.
Mr. WHITE of Maine. This interest that you are proposing to transfer to these funds now goes into the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury?
Mr. WOOD. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.
Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended one hour.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?
There was no objection.
Mr. WOOD. I want to call attention to a new paragraph recommended by the committee relating to the reconditioning of the steamships Mount Vernon and Monticello (formerly Agamemnon), which is as follows:

For the reconditioning of the steamships Mount Vernon and Monticello at a total cost not in excess of $12,000,000, not to exceed $10,000,000 is made available from the construction loan fund and shall be reimbursed to such fund with interest at such rate and within such period as the board may determine, but not exceeding 10 years after the date of commission of such reconditioned vessels.

These vessels have been very carefully surveyed, and the cost of complete reconditioning and installation of geared turbines and water-tube boilers, enabling them to maintain a speed of 20 knots is estimated at $12,000,000. The committee believes that if more than $10,000,000 is necessary, which sum is authorized by the paragraph just above set forth, it can be obtained from other funds at the disposition of the Fleet Corporation. Very careful estimates indicate that each vessel would earn approximately $400,000 per annum after reconditioning, and, in addition, would provide the United States Lines with a more balanced fleet, enabling the establishment of a weekly sailing service to European ports. A detailed statement relating to the costs of reconditioning, operating revenues, expenses, and characteristics of these vessels will be found on pages 699–710, inclusive, of the hearings.

Now, there is quite diversity of opinion as to whether or not these vessels should be reconditioned. When I came back from Europe I was firmly convinced that we ought to have two new vessels to round out our North Atlantic fleet. Apparently it is not possible to have two new vessels. Instead, it is suggested that we recondition these two vessels with the money indicated. Then they will be practically as good as new. You know they are German vessels, and everybody who has had to do with the examination of these vessels, that were taken from Germany, knows how superior they are. An objection is made to the reconditioning from the fact that if they are reconditioned they will be slow. But we have the statement of one of the best ship engineers in the United States that the speed will be practically from 22 to 23 knots per hour. These engineers are firmly of the opinion that if these two vessels are reconditioned we will have accomplished our purpose. Those who advocate the building of two new vessels base their statement upon the fact that two new vessels would last twice as long ordinarily as if these two older vessels were to be reconditioned. That may be true, or it may not. But assuming that it is true, it would cost twice as much to build these two new vessels as to recondition these two older ones. Then time is an important element in this matter. If we can recondition these two vessels, we can have them in operation within 15 months. To build new vessels would take at least 32 months, or nearly 3 years, and thus we would have lost operation for nearly two years, and that means a great deal in the maintenance and operation of our lines across the Atlantic.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?
Mr. WOOD. Yes.
Mr. DAVIS. Is it proposed to recondition these as first-class passenger ships, or as cabin ships?
Mr. WOOD. My understanding is that they are to be cabin ships. They are large vessels and serviceable vessels, and they will give us a sailing at least once a week from this side and from the other side as well. To my mind it will serve another purpose, too. Anybody going to Europe and going to these great capitals over there where all these competitive ocean lines have their offices will hear constant talking about the ships of the United States trading on the seas. Besides the investment, I think it is important to show our competitors on the other side that we are on the ocean to stay. I would like to have two new vessels; but feeling that we are not able to get them, the advisability of reconditioning the two ships named seems to be indicated, because they will fill in the breach, and in my opinion they will extend the possibilities of a sale of these North Atlantic lines to private ownership, because when these two vessels are completed we shall have rounded out a line of carrying vessels that will be complete. Without them it would be detrimental; and that would be taken into consideration by any one seeking to buy these lines.
Mr. DAVIS. Assuming that this authorization is to be made, does not the gentleman think there ought to be some safeguards thrown around them, as in what is known as the Dieselization act, to prevent these ships from being transferred to foreign registry or being sold at a ridiculously low price, such as has been true in other instances?
In other words, other ships have been reconditioned at large expense and then sold at a nominal percentage of the reconditioning cost. Does not the gentleman think that in view of the facts there ought to be some safeguards of that kind adopted?
Mr. WOOD. I believe the vessels should be reconditioned. But the understanding of the board is, and I think it ought to be, that in the event these vessels are reconditioned and a sale is made, the same rules should apply as those we made to apply with reference to the reconditioning of the Leviathan, namely, that the reconditioning cost should be met by the purchaser, less the wear and tear caused by the time of operation.
Mr. DAVIS. That might be the policy of the present board, but the present board may change, and some other board may come in and authorize the sale at a nominal price, or sell them to some one who will transfer them to a foreign register.
Mr. WOOD. I am in favor of adding such a provision as the gentleman states as a safeguard.
Mr. Chairman, during the general debate last evening when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] had the floor we entered a discussion relating to the reconditioning of two steamships, the Mount Vernon and the Monticello, and the estimated results of operations. Apparently we discussed this matter from different angles, and I desire at this time to make a statement for the RECORD which will make this matter clear.
It has been estimated that if these vessels are reconditioned and placed in operation each vessel will obtain a gross revenue of $3,927,903. Against this sum must be charged an operating expense, which includes voyage expenses, maintenance and repairs, advertising, and a proportionate share of the administrative cost, aggregating $2,649,093. This sum deducted from the gross revenues leaves a gross income of $1,278,809 per year.
This is the figure to which the gentleman from Kentucky referred, and is correct as far as it goes. However, there must be taken into consideration the fact that these vessels are to be reconditioned at a cost of $6,000,000 each. To ascertain, therefore, the net revenue of each vessel per year it is necessary to set aside certain sums for the amortization of the loan made for reconditioning and interest at 4½ per cent per annum.
To repay the loan of $6,000,000 on each vessel the sum of $600,000 must be set aside for a period of 10 years. Interest at 4½ per cent per annum on the reconditioning cost amounts to $270,000 per year. These two sums, aggregating $870,000, must be deducted from the gross revenues of $1,278,809 per year, and leaves the sum of $408,809 per annum as the net revenues from each of these vessels. This is the figure referred to in the report accompanying the bill, and the figure to which I referred yesterday during the debate with the gentleman from Kentucky. I hope that this explanation will enable the membership of the House to better understand the situation relating to the reconditioning of these two vessels.
Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WOOD. I yield.
Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. During the hearings, General Dalton impressed upon us the fact that the question of profit was not the correct word in their operation. He would always refer to the total revenue, and the operating expenses, and the difference between those two items was the earnings. There has been no policy in this Shipping Board to amortize the value or cost of a vessel, or to consider any interest charge upon the money invested.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it not a fact that the Shipping Board does prorate all of the Shipping Board's expense among the different ships and make them bear their part of all the salaries, and other expenses of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is handled as administrative expense, but there is no interest charge and no amortization charge in such expense.

Mr. DAVIS. Of course, that is true.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is the reason I took the position that it was a $2,550,000 profit. I was handling the profit in the terms defined by General Dalton, as there is no interest charge and no amortization in the other calculation of earnings.

Mr. DAVIS. As a matter of fact, the actual voyage losses of the nearly 300 Shipping Board vessels are now nominal, the so-called losses simply being represented by the personnel office expenses, and so forth, of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. These items with the commissions and brokerage fees offset the losses.

Mr. WOOD. I wish to take this opportunity, rather than to take the time to do it otherwise, of giving the membership some ideas I have and convictions I entertain with reference to the future of the merchant marine of the United States. I feel a very deep interest in this proposition and I know a very great many other Members do. I am at a loss to understand why a bill was introduced in another body which means the practical undoing of the present merchant marine act and means the establishment of Government ownership of our vessels, which, to my mind, absolutely destroys all possibility of a merchant marine that will be commensurate with the United States. I can not understand why such a thing has been done.

I have before me an editorial in the Post under date of January 19, 1928, which expresses very tersely and in a more forceful way than I can the attitude I occupy with reference to this proposition. I want to read it:

THE JONES SHIP BILL

It is surmised that the supporters of the Jones shipping bill, in pressing it forward in the Senate, are merely trying to impress upon the country the seriousness of the merchant-marine situation and do not expect the bill to pass. The vote by which the bill was made the unfinished business is by no means an indication that it is favored by the majority.

The cost of replacing the freight ships owned by the Government would be at least $250,000,000. This would entail an annual interest and depreciation charge of about $22,500,000, together with an operating loss of about $12,000,000, making an annual charge of about $35,000,000 upon the taxpayers. The result, aside from this steady drain upon the Treasury, would be the disappearance of privately owned American shipping in the foreign trade.

The coastwise merchant marine is adequate, capably handled, and most valuable for emergency defense purposes. It does not cost the United States Government anything.

No estimate of a subsidy for foreign-service vessels would cost the Government one-half as much as it would lose annually in interest and depreciation under the Jones Government-operation plan, not counting the loss under Government operation. It is absurd, therefore, to suppose that Congress will enact the Jones bill or that the President will approve it. The Commerce Committee of the Senate has done well to press the subject forward, but it could have saved time by preparing a bill that would have some hope of enactment and approval.

What the country wants is a merchant marine privately owned and operated, which will not be a drain upon the Treasury, but nevertheless under the jurisdiction of the Government in case of war emergency. Surely Congress should be able to draft a bill that would meet these requirements.

I feel that is expressive of the great popular sentiment of the United States. To my mind it is unthinkable that this Government of ours, the greatest upon the face of the earth, should not have a merchant marine commensurate with her importance. [Applause.] Countries are only made known to other countries by reason of their transportation facilities. Civilization has never been extended except through commerce. We may not need this agency for the purpose of civilization, but we do need it for the purpose of expanding our trade. [Applause.] How can we hope to expand for the increasing production of the United States except through an adequate agency? If we are to expand, it must be across the sea into some foreign land. What country is going to represent us and the best interests of our people in expanding that trade? Certainly England is not going to do it; Germany is not going to do it; Italy is not going to do it; and all of these powers are now bending all of their energies to capture the trade of the world. Therefore I say the people of the United States—every man, woman, and child—have a vital interest in the determination of this question. One out of every six persons in the United States is dependent for a livelihood upon foreign transportation. So this will give you some index of the importance of this proposition.

The trouble is we are not ship thinking. I have said repeatedly that if we thought one-tenth as much about ships as we do about automobiles there would not be any trouble in solving this proposition. But we have permitted our merchant marine to be frittered away. We have become used to seeing our transportation carried on by foreign countries. We have sat idly by from a time when we were carrying 89.9 per cent of all of our commerce in American bottoms down to a time when we were carrying only 8.7 per cent. Fortunately, we saw that rise until we were again carrying, in 1920, 42.7 per cent.

We are seeing it decline again, until we are to-day carrying but 32.2 per cent. If this decreasing percentage continues it will not take long to wipe us off the sea, and we will again be at the mercy of the maritime powers of Europe and of Asia to carry the trade of the United States. To my mind it is a strange and unthinkable condition, and the Congress of the United States is the only power which can prevent this tragedy from occurring. We have now, as we have never had before, a nucleus around which we can build a merchant marine that will be equal to meet this emergency. We have had frequent examples which should demonstrate to everyone the necessity of this thing. Before the war, if we wanted to ship something from the United States to South America, nine times out of ten we shipped upon an English, French, Italian, or German vessel. The vessel did not sail directly from a port in the United States to the destined port in South America, but it would go to the home port first and then to South America. The American shipper paid the freight and was only permitted to ship when there was space in the bottoms of these vessels and it did not interfere with the citizens of the country that owned the vessels.

During the coal strike that has been adverted to here two or three times, if it had not been for the laid-up ships of the United States that were put into commission there would have been untold millions of dollars lost to the American farmer, the wheat grower, the corn grower, the cotton grower, and the fruit grower.

If we are to permit this to occur again, with this rivalry that is going on between the maritime powers of the Old World and combinations they may make over which we have no control, we will again be subjected to whatever price they may dictate to carry the goods of the United States; and in case of war we will again see the beautiful spectacle we saw when the last great war broke out, when we were furnishing our boys by the thousands and millions, carried not upon our vessels, because we had no vessels to carry them, but carried by foreign vessels to fight battles in foreign lands; these vessels, not supported by convoys of ours, but by convoys of foreign countries.

We also witnessed another beautiful spectacle. When Japan was threatening war against this country and Theodore Roosevelt sent the fleet around the world, we did not have a collier to furnish them coal, and had to depend upon foreign vessels to furnish such coal. Do we want this to occur again?

I think the last great demonstration, which ought to prove convincing to every person in the United States of the necessity of an adequate merchant marine, was furnished by the Geneva convention.

England has 100 merchant marine vessels to-day that can be converted overnight into cruisers, each one of them armed with guns of considerable caliber. Therefore she was rightfully interested in seeing that nothing might interfere with the carrying out of her plan. The United States was wise not to enter into the intrigue that was fostered there, and we should profit by the experience thus gained and establish a merchant marine, which is always the strong right arm of the Navy, to support us if the occasion ever requires it.

We are spending $250,000,000 or $300,000,000 a year upon a Navy and in building new ships, and not 1 out of 100 will ever fire a shot at an enemy, and nine-tenths of these vessels will become obsolete and of no use before they have ever been fired upon.

Mr. ROMJUE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. I am very much interested in the discussion the gentleman is making, and I think one of the greatest benefactions that could come to this country would be a strong merchant marine. The newspaper article read just a moment ago seemed to make an appeal for a privately owned merchant marine, one that would not be a drain upon the Treasury. I am hoping the gentleman will explain how this may be possible. I hope it is possible, and I would be glad to see it brought about.

Mr. WOOD. I am going to explain as best I can the plan adopted which looks to that end in the future.

I want to say, in passing, I am encouraged through having been reliably informed that for the first time in more than 50 years a group of American citizens are prepared to invest a large amount of money in establishing a new ocean service across the Atlantic, provided some reasonable and long-term provisions are met. I understand that their plans do not depend on a subsidy and that the full details will be laid before the Shipping Board in a week or two.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Does that refer to passenger or freight service?

Mr. WOOD. I understand it refers to passenger and freight service.

The reason new shipping legislation is necessary at this time is that the merchant marine act of 1920—Jones Act—was never given full effect. Several of the most important features of that act have been suspended or nullified and it has failed of its declared purpose to establish a successful merchant marine by the transfer of the war-built merchant fleet to private hands. To realize the present problem, it is necessary to go back to 1920.

At that time the Government had on its hands a vast fleet of ships built to meet the emergency of the war and the building of which helped to win the war because it demonstrated that the United States was providing itself with the means to transport to Europe whatever number of troops was necessary to bring the war to a victorious close.

But after the war there was a world-wide commercial depression which produced a depression in shipping and it quickly became apparent that neither the United States Shipping Board, operating the vessels itself, as it did in the beginning, nor private shipping concerns could find occupation for their tonnage.

Congress deliberated long and carefully, and the result was the merchant marine act of 1920. In an unusually specific and broad enacting clause this act laid down a national shipping policy. It declared that the United States—> should have a merchant marine of the best equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater part of its commerce and to serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States.

The act declared:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine.

And the Shipping Board was enjoined "to keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be attained."

This was a big order and Congress sought not only to give the board wide discretion but it also recognized that a successful and going American merchant marine could not be created without some form or forms of practical assistance and advantage to offset the lower wage scales and lower operating costs of other shipping countries, many of which grant subsidies and most of which enjoy the advantages naturally arising from prior establishment and long experience in world trade. Congress looked around for means of employing our own American commerce in such a way that it would be aided by the American merchant marine and should, at the same time, contribute to the development of that merchant marine. It was recognized that if American exporters and importers could be drawn into a more general employment of American ships the development of an American merchant marine would be assured, but, first, it was necessary that as good service be provided under the American flag as under foreign flags. Without some encouragement American shipping interests would not buy the ships and the necessary capital for new lines would not be forthcoming.

The Jones Act, therefore, provided a number of expedients for indirect aid to American shipping. Section 21 provided for extension of coastwise trading laws to the Philippines. This was designed to restrict the carriage of merchandise between the Philippines and the United States to American vessels. Up to date this has not been done, and American vessels enjoy no advantage over foreign vessels in this trade between the United States and our most important insular possession. Section 28 provided that railroads might, under certain conditions, make a lower rate on freight destined for shipment in American vessels than that to be shipped through foreign vessels. This was intended to establish a preference for American vessels in the movement of American exports and imports. This section has never been given effect.

Thus we see that two of the major provisions for encouragement of American shipment are absolutely dead letters. There were, no doubt, some valid objections to both. That is not the point. The point is that this aid and encouragement deemed by Congress to be absolutely essential to the carrying out of the policy of transferring the ships to private hands for permanent operation in the interest of greater American commerce and national defense has been withheld. The problem now is to find other means of providing equivalent aid and encouragement. Valuable time, seven years of it, has been lost during which our competitors have been building new and better and more economical ships. They have been extending their routes, perfecting their connections for obtaining freight in competitive markets, and some of them have been doing it with capital borrowed in the United States.

Congress in 1920 not only realized that some aid and encouragement was necessary for the successful operation of the war-built vessels, which the board was directed to sell under suitable conditions, but it saw clearly that new, more modern, and more economical vessels must be built, and since the construction of such tonnage in American yards would cost far more than vessels built by our competitors in Europe and in the Orient, Congress sought to encourage new construction. A first-class merchant marine has never been built up without a healthy shipbuilding industry. In the golden age of American shipping, just before and just after the Civil War, it was Yankee shipbuilders as well as Yankee skippers who made it possible for 90 per cent of American commerce to be carried under the American flag.

Section 11 of the merchant marine act provides for the building up, out of money derived from sales and operations, of a construction loan fund to be used in loaning money at low rates of interest to American citizens desiring to construct new ships of the best and most efficient types. The purpose of this was to insure the new merchant marine being kept up to date. Unfortunately a subsequent enactment by Congress forbade loans to be made at less than 4¼ per cent, and this was so high that such a loan would represent very little saving to the prospective builder of a ship that it would not anywhere near offset the difference between construction costs abroad and here. So this provision has been practically a dead letter so far as bringing about the construction of new vessels for foreign trade by private shipowners.

It will be seen from the foregoing that while the merchant marine act had a powerful purpose, the mechanism whereby that purpose was to be translated into action has been largely paralyzed.

Another section of the merchant marine act of 1920 provided that the Shipping Board and the Postmaster General might make such contracts as seemed advisable for the carrying of the mails on American lines. Fortunately this provision has been carried out and a number of such contracts are in effect, but they are dependent on renewal from year to year, and upon the granting of the necessary funds by Congress from year to year. Shipowners never know when this encouragement may be withdrawn. They are unable to make their plans for the future with any assurance that the contract will be continued. In this respect we are even behind the conditions obtaining under the old ocean mail act of 1891, pursuant to which contracts for 10 years were entered into.

The United States long ago recognized the wisdom of encouraging construction of vessels of superior speed for the more rapid, regular, and frequent carriage of the mails. If this policy is to be effected it should be brought up to date and long-term contracts authorized.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to remind the gentleman that the 1891 act is still in effect, just as it has been all the time; and the reason the contracts are restricted to one year is because of the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WOOD. It is because of the controverted point as to whether or not they have the authority.

Mr. DAVIS. But the point is that the 1891 act which authorizes long contracts is the law now. It is not necessary to enact any new legislative provision.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will permit, that was carried into effect by contract and then those contracts were annulled by action of the Committee on Appropriations in the Post Office bill of last year.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. And, if the gentleman will yield further, contracts were not only contemplated by the 1891 act but the merchant marine act of 1920 reaffirmed the intention of the Congress that the Postmaster General might enter into contracts covering longer terms.

Mr. WOOD. The practice to-day is for one-year contracts.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. That came from the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WOOD. There is urgent need for legislation that will permit new construction in American shipyards which are almost destitute of work. American-built ships will cost anywhere from 40 to 60 per cent more than ships built in foreign yards. Congress sought to help out on this situation by permitting the loaning of funds at low rates of interest. The legislation now proposed in the Wood bill for the Government to assume the difference between foreign and domestic costs might well be described as a bill to make good what Congress held forth but did not fulfill in the Jones Merchant Marine Act of 1920. It is doubtful if there is a parallel in American history of a great measure like the merchant marine act of 1920 being largely nullified in administration. Pending legislation for long-term mail contracts we could do no more than to render effective the purpose of the American marine act.

The problem of the American merchant marine is not merely a problem of getting the Government out of the shipping business. Privately owned American shipping companies, which built tonnage at enormous prices during the war period, deserve some encouragement. They are up against a powerful form of competition and this competition is biding its time, and if the United States Government does nothing to support its shipping a formidable attack will sooner or later be launched against every American line. The American companies which have bought ships and services from the Shipping Board are in dire need of assistance. Their vessels are wearing out and are getting out of date. Their competitors have built, and are building, new, modern, and more economical vessels, the competition of which is disastrous.

At the present time we have a merchant marine act which makes a noble declaration, but the means of turning that declaration into reality is lacking.

We could never have developed this great country by pious resolutions. If we had merely declared that the public domain of the United States should be settled by hard-working American farmers, it never would have been settled. We had to give the settlers the land outright under the homestead act. We never could have built transcontinental railroads by simply resolving that they should be built. We built them by giving land grants. So it is with the problem of building up the American merchant marine.

Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to place before you a picture of our position in the maritime affairs of the world. I desire to call particular attention to our merchant marine activities and will dwell on the matter of naval tonnage only to the extent necessary to present to you the matter of our sea power.

Five years ago a naval disarmament conference was held in Washington, and since that time it is interesting to note the progress made by the participating nations, not only in the matter of naval construction but also merchant shipbuilding activities.

During the past five years there have been laid down or appropriated for and building a total of about 300 naval vessels, and of these Japan is credited with 101, France 96, Italy 46, the British Empire 37, and the United States with but 19.

Merchant vessels of 2,000 gross tons and over for transoceanic service contracted for, built or building, out of a total of about 1,000 ships the British Empire has 741, Italy 91, France 80, Japan 71, and the United States 18.

This is the picture of shipbuilding activities of the principal maritime nations since the United States agreed to the apparent desire for world naval disarmament.

During the past summer another disarmament conference was held in Geneva. Because the United States had nothing further to offer, no ships to dismantle, no construction work to cease, no further depletion of our national defense to appease the foreign nations participating, it resulted in a complete fiasco. And this in spite of the fact that England might have abandoned the further construction of additional cruisers, thus maintaining in greater degree the ratio agreed upon five years ago.

In determining any nation's sea power it is necessary to combine naval tonnage with that of the merchant navy to properly reflect naval strength; yet from the figures above quoted it is apparent that America is trailing far behind in the question of sea power. The United States is so far removed from the actual base of operations that even in a defensive war the protection of our island possessions and the Panama Canal would require an enormous fleet providing adequate transportation facilities.

During the World War the United States constructed a huge merchant fleet, not for the purpose of acquiring commercial supremacy but primarily to compensate for shipping losses incurred by submarine warfare and to assist in the ending of hostilities. This is evidenced by the noncompetitive types of ships that were authorized and constructed, and without fear of contradiction the United States embarked on that stupendous shipbuilding program for no other reason than that of meeting an existing emergency.

When we agreed to the terms of the Washington Arms Conference it was generally understood that our Navy would be of the equivalent strength of Great Britain. Now, after five years, we find ourselves considerably below the ratio agreed upon, and from the standpoint of sea power still further outranked. We have sacrificed world naval supremacy and world maritime commercial supremacy; and in addition, through private loans our former allies have obtained $12,000,000,000, no small portion of which is obviously being used in the upbuilding of European navies, as well as their merchant fleets, with which America must compete for world trade in time of peace and fight against in time of war.

That our private loans are being used for the construction of new ships is best evidenced by the circular which I have here, and which offers for sale to the American public 20-year gold bonds of the North German-Lloyd Co., of Bremen, in the sum of $20,000,000. These bonds were offered at 94 with accrued interest to date of delivery, to yield about 6.55 per cent to maturity. I should like to quote a portion of this proposal form, which reads in part as follows:

> Principal and interest payable in New York City at the option of the holder either at the office of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. or the principal office of the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, in United States gold coin of or equal to the present standard of weight and fineness and without deduction for any German taxes, present or future, in time of war as well as in time of peace and whether the holder be a citizen or resident of a friendly or a hostile State.

The proposal further states that "the proceeds of these bonds will be used for new construction and to repay indebtedness incurred for construction; and for other corporate purposes."

Last August I visited Bremen and while there discussed mercantile marine problems with the general director of the North German-Lloyd Co. Also I made it my duty to visit the shipyards of the Bohn & Voss Corporation, in which yards incidentally the Leviathan was constructed. On the ways in this one yard 12 ships were under construction, several of them designed as passenger vessels to be placed in the North Atlantic trade.

During the World War no American shipyard bustled with greater activity than this one yard in Germany. The roar of great forges, the clank of steel plates, the grunch of punching machines, and the whir of air hammers driving rivet after rivet, caused a profound feeling of helplessness to come over me, and I was thankful that yet there was time to rehabilitate our own shipyards, retain skilled personnel, and regain our prestige as a maritime nation.

And then, gentlemen, a month later I read in the papers that the Cramp Shipbuilding Co. of Philadelphia was forced out of business because of the lack of work, and this after almost 100 years of shipbuilding. Why, gentlemen, it was this company which constructed the first metal man-of-war for the United States, the old battleship Indiana.

The failure of this firm caused me to ascertain conditions relating to our principal shipyards, and unless new construction is undertaken at once, the precarious existence of our shipbuilding industry will forever be stilled by that never-failing Nemesis—bankruptcy!

In Italy, where huge government loans at very low rates of interest have encouraged the construction of new ships, I found yards working night and day. The Cosulich Co. at Monfalcone, Italy, was placing the finishing touches on a new motor ship to be used in trade between Italy and South America, and I do not exaggerate when I say that it was one of the most beautiful and ornate passenger ships I have ever seen.

And Great Britain has not been negligent in the matter of ship construction. Our delegates to the recent arms conference at Geneva will testify to that. I wish to call attention also to a loan of $7,500,000 floated in the United States by the Cunard Steamship Co. (Ltd.). Gold notes were issued to yield 5 per cent, and the purpose of the issue was to be applied to the general purpose of the company, chiefly the purchase of new assets or the reduction of amounts due in respect of ships delivered to the company.

Always do we find that the purpose of these loans is either to construct or to purchase new ships. In the offer of the Cunard Co. it is of exceedingly great interest to note that "The relations between the British Government and the Cunard Steamship Co. have always been close as is evidenced by the advance of 1905–1907 by the British Government, at 2¾ per cent, of £2,600,000 for the construction of the Mauretania and Lusitania. The British Government has a nominal interest in the stock of the company."

Who can say what the interest of the British Government is in this company, but, gentlemen, rest assured that it is sufficient to prevent the Cunard Co. from ever being driven off the seas.

I also have here a copy of an offer by the British Foreign & Colonial Corporation (Ltd.), placing upon the British market some $10,000,000 of cumulative preference shares to yield 6½ per cent per annum. This loan was floated by the White Star Line (Ltd.), and was largely oversubscribed.

Perhaps the lack of shipbuilding in the United States, or the intense activities of European countries, caused one of Great Britain's leading newspapers to refer to our merchant marine in the following manner:

> Our companies have long found it possible to do with the American merchant marine what the Admiralty are urged to do with the American Navy—dismiss it from their calculations!

Gentlemen, the time has come when we must embark upon a shipbuilding program. Our ships must not be driven from the seas! The merchant marine is not a political plaything, but is vital to the existence of every section of the country, and the welfare of every citizen!

I have introduced a bill to promote, encourage, and develop an American merchant marine in connection with the agricultural and industrial commerce of the United States, provide for the national defense, the transportation of foreign mails, the establishment of a merchant marine training school, and for other purposes. I do not claim it a panacea for all the ills affecting our merchant marine, but its enactment will do much to regain to the United States that maritime prestige we once so proudly claimed.

The first title of this bill relates to the Government-owned vessels we now have which were constructed or obtained during the war. Out of a total of 791 ships, aggregating 6,342,888 dead-weight tons, less than half, or but 306 vessels, aggregating 2,720,233 dead-weight tons, are actively engaged in the foreign trade. The remaining 485 inactive ships aggregate 3,622,655 dead-weight tons, and may be set out in three groups, as follows:

In the first reserve are 205 vessels of 1,662,253 dead-weight tons. These vessels are not immediately available for overseas service, but could be made so within a reasonable length of time at varying expenditures for repairs. In the second reserve are 151 vessels of 1,000,000 tons, which at a very considerable expense for repairs could be made available in an emergency. In the third reserve are 129 vessels of 960,402 dead-weight tons, which even to-day are considered surplus by the Shipping Board and fit only for the purpose of being scrapped.

As I have previously stated, the ships we now have were constructed during the war period, only too often without regard to economy of operation, speed, or possible subsequent use. And now, with newer and faster tonnage being thrown into this great mercantile-marine struggle by other nations, it will be but a few years when the ships now being operated will be unable to compete in world trade.

My bill provides that all vessels unnecessary for the maintenance of service on lines already established shall be removed from the registry of commercial tonnage. The very fact that these vessels were constructed as a war measure should preclude them from being classed as commercial ships to-day; and while they perhaps are capable of carrying cargo in time of a national emergency I do not think it advisable to place them upon the scrap heap. It is proposed in the bill that all vessels removed from the registry of commercial tonnage shall be maintained so long as practicable and economical to do so as vessels of the public service of a nonmerchant class. In this service they would be available for the transportation of commodities in time of need and yet would not reflect as a part of the competitive commercial vessels of the American merchant marine. It is provided, of course, that before any such vessel shall have its documentation canceled it shall be offered for sale, but in the event it remains unsold at the expiration of one year from the date of enactment it shall no longer be regarded as a vessel of the merchant marine of the United States.

Under paragraph (a) of section 1 of the bill we would have 306 vessels of 2,720,233 dead-weight tons. Under paragraph (b) 205 vessels of 1,662,253 dead-weight tons. And under paragraph (c) a total of 280 vessels aggregating 1,960,402 dead-weight tons. In other words, there would be 306 ships which might be sold in connection with lines of service already established and whose tonnage would not be removed from the registry books because it is engaged in foreign competitive trade. There would be 205 vessels offered for sale which might be repaired for possible use and which, if unsold at the expiration of one year after enactment of the bill, would be classed as the 280 vessels, aggregating 1,960,402 dead-weight tons, as surplus vessels, whose documentation would be canceled. With the Government-owned fleet classed in this manner it is possible to obtain a better understanding of our status in the maritime affairs of the world, and it is with no feeling of pride that I announce to you that we are a poor sixth in the number of vessels engaged in foreign commerce to-day.

The second title and principal feature of the bill I have introduced relates to the construction of new vessels. Before entering into an explanation of this feature of the bill I wish to direct your attention to world shipbuilding activities as they exist at the present time. The number of ships of 2,000 gross tons or over built or now under construction for transoceanic service from and including the year 1921 shows that for every ship of this class built in the United States, Great Britain has built 41, Germany 12, Italy 5, and France and Japan each approximately 4. Entirely aside from the number of ships being built it should be noted that all of this large number of foreign-built ships are of the latest types, equipped with up-to-date propulsive machinery, and in general of higher speed than vessels built before and during the war period.

The report of Lloyd's Register of Shipping for the quarter ending September 30, 1927, shows that there were 663 merchant vessels of 100 gross tons and over with a total of 3,074,057 gross tons under construction in the world at the close of the quarter. Of this tonnage about one-half was under construction in Great Britain. Germany was second, with 516,245 tons; Italy third, with 208,420 tons; Holland fourth, with 163,824 tons; France fifth, with 130,914 tons; Denmark sixth, with 96,150 tons; and the United States a poor seventh, with a total of 20 ships of 91,070 gross tons. I might add that for the year ending December 31, 1927, the United States has been reduced to the eighth place, one of the Scandinavian countries having passed us during the last quarter of the year.

Not only are foreign nations building more ships than are being constructed in the United States but they are enabled to build them much cheaper, because labor and living conditions are not comparable to those in the United States. In order to place before you the difficulties besetting American shipowners in so far as the operation of ships in the foreign trade is concerned it is first necessary to consider the differences in the costs of construction.

Fixed charges against capital invested aggregate 18 per cent per annum, as follows: Interest, 6 per cent; depreciation, 5 per cent; repairs, 2 per cent; and insurance, 5 per cent. Inasmuch as American construction costs exceed the construction costs in foreign countries, the fixed annual operating expenses will exceed the operating expenses of foreign vessels. In addition the higher American wage and subsistence expenses must be considered to accurately present the annual operating differential. There is presented herewith a summary of capital and operating differentials of typical American vessels compared with similar British vessels, and the figures given represent the annual average difference on a 20-year basis:

Type of vessel, freighter (coal):
American cost, 8,360 dead-weight tons, at $95 per dead-weight ton	$794,200
British cost, 8,360 dead-weight tons, at $57 per dead-weight ton	476,520
Capital differential	317,680
Average annual fixed charge on $317,680 higher cost of construction	48,446
Wage differential, $1,758.82 per month	21,107
Subsistence differential, $271.80 per month	3,262
Total per annum	72,815

The average annual differential of $72,815 represents 9.17 per cent of the amount American owner has invested in his vessel.

Type of vessel, freighter (oil):
American cost, 10,000 dead-weight tons, at $125 per dead-weight ton	$1,250,000
British cost, 10,000 dead-weight tons, at $80 per dead-weight ton	800,000
Capital differential	450,000
Average annual fixed charge on $450,000 higher cost of construction	68,625
Wage differential, $1,937 per month	12,444
Subsistence differential, $198 per month	2,376
Total per annum	83,445

The average annual differential of $83,445 represents 6.67 per cent of the amount American owner has invested in his vessel.

Type—freight and passenger (oil burner):
American cost, 11,900 gross tons	$3,375,000
British cost, 11,600 gross tons	2,250,000
Capital differential	1,125,000
Average annual fixed charge on $1,125,000 higher construction cost	171,562
Wage differential, $1,926.35 per month	23,116
Subsistence differential, $789.41 per month	9,473
Total per annum	204,151

The average annual differential of $204,151 represents 6.05 per cent of the amount American owner has invested in his vessel.

Type of vessel—tanker (Diesel):
American cost, 10,144 dead-weight tons, at $130 per dead-weight ton	$1,318,720
British cost, 10,144 dead-weight tons, at $86 per dead-weight ton	862,384
Capital differential	456,336
Average annual fixed charge on $456,336 higher construction cost	69,591
Wage differential, $1,444.30 per month	17,332
Subsistence differential, $300.60 per month	3,607
Total per annum	90,350

The average annual differential of $90,350 represents 6.85 per cent of the amount American owner has invested in his vessel.

From the above statement it is readily seen that American owners are handicapped in the operation of vessels in the foreign trade primarily by higher construction costs and, in addition, the wage and subsistence expenses. This increased capital charge, together with its corresponding increased fixed operating expense, points the way to render a substantial remedy for the major problem affecting the American merchant marine, and that is to extend to American owners and operators some means by which they may obtain a vessel at a cost equal to that of their closest competitor, which in this instance happens to be Great Britain, and the only feasible way to extend that aid is at the time of construction.

Title II of my bill provides that when the Shipping Board is furnished with copies of contracts entered into by an operator and shipbuilder, indicating they are ready to proceed upon the construction of a new vessel, the board shall enter into contracts with each of the parties, receiving from the operator a guaranty that the newly constructed vessel will be maintained in a stipulated service for a term of not less than 10 years. It may be that this stipulation should provide that the newly constructed vessel shall be maintained in the foreign trade only, as distinguished from the use of the vessel in a specified line of service, but that is a matter for the proper committee to decide.

But whether this new vessel is to be operated on a given line or merely in the foreign service, this guaranty is the requirement of the Government for the interest it shall have in the vessel, which is to be provided in the contract with the shipbuilder, whereby the Government undertakes to pay for the costs of labor and material only, which may be in excess of the costs for like items entering into the construction cost of a similar ship in foreign countries. In other words, the Government is willing to undertake a portion of the costs of construction in return for a guaranteed service for a term of years. A recapture provision will enable the Government to resell or operate until a satisfactory resale can be made of any vessel in default.

Under this proposal the cost to the Government is ascertainable at once, and the total cost in any one year will be much less than is being expended at the present time under governmental operation of the merchant marine. To illustrate the manner in which the financing scheme contained in my bill would aid the private owner and operator, I wish to make the following comment: Let us take a vessel which costs $1,000,000 in the United States. This same vessel would cost but $600,000 in Great Britain. In order to provide the capital for the construction of such a ship, loans would have to be made in each instance, and when the entire cost is ascertained, taking into consideration that portion of the cost to be borne by the Government, the vessel would cost the American owner approximately $720,000. The exact amount would depend on the rate of interest the owner would have to pay, and if the money were borrowed from the Government at 2 per cent, as provided in my bill, the actual cost would be $717,000. The cost of a similar vessel to a British owner would be substantially the same, although his interest rates might be in excess of those charged under the terms of my bill.

The statement I prepared detailing capital and operating differentials clearly shows the need for constructive legislation in such form as will enable American owners to obtain vessels at a cost comparable with the cost of such vessels to foreign operators. My bill offers an indirect form of protection to those engaged in the world-wide competition for foreign commerce, and it is only just that this aid and protection be extended to our shipowners.

The major portion of our agriculture and industry is protected against the competition of commodities originating in foreign countries. The merchant vessels engaged in the coastwise trade are also protected against foreign competition, and yet at the present time our only means of transportation by which our products are placed in the markets of the world is compelled to compete in a ruthless commercial struggle for existence, handicapped primarily by higher construction costs, maintenance and operation expenses, and without any aid or protection from the Government. If we are to have a merchant marine, privately owned and operated, the time has come when we must afford to the American shipowner the protection now extended to our industries, enabling them to begin operations in a highly competitive field with equalized capital charges. The entire effect of my bill is to place vessels engaged in foreign trade in the same category with vessels operated in our protected coastwise service.

The third proposal contained in my bill relates to the establishment of a merchant-marine training school, providing for appointments from every section of the United States, a prescribed course of training with compensation, and the establishment of a retirement fund, thus assuring an annuity to any young man who desires to follow the sea. Graduates of this school would be qualified and induced to stay in the merchant marine, making it their career, not unlike the graduates of the Naval Academy. It is further provided that upon graduation and assignment to a vessel in the merchant service the training-school graduate shall become a member of the Naval Reserve, with a rating similar to that held in the merchant service. In this connection I may add very properly that through reliable sources information has reached me to the effect that the Navy Department is now engaged in the preparation of a plan the purpose of which is to augment the Naval Reserve, the men enlisted therein to serve in the merchant-marine service. It is admitted by everyone familiar with marine activities that trained personnel is a great and immediate essential, and regardless of the manner in which this personnel is trained, it is a primary asset in our national defense.

To-day we find our shipyards have fallen into decay, skilled personnel trained and experienced in shipbuilding has already undertaken new lines of endeavor. The time has come when we must embark upon a mercantile-marine program that will establish this country in the eyes of the world. We must have ships for our foreign trade, and they must be American ships, constructed with American products and American labor. The prompt enactment of a bill to this end is imperative. We would be derelict in our duty if we failed to provide for our merchant marine. The establishment and maintenance of a sea power adequate to provide for our national defense and an uninterrupted transportation service for our commerce is our greatest heritage to posterity. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TILSON having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was presented to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I hope that the members of the Committee of the Whole House will be patient with the Members who live in the Mississippi Valley and who will probably for many days to come sing songs of sorrow and lament about the catastrophe through which we have just passed. These calamities soften and subdue the people, and as one man said beautifully brings them nearer my God to Thee.

Probably there has been no parallel in modern history of the golgotha, the crucifixion, which the people of the Mississippi Valley during 1927 underwent. But the people of that section apparently have become used to trial and misfortune and calamity, at least the people in the lower reaches of the Mississippi River.

The people of the State in which I was born and reared have been bowed down by many griefs for almost three-quarters of a century. Of course, it is a matter of history that the city of New Orleans bowed to the conquerer's yoke and suffered the fate of every conquered city during the Civil War.

After that came these tremendous breaks in the banks of the Mississippi River above the city which cut us off from the balance of the country and the trade which sustains a great port like the city of New Orleans.

Then came the yellow fever and apparently all was lost but honor. It looked for a time as if the people of that section of the country might well sing the mournful refrain "Une autre patrie" of, I believe, L'Africaine, or is it La Juive which, substantially is "In another country we will seek fortunes brighter and better than under this sky where we have suffered so long."

But people like the people who live in the valley largely made up of Anglo-Saxon, Gallic, and Celtic races are not easily driven from home. They cling to it with affection that calls for the admiration of sages and poets. Year after year they have gone back, after having been driven from behind them, to the levees of the Mississippi, tilled the soil, and have endeavored to promote the welfare of their country. But there comes a time when misfortune bears so heavily on the people that they are compelled to admit that they are not only on their knees but prostrate.

Such a time has arrived in the history of the lower reaches of the Mississippi River. We in Louisiana have uncomplainingly borne the tremendous burden imposed on us by 31 States of the Mississippi Valley that sent down their torrents upon us annually. Not a drop of water that falls from the clouds in Louisiana runs into the Mississippi River. It seeks the Gulf in other directions. We are compelled to bear what some people are pleased to call in legalistic language a servitude. We are empoelled to take care of the water that flows upon us from 31 great Commonwealths of this Nation. We are compelled to go down into the pockets of our people who are none too well off agriculturally and otherwise and carry and bear and support the terrific burden of a levee system made necessary by the fact that you have developed your country to such an extent that the natural servitude has become a most burdensome one.

We do not complain bitterly because we feel that when the country recognizes the truth of it the country will relieve us. "Ye shall know of the truth and truth will make you free" is peculiarly applicable to the American people.

I have no doubt about the correctness of the legal proposition. If it be true that the interstate commerce clause was the main factor that brought the Union into existence—and I have heard the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] expatiate upon that not only eloquently but intellectually and convincingly—if it be true that the interstate commerce clause was the main determining factor that brought the Union into existence, then inevitably waterways fall exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government for this reason. The only instrumentalities of trade at the time of the adoption of the Constitution were the waterways and the water craft that floated over them and here and there a few stage coaches. Consequently, the makers of the Constitution must have intended that the arteries of commerce such as the rivers would fall, in order to carry out the purposes of the Union, exclusively under the control of the Federal Government, and as a corollary of that proposition it is inescapable that the control of these waters, so as to prevent inundation and overflowing and suffering to the people living contiguous to the banks of the rivers, constituted an obligation inseparably associated with the power that the Federal Government enjoys.

Mr. Chairman, if that power be exclusive, how can Congress divide that jurisdiction and impose it, in effect, upon the States by requiring from them a contribution to maintain the levee system, which the Federal Government under its exclusiveness should still control and operate exclusively?

I do not see how there is any escape from that legal proposition. You can not side-step it without admitting that exclusiveness from the interstate-commerce standpoint is merely a phrase which does not carry the significance that the words ought to carry.

Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the majority of the Members of this Congress will require a flood control bill that will be supported and fortified by some engineering commendation, and I would not expect them to do otherwise. Although I was born and reared behind the banks of the Mississippi River, and know as well as anybody who has ever lived along its banks its romance, and its story, and its song, I would not expect Congress to adopt a bill that I would bring in, which would, in its lack of engineering features and facts, make it an almost worthless document. I hope that the Committee on Flood Control will bring in a confection of its own, a committee bill that will meet with the support of those of the Mississippi Valley, and have the sympathy of those who live on the eastern slope of the Alleghenies and the western slope of the Rockies, and put through a bill that will give us that protection which will insure the investment of capital in the Mississippi Valley, and make it the great part of the United States that it ought to be.

I would not want New Orleans to be misunderstood in this matter. Cities, like individuals, are the victims of their environment. We can not escape that environment, it operates upon us from our birth. In order to obviate and to dissipate any thought that New Orleans is selfishly looking after its own interests, although it would have a right to ask protection for a people that number over 450,000, with a wealth of more than a billion dollars, and whose people have suffered so long that it is customary among other people to say that the day should be brighter the night has been so long and so dark, and that the night was so long the day following ought to be beautiful, hopeful, and inspirational. Let me make this statement:

New Orleans is not satisfied altogether with the bills that have been introduced and the engineering reports made thereon, not because she is asking for anything that might be much of an improvement on those reports but largely because the people above us are not satisfied. We are bone of their bone, blood of their blood, sinew of their sinew, and flesh of their flesh, and our cry has been always, "Whither thou goest we will go; your friends are our friends," altering to fit this occasion Ruth to Naomi; but heart to heart, heel to heel, and shoulder to shoulder we want to march with the people among whom we have lived and suffered, and among whom we hope we will triumph. We are one with them. Any bill that will satisfy the people above us will satisfy us; but I hold with a conviction that can not be changed and which can not be side-stepped that the Federal Government, in view of the history of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, can not without subjecting itself to the thought of looking for pennies ask the States bordering on the Mississippi River to accept a jurisdiction that is not theirs merely to get from those States contributions in money to support a levee system that ought to be legally and financially supported by the Federal Government. I assert that with all the strength of a conviction. We did not raise that question while the goal was ours. We knew that we were on safe ground, that fundamentally we were correct in assuming that it was a national responsibility, but in order not to appear in a light that might not be understood by our countrymen we were willing to make contributions that we were not legally obligated to make. We "came across," to use an Americanism, but we can not do it any longer, and now in view of the past we hope that the people of this country will recognize the justice of our cause and will help that cause to triumph. I have not the slightest doubt if a bill comes out on which the committee will unite and that bill runs parallel to engineering recommendations in the main that this Congress will stand with the committee if the committee will stand for no contributions from the afflicted States of the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I could add anything to what I have said more than to repeat myself if I continued to talk here until doomsday. What I wished to do was to get the inescapable logic, the inexorable legal position of the people of the valley to the Members of this House, because I have never doubted their sense of justice, and I do know the veneration of the men on both sides of the aisle for the Constitution and the laws of the country. [Applause.] But let me say a few words in regard to a subject which prompted me to ask for the floor. It is a glance into the near future.

Cagliostro performed this trick with his decanter of water which reflected under his magic touch and the power of his weird incantations the tragedies and the triumphs of the coming years. Under the spell and influence of the wand waved by a statistician and economist friend I can envision a new order, a development, a prosperity, that will be headlined:

A NEW KIND OF PEACE LEAGUE

A wise Uncle Sam will look far beyond the near horizon and he will see—

The southern Republics, the world's markets of greatest promise now, drawing surplus peoples from overcrowded Europe, clearing forest lands and cultivating them, opening mines, building roads and new towns, drawing in the finished articles of commerce and sending out raw materials and foodstuffs, requiring capital, developers, skilled men, and looking to the remainder of the world for the many things a new region rich in resources requires.

Turning his eyes homeward, he will see—

Surplus gold, abundant enterprise, business genius aplenty, but waning natural resources.

And if he be really wise he will sense a new and larger opportunity in Latin-American requirements and his own ability to serve, and set about placing his house in order to take advantage of the new era that has dawned.

First, he will turn his attention to the great central region, the Mississippi Valley, and put an end to the waste and ruin and delayed development by controlling the floods.

Next, he will set about making those waters serve his people well.

Finally, he will, through improved navigation, low-cost power, checked-soil erosion, irrigation, and safety from floods, encourage the development of industries for the use of Latin America's raw products. In this way, through an improved economic environment he will promote the development of an ever-growing buying power, both at home and in the world's new markets of greatest promise.

But Mexico, Central and South America are rather European in their tastes and reactions. What can Uncle Sam do to open the way for a clearer understanding between the peoples of all the New World countries and for the development of friendships based on confidence and good will?

One thing he can do is to open the door to the same kind of free-will intercourse that exists between his own States and cities.

In the interest of New World comity and good will he can build and present, as an evidence of his friendship, a hard-surfaced highway from Canada, through the United States, to Mexico, Central and South America, giving each and every country in the New World automobile access to every other country. Intercourse would then develop rapidly. American capital would soon build wonderful resort hotels in the mountains to the southward. Contacts would develop confidence. Within a generation the people of Argentina, of Costa Rica, of Mexico, and of the United States would understand each other just about as well as the people of Iowa and of Louisiana now understand each other.

Lindbergh has won the hearts of all Latin America, has wiped out a lot of misunderstanding, and has paved the way for Pan American comity and good will. When he returns he will have, at least in his mind's eye, a map of Pan American air-mail routes. A few millions annually voted by the United States Congress for such a service would help mightily.

Subsidized steamship lines between the United States and southern ports would in the end pay large dividends, directly and indirectly.

The gift of a thousand scholarships in United States colleges and universities to deserving young men and women in the several southern Republics would, in terms of New World comity, be worth many times the annual million dollars it would cost the Federal Treasury.

Uncle Sam could do no better with his surplus wealth than to use some of it to improve the economic position of his own people and to enable his natural friends and fellow Americans to the southward to develop their own economic opportunities.

By all means let us urge Uncle Sam to look beyond the near horizon and find there a new inspiration and a new goal.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and colleagues of the House, I wish to express my appreciation of the splendid and forward-looking program of Chairman WOOD for the building and maintenance of a merchant marine. I wish to congratulate the Democrats of the House on their selection of my colleague from Kentucky, Hon. FRED VINSON, as a Democratic member of this subcommittee. He is able, honest, and courteous, and will render most efficient service as a member of the committee.

Much has been said on the floor of the House and a number of measures voted looking to the relief of agriculture. The income on investments in agriculture and the wages paid to those who labor in agriculture are entirely too small and are not comparable to the income and wages received on investments and for those who labor in many other industries. I have never failed to speak and vote for those measures intended to promote the welfare of the American farmers. No great industry in this country can suffer without its ill effects being reflected in every other industry. If agriculture is prosperous, it brings prosperity to other industries; and on the other hand, if agriculture is depressed, this depression reflects itself in other trades and callings. But with all the distress of agriculture there is another great industry in this country that has been and is now in deeper distress than agriculture, and that is the soft-coal industry.

The soft-coal industry is suffering because of an oversupply or surplus. There are too many mines and too many miners, just as there are too many farms and too many farmers.

We have a large surplus of soft coal, as well as a large surplus of farm products. We are producing more farm products and more soft coal than our country can consume. We produce and consume annually in this country more than 500,000,000 tons of coal. About 60,000,000 tons of soft coal are produced in the State of Kentucky annually. We have been trying to take care of the surplus production in agriculture, but we have made no effort to take care of the surplus of the soft coal-mining industry.

We produce more than twice as much coal as Great Britain, yet Great Britain ships to other countries about 20 times as much as the United States ships to other countries.

We must increase our overseas markets. With proper shipping facilities, we should ship to the following countries as well as others the coal required by them:

	Tons
Azores	30,000
Madeira	50,000
Canaries	485,000
Italy	12,000,000
Serb-Croat-Slovene	160,000
Greece	650,000
Rumania	40,000
Turkey	150,000
Malta	225,000
Palestine, etc	50,000
Egypt	2,000,000
Tunis	200,000
Algeria	1,200,000
Morocco	100,000
French West Africa	100,000
Spanish and French Mediterranean ports	2,000,000
Brazil	2,000,000
Argentina	3,250,000
Uruguay	500,000

Our average exports of coal overseas for the years of 1922–1925 were 3,278,788 tons. The average export of coal per year from Great Britain for the same period was 64,031,000 tons. On account of the coal strike in Great Britain in 1926–27, we shipped overseas 19,320,022 tons, and for that same year Great Britain shipped overseas 20,596,000 tons. But this large tonnage of American coal in 1926–27 was not carried in American vessels. During the fiscal year of 1922 we sent overseas in American vessels 228,670 gross tons of coal. This dropped to 30,352 tons in 1923 and jumped to 80,034 tons in 1924, and dropped to 16,440 tons in 1926, and in April, 1927, only 105 tons of coke and coal were sent overseas in American vessels. We can readily see that, so far as the shipping of coal overseas is concerned, the American Shipping Board vessels have been either driven or taken out of the business. In fact, there appears to be none of our American vessels engaged in carrying American coal to foreign ports.

AMERICAN COAL AND COKE DISCRIMINATED AGAINST

During the World War and just following the war the United States Government constructed a great fleet of vessels to aid in the prosecution of the war and to be used in our merchant-marine activities following the war. Since the war several hundreds of the vessels have been operated in the merchant-marine service by the Government or under contract with others. Nearly 500 of these ships are now idle and have been idle since their construction. These vessels, all told, cost the United States Government something like $3,000,000,000. These vessels in operation have been carrying cotton, lumber, petroleum, grain, flour, and many other American products, but very little coal.

The following is a list of products and the number of tons carried in United States Shipping Board vessels for the month of April, 1927, according to the United States Shipping Board reports:

	Tons
Coal and coke	105
Vehicles	10,116
Vegetables	24,112
Phosphates	30,715
Cotton, raw	55,001
Petroleum, etc	74,550
Lumber	93,198
Grain and flour	163,273
All other exports	69,930

It will be seen that 521,000 tons were carried in United States Shipping Board vessels for the month of April, 1927, but only 105 tons of coal and coke. It is admitted that the United States Shipping Board loses money on every ton of American products shipped in these vessels, but there is no good reason why coal and coke should be discriminated against. The Department of Commerce spends large sums every year in finding new markets and in making new friends for American products. They have found the new markets for American coal, and it has been demonstrated that American coal is preferred to the British coal. It is of higher quality.

$1,000,000 FOR COAL SHIPS

When this bill is read for amendments, I shall offer an amendment striking out $12,000,000 on page 34 and line 15, and insert $13,000,000. This $1,000,000 is to be used to recondition at least 10 of our idle ships and pay whatever loss may be sustained in the operation of these 10 ships during the next fiscal year in the transportation of American coal overseas. I am advised by Mr. O'Connor, chairman of the United States Shipping Board, it will cost about $200,000 to put these 10 ships in condition, and the balance of $800,000 will take care of the loss in operation. This will start a fleet of 10 ships carrying about 8,000 tons per ship, and they will be able to transport something like a half a million tons of coal the first year. We are satisfied that this venture will prove to be so successful and such a splendid and growing coal trade will be built up overseas that many more of our idle ships will be reconditioned and placed into this service. Many Central and South American countries, as well as many sections of Europe and countries of Asia and Africa bordering on the Mediterranean Sea, desire American coal. I want to see American merchant marine enlarged in handling corn, wheat, cotton, and other American products, but at the same time I desire to see the trade developed for American coal and coke.

REDUCE RAILROAD RATES AND SHIPS

American coal can successfully compete in the overseas trade with British coal. As a matter of miles, American ports are almost as near to these overseas markets as are the English ports. While American miners, on the average, receive nearly three times as much pay as British miners, yet because of other conditions it costs on the average $1.50 more on the ton to produce coal in Great Britain than it does in the United States. With American machinery a ship can be loaded with coal in one-fifth of the time it requires to load coal in the British ports.

America has the best coal and the cost of production is at least $1.50 per ton less than the cost per ton in Great Britain. Why is it that Great Britain, producing less than one-half as much coal as our own country, sells twenty times as much coal overseas as we do? She overcomes this additional cost of production in railroad rates and in overseas shipping facilities. The freight on British coal from British mines to British ports in Great Britain ranges from about 60 cents to 75 cents per ton. The railroad rate on coal from the mines nearest to our Atlantic coast shipping ports is about $2.50 per ton. We have special railroad rates on many commodities whereby we ship these commodities from eastern and central United States to the Pacific coast ports at such rates as enables us to compete in the markets with like commodities in the markets of the Orient (China and Japan, and so forth). Why should not American coal have a preferential rate to the Atlantic coast ports to enable American coal to compete with British coal in the overseas markets? I am sure that plans can be worked out that will be just and profitable both to the producers of American coal and the railroads. The next step in aiding American coal to compete with British coal would be to build up a fleet of American Shipping Board ships with such rates as would put us on an equal basis in the markets overseas with British coal. American coal must have an outlet. There is no other way to relieve this great industry. It has been discriminated against, and we are now asking for it the same consideration accorded to the products of forest, field, and factory.

AMERICA MUST HAVE MERCHANT MARINE

Our population now is about 120,000,000, and our national wealth is about $350,000,000,000. Until the nations of the earth reach an agreement for the substantial reduction of armaments—and I strongly favor this policy—our Navy should be second to none.

Nothing, however, could add more to our prosperity and at the same time strengthen our Navy, both in peace time and in war, than a merchant marine in keeping with the population and wealth of this country. We are producing a surplus of products from our mines, fields, forests, and factories. The world wants and actually needs all that we can produce. Our people must have a market. We can not expect Great Britain, France, Italy, Germany, or Japan to carry American products that they themselves are producing to these markets. Their first concern is to carry the products of their own country. We must either build up a great merchant marine of our own or suffer for our short-sighted policy. I am anxious to see American products carried on American ships, flying the American flag, on each and all of the seven seas, and to all the ports of the world. This will make us friends and bring prosperity to our people.

I realize that this will cost some money. We passed the American merchant marine act in 1920 and did lose considerable money in competing with the ships of other countries, while in 1924 it cost the Government $41,000,000, but in 1927 with a large number of additional ships put into service the loss is $16,000,000, and this bill for the year of 1929 contemplates a loss of only $12,000,000, but the Shipping Board has asked for $13,400,000, and this request has been approved by the Director of the Budget, and we would do well to allow the Shipping Board this sum. What American desires to see the American flag driven from the seas and to have American producers to depend upon the ships of other countries to carry our products to the markets? Unless we are willing to give proper support to our merchant marine, this will be our unhappy lot, Hon. T. V. O'Connor, chairman of the Shipping Board, in a statement to me indorsed the proposition of this additional million to recondition 10 of our idle ships and put them into the coal-carrying trade.

The Consolidation Coal Co. representative advises me that his company has orders for thousands of tons of coal for overseas shipment, but they have been unable to secure any ships. He and other representatives of the producers of coal advise that the Shipping Board has no ships to handle this coal, and they are unable to have it carried in English ships because the English do not desire to carry American coal in competition with the coal produced in their own country.

During the British coal strike last year there was a great demand for American coal, and while we shipped nearly 20,000,000 tons overseas, only a very few tons were carried in American vessels. The demand for the coal was so great that it greatly increased the shipping rates, and foreign ships were attracted to our shores to carry this coal overseas. This so limited the shipping space for corn, wheat, cotton, and so forth, it threatened a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to American producers of these products. The United States Shipping Board promptly reconditioned about 100 of our idle ships to carry our cotton, corn, and other products overseas at a rate that netted a loss to the United States, while foreign ships carried our coal at rates ranging as high as $9 and $10 per ton. If we had our own coal ships, we could compete with English ships with a rate around $2.50 per ton. British ships receive on an average near about this rate. We are assured that American coal producers will provide the markets and coal for all ships that may be offered by the United States Government for that service.

We have been spending about $300,000,000 annually for the American Navy, and the Secretary of the Navy has submitted a naval program involving about three billions of dollars. I think it would be wise for us to limit our program for battleships and other war craft and increase our expenditures for ships to carry American products to the markets of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, this bill is known as the independent offices' appropriation bill, 1929.

It makes appropriations for various boards and commissions, including the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Civil Service Commission, the Tariff Commission, and others, all expected to be filled by men of high character and great intellectual attainments so that their findings and decisions will command the confidence of the entire country.

All of these commissions are presumed to act in a quasi-judicial capacity with no partisan bias or prejudice to influence their findings and conclusions.

The flexible provision of the tariff act was enacted to remove the tariff from partisan consideration, but its adminstration has been disappointing and condemns it in public confidence.

The disclosures of Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, as shown by reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 16 and 23, 1926, contains the strongest and most conclusive indictment, and, I may add, conviction of the prostitution of the Tariff Commission to serve selfish interests that I have ever read.

This speech should be reread and studied by every thoughtful citizen of the Nation. This speech is the most withering exposure of how the administration of governmental affairs is manipulated on behalf of the selfish interests of the country that I have ever read. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 67, pt. 2, p. 2187, and vol. 67, pt. 3, p. 2630.)

There were six members of the Tariff Commission. On January 15, 1924, the commission began hearings on the sugar schedule. The speech of Senator NORRIS details the efforts made, first, to influence the decision of the commission, and failing in that to delay the finding until after the presidential election.

I commend the rereading of that speech to every Member of Congress and the people of the entire country.

David Lewis, a former Member of Congress, was a member of the Tariff Commission. His term was to expire in September, 1924. That was just before the presidential election. To give a semblance of fairness and liberality toward the tariff question he was, through another member of the commission, tendered reappointment by the President conditioned that he would sign in blank a resignation to be placed in the President's hands to be held over Lewis's head and to be accepted at the President's pleasure.

Lewis refused to sign such a resignation but was commissioned until after the November, 1924, election. Although conceded to be a man of great industry, high character, and splendid ability, his name was withheld and not sent to the Senate for confirmation.

Another member of the commission, Mr. Culbertson, who held views favorable to reducing the duty on sugar and against the sugar interests was given a diplomatic position to Rumania.

A third member of the commission, Mr. Glassie, insisted upon voting on the investigation of the sugar schedule, although it was conclusively shown and admitted that his family held $200,000 worth of stock in a sugar corporation, which would be directly affected by his vote. Finally, an outraged Congress, by an amendment, compelled him to disqualify. When the question of the propriety of his participating in the investigation of the sugar schedule was challenged, he insisted upon voting in favor of his own qualifications.

When every pressure failed to longer delay the report of the commission on sugar on July 31, 1924, it recommended a reduction from 2.20 to 1.54 per pound in the duty on sugar, with a differential of 20 per cent in favor of Cuban sugar, or a reduction from 1.76 per pound on Cuban sugar to 1.236 per pound, or approximately one-half cent per pound. Minority and supplemental reports were made August 1, November 14, and November 17, 1924.

No action was taken by the President, but it was held up by the sugar interests until after the election, and finally pronouncements came from a representative of the President on June 15, 1925, that no action would be taken, which permitted the old rate to stand. The sugar interests triumphed and as a result an additional duty of one-half cent per pound was placed upon the breakfast table of every consumer throughout the country.

Appreciating that the Tariff Commission has lost its usefulness and the confidence of the country, I think the appropriation of $754,000 for this commission should be eliminated.

When we are assured that men of high character, who are permitted to act and make judicial findings, will be appointed to the commission, as was the original intention when the commission was created, appropriations can be renewed.

To show the sentiment of my State and district on the Tariff Commission I quote from two editorials. The first is from the Muskogee Phoenix, an independent newspaper, which in a recent editorial makes the following comment:

A FIFTH WHEEL

Theoretically, there is scarcely a body that should be of more public utility than a tariff commission. The contention of the advocates of protection is that tariff duties should be just enough to equalize the cost of production here and in the country against which the tariff is levied. If they are greater than this they form a barrier behind which monopoly shelters and abuses grow up. If they are greatly less they can scarcely be called protective at all. To reach this reasonable middle ground has always been the professed desire of all but the extreme protectionists.

It seems strange that with all the equities in its favor the Tariff Commission was not born until comparatively recently. Although President Taft and other friends of the tariff had pointed out that justice must be its aim, it was only with exceeding difficulty that the commission was induced to make those studies which should tell just what ought to be the duty on a given commodity as between two countries. Years were spent in dreary and fruitless hearings. Endless reports were printed, which were full of admirable general principles. But in a practical sense the country got nowhere. The Tariff Commission has been nothing but a fifth wheel to the tariff-makers' coach. There has never been a moment when it might not have been abolished without anybody's knowing the difference. It is going to be under heavy fire this winter and we do not know where its defenders will come from.

This failure of what should be one of the most useful advisory bodies in the country is not due to the empty incompetence of its members, for among them have been many able and public-spirited men. It belongs with the worse than failure that attends all governmental activities which unite the political and the economic function. The Tariff Commission is such a noxious hybrid. Absolute independence of political influence is the only thing that could save it.—The Phoenix.

Attention is invited to the last two sentences in the closing paragraph:

The Tariff Commission is such a noxious hybrid. Absolute independence of political influence is the only thing that could save it.

The editor of this paper evidently had in mind the exposures of the Senator from Nebraska.

The second editorial is from the Okmulgee Daily Democrat, an independent Democratic newspaper, as follows:

PROSPERITY OF 1927 PURE G. O. P. BUNK

Slowly but surely the extravagant claims which have been made by Republican Party leaders that under the high-tariff policies of the Coolidge administration the country has been enjoying an era of unprecedented prosperity are being disproved. One of the most significant statements which have been made in this respect recently was that of Charles M. Schwab, who since the death of the late Judge Gary is known as the steel king. "Business," said Mr. Schwab, "has not been good."

Democratic leaders, replying to the lavish claims made for the Coolidge administration, have insisted that the boasted prosperity was "spotty," that it was enjoyed by great monopolistic interests, but that the farmers, the wage earners, and the mercantile and smaller banking interests were not sharing in the prosperity. This insistence has been borne out by the very high rate of failures among bank and mercantile establishments, which has been heavier this year than at any time in the country's history.

Finally, President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon admitted that there had been a period of depression, but claimed that it was passing, in most lines. Now, Mr. Schwab, chairman of the board of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, predicts general prosperity for 1928, but admits that business during the last year or so has not been good, which is a confession that the claims which have been so loudly made for the Coolidge administration and its policies have not been justified.

"Everybody knows we have been having a slack season," said Mr. Schwab. "Business has not been good, in spite of what some may insist."

Supporting this admission by Mr. Schwab, one of the most conspicuous boosters for the Coolidge policies, are the latest employment figures from the Department of Labor, covering October and November. This report, from Republican sources, shows that employment in manufacturing industries in October was the lowest for any month since September, 1924, except July and August last, the low-water mark. The October average was 5.3 per cent below the average for the same month of 1926, 5 per cent below the October, 1925, level, slightly under the average for the same month in 1924, and 11.7 below the October, 1923, level. In other words, of every 100 wage earners employed in October, 1923, more than 11 were idle during October, this year.

Then, for November, this year, there was a further drop. The employment level was 1.9 below that of October, while the total pay rolls were 3.7 per cent less than in October, and that pay roll level was 7.5 per cent lower than in October, 1926, 5.1 per cent below the October, 1925, level, and 10.8 per cent below the October, 1923, level.

Turning to the agricultural industry, which everybody knows has suffered because of the tariff favoritism of the Coolidge administration, mention may be made of the publication recently by a Des Moines, Iowa, daily paper of 32 solid newspaper pages of tax sales, most of them of farm lands, in one county of that State. They covered more than 30,000 pieces of property on which taxes were in arrears, with foreclosure threatened, and involved upward of a million dollars in delinquent taxes. These staggering figures are for one county alone. They could be duplicated in hundreds of other counties in the farm belt.

We appropriate three-quarters of a million dollars annually to be expended by this commission. What has it done in the interest of the consuming masses? It has reduced the duty on mill feed, phenol, paint-brush handles, and bob-white quail. The tariff on pig iron was increased 50 per cent by the President on the recommendation of the commission, although the United States Steel Corporation declared a 40 per cent stock dividend in addition to its regular quarterly dividend and placed a comfortable sum to its surplus. With the same pen, on the same day or the day following, he vetoed the bill to equalize industrial conditions among the depressed farmers of the West.

We used to hear the threadbare argument that the foreigners paid the tariff tax. That was exploded long ago. Second, it was argued that the tariff was in the interest of the laboring man whose increase in wages is but a mere pittance of the millions of dollars finding their way into the manufacturers' chests to their enrichment. Of course, the manufacturers of the East are prosperous because of the tribute which the great masses of the consuming public are compelled to pay because of this tariff legislation.

We next hear the theory advanced that the tariff does not increase the cost to the consumer. The complete answer to this argument, of course, is, Why do the manufacturers want tariff duties if they do not enable them to increase the price of their manufactured articles. The disclosures in the Pennsylvania election show that the president of the Manufacturers Association contributed $300,000 to the campaign fund which is only illustrative of how money, which in varying amounts, is collected from the masses of the people and used not only in Pennsylvania but in every State, and particularly in every close district throughout the country to secure legislation for the benefit of the selfish few. Their enrichment is the result of contributions exacted through favored legislation from the consuming masses of the country.

It is folly to attempt to successfully argue that a tariff on farm products, of which we produce an exportable surplus, is of any benefit to the farmers. Take cotton and wheat as examples: The price of each in this country is governed by the Liverpool market. We raise an exportable surplus of both. When we have a short crop of cotton or wheat the exportable surplus is less and the demand is, of course, greater in the foreign market and the price advances. Every cotton producer and buyer knows that the price of cotton at New Orleans and New York is governed by the market at Liverpool. The same is true of wheat. It may be that now and then, because of some local shortage, that the tariff on wheat may be of some benefit to the farmers living immediately south of the Canadian line. Generally speaking, it can not be of any benefit to the wheat producers of my State and the great Middle West. As above stated, the price is governed by the price at Liverpool, and wheat producers of my State ship no wheat to local points south of the Canadian border in competition with Canadian wheat. Let me illustrate it this way: Suppose there are two farmers, one who lives in the vicinity of Alexandria across the Potomac in the State of Virginia and the other over on the east side of the Potomac in the District of Columbia, who both raise wheat and the market is governed by the price of wheat at Baltimore, Md. Can anyone successfully argue that a tariff preventing wheat crossing the Potomac from Virginia into the District of Columbia would effect the price of wheat in the District of Columbia? Frequently, because of some local condition, there may be a shortage of wheat in some locality, but the general price of wheat is governed by the price fixed at Liverpool and the tariff against the importation of Canadian wheat, generally speaking, has no influence upon the price of wheat in Oklahoma or the great Middle West.

If the western Representatives are really honest about the tariff benefiting the farmers, why do not they place an additional duty on farm products? Everyone knows that the condition of the farmers is one verging on bankruptcy. Congress has concentrated its attention upon beneficial legislation for them. The Republican Congress tried the tariff remedy by the emergency tariff act of 1921 and the depression continued without relief. The truth is it is pure bunk. If Congress were to place a duty of 25 cents or 50 cents a pound on cotton, does anyone think it would advance the price? Of course not, and no one is foolish enough to suggest it. My opponent in 1924, because of an advanced price of cotton, due to ravages of the boll weevil and weather conditions, urged that it was due to a tariff on cotton when everyone knows that there was no duty on it. Several years ago there was a duty on long-staple cotton, but even this was repealed prior to 1924.

Finally, I can not follow the reasoning of anyone who advocates to the depressed farmers and small business men of the great Middle West that a tariff tax on the things they are compelled to purchase adds to their happiness and prosperity. If I am not permitted to question the sincerity of those who advance such an argument, I challenge both their intelligence and their conclusions. The tariff issue is threadbare. The people of the country, through rural mail service, are educating themselves upon public questions. You can not deceive them longer with the argument that the payment of more tariff taxes for the benefit of the multimillionaire manufacturers of the East is in their interest. I have frequently thought that if every article of merchandise exposed for sale upon which there is a tariff duty were marked so as to show the purchaser the additional amount paid because of the tariff duty, like stamp taxes are required to be placed upon many articles of commerce, it would have few, if any, advocates or defenders outside of the manufacturing districts of the East, and certainly none who represent the great consuming masses from the Middle West and South. [Applause.]

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT].

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is a great pity there were not more Members in the Chamber to hear the interesting speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. He certainly has furnished us with a constructive program for the future of the merchant marine. The merchant marine must be one of our most important concerns at this session of Congress. It is, indeed, a basic, a key industry and a key service which as vitally involves the prosperity of our country as any other basic industry. It sorely needs our attention at this session.

But I wish to call the attention of the committee to one feature of our merchant marine of very vital importance to the prestige and, I believe, to the prosperity of our country. I refer to the North Atlantic lane and the absolute necessity that there shall always be at least one first-class up-to-date passenger and cargo line to keep our flag upon that lane. We hear a great deal of keeping the Navy on a parity with that of any other country. Maybe some day we shall also have a merchant marine second to none, though, alas, at this time that day seems far distant. It may be too much for us to aspire to be mistress of the seas in commercial shipping, but at least we can aspire one day to be mistress of the seas as far as our own commerce is concerned. There was a time in the earlier, possibly better days of the Republic when the great bulk, almost 90 per cent, of our foreign commerce was carried in American ships, when the American flag was constantly seen on every sea. And then that carrying trade dropped and dropped until our flag had almost faded from the seas.

In recent years, under the policy declared in our merchant marine law and utilizing a portion of the vast fleet, we created during the war, we resumed our place in the sun in the carrying trade of the world so that as much as 40 per cent of our commerce was carried in American ships, but later, year by year, that proportion has been steadily dropping, till to-day it is 25 per cent, and unless something is done to halt that decline the history of the earlier day will be repeated, and but a small fraction of that great commerce carried in ships owned by and operated by our citizens. The question is to-day, not merely what we are to do to keep our merchant marine alive, but the far greater question, whether we shall have any merchant marine at all. That is the issue I believe we should meet in this Congress. The people of this country, my friends, whether they dwell on the seaboard or in the interior, demand and insist that we shall have a merchant marine adequate for the transportation of the greater part of our overseas commerce; that the American flag shall be kept flying on American ships on every important trade route. Also, I believe, that it is their wish that the policy declared in the merchant marine act that all our Government-owned vessels suitable for overseas traffic should be transferred to private ownership as soon as possible, and that we should get the Government out of this business. So our problem to-day is how our merchant marine shall be put on a permanent basis under private operation. There are still far too many of the ships of our great Government fleet directly operated by the Government or by operating-agents for the Government under guarantees against loss. Notwithstanding that great fleet of cargo and passenger ships of all sizes and tonnage, 13,000,000 tons in all, created at a cost of $6,000,000,000 to the American taxpayers, as I have said, a diminishing proportion is being carried in the American flag ships. That is not all, for to-day, in fact since the war, practically no ships for overseas service have been or are being constructed or laid down in our shipyards. They are idle and closed down, whereas abroad there has been the greatest activity in overseas construction. The foreigner is rapidly replacing his older ships with new and improved vessels, while we, faced with the fact that our ships must inevitably wear out, become obsolete or unsuitable for any trade, are standing still and making no provision in this regard. We all know, for the facts and experience have shown, that we can not have an overseas merchant marine unless the Government—that is to say, the people and the taxpayers—give it substantial assistance and support. Without such assistance we can not meet the foreign competition. Without such assistance the merchant marine can never be put on a permanent basis. Without such assistance we can not meet the foreign competition, and our merchant marine must languish and eventually expire.

The form that such assistance shall take seems fairly well agreed, namely, first to assist in the financing for construction, with Government credits or loans at so low a rate of interest as to make up by a lesser interest charge in some degree for the difference in the cost of construction and of operation here and abroad, and next, by offering more liberal and more permanent contracts for the carriage of the mails than have yet been accorded. Now, in a bill I have introduced (H. R. 8914), I have attempted to apply this principle and to accomplish the desired result with the one line we have in the North Atlantic. Now a word. The North Atlantic lane leads from all our northern ports to the ports of northern Europe. Thousands of our people cross and recross that route each year. Thousands of immigrants reach our shores by that route. Is it not, to say the least, desirable that the thousands of our countrymen who will go abroad each year and spend their millions on the other side should be afforded the privilege of traveling under the flag of their own country? Is it not also, to say the least, desirable that a large, if not the greater, portion of the millions required for their transportation should be contributed to the prosperity of their own country, to the support of all the industries that go into ship construction and operation, rather than to replenish the coffers of foreign shipowners and foreign shipbuilders? We may certainly assume that the vast majority of these Americans are good Americans, who prefer to patronize and travel on ships under their own flag, provided, of course, they are furnished with a service equal in speed, safety, and comfort to the foreign ships. Oh! I know it is the fashion to assert that vast numbers of American travelers decline to patronize American-flag ships on account of their arid condition. But, in the aggregate, that class of foolish travelers is really insignificant and this contention is disproved by the fact that our line—the American-flag line—now runs at full capacity during the tourist season. That demonstrates that the demand for American ships will keep pace with the extent of the service furnished. In fact, that so small a proportion of the total of first-class passengers is carried in American ships and that that trade is almost monopolized by the foreign companies is due principally to lack of American-ship capacity. Now, this only first-class line on the North Atlantic is known as the United States Lines. It is operated by our Government through the Shipping Board. It is, as I understand, the only line still directly operated by the Shipping Board. Strictly, it is not a first-class line at all, in the sense that it equals the best service afforded by the great British, French, and German lines. Its six ships are all now fairly old, three of them seized German ships, built before the war, reconditioned, with the exception of the Leviathan—by no means up to the standard of the newer foreign ships. Only two of its ships—the President Harding and the President Roosevelt—are American-built. While we have made no additions to this passenger line, in fact have built no new first-class passenger ships for overseas trade, the foreign lines have put a large amount of new tonnage into this service since the war, with splendid, great, fast steamships—the last word in speed, safety, comfort, and convenience. By the end of this year 13 more will be finished or laid down.

The White Star is bringing out one boat of 25,000 tons, and is reported to have ordered another of 60,000 tons. The Cunard it is reported are about to build another vessel of like proportions. The North German Lloyd are building two 46,000 tons, with speed of 26 knots. The Hamburg-American, the Swedish-American, Norwegian-American, Holland-American, and Scandinavian all have building programs. They are proposing to scrap their old or middle-aged vessels, because the big, fast boats have been found to be more profitable and economical. The big White Star Line Cunard boats will have a speed of 26 knots, to make the voyage in less than five days, and will cost, it is said, about $15,000,000 apiece. And we have absolutely no present program for the United States Lines, except possibly the reconditioning of two other old German-built boats, to be brought up to a speed of only 20 knots. And our only fast ship, the German-built Leviathan, has a speed of but 24 knots. So you can see if we are to stay in this North Atlantic trade at all some provision should be made without further delay for replacement of the old boats we are now running so as to balance the fleet to afford at least one fast American ship per week.

I shall insert in my remarks a statement furnished me by the Bureau of Research of the Shipping Board—a statistical statement analyzing the first-class trans-Atlantic traffic and the vessel tonnage employed in that traffic in 1927; also the vessels in the trans-Atlantic passenger traffic built abroad since the war and the tonnage and speed of the United States Lines passenger vessels. It shows that but 12 per cent of the first-class passengers are carried by the United States Lines, which has but 9 per cent of the tonnage engaged in the traffic.

But let us consider for whom is all this trans-Atlantic transportation furnished? Practically for Americans, and Americans only, since more than 90 per cent of those who patronize the ships on the North Atlantic lane are our enterprising and knowledge and pleasure seeking countrymen and countrywomen. So there are two questions for us to consider. First, shall we permit foreigners to well-nigh monopolize this lucrative transportation? What are we to do with the United States Lines, to get it on a permanent basis under private operation?

The answer to the first is by improving and extending the service of the United States Lines and building on that basis till sufficient accommodation is created to take care of the bulk of the trade. The second is to offer such reasonable inducements as to insure the United States Lines being taken over and operated on a permanent basis. There can be no better time than right now, at this session, to solve these questions. The first step should be to provide for the construction of at least two absolutely first-class and up-to-date fast passenger steamships of at least 35,000 tons burden, to be built in our own shipyards. This I believe to be essential, whether the line is to be under private or under Government operation. Next, to provide for more liberal mail contracts. With these inducements and with the excellent showing this line has recently made a responsible purchaser should be found. It is doing well to-day. It did better last year than the year before. With all its present handicaps it now takes in more than it pays out. The results reflect great credit on the Shipping Board. But, nevertheless, the effort should be made to relieve the Government of the operation of this line.

It seems to be conceded on all sides that we can not have new ship construction unless there is some Government assistance. What form should this assistance take? Possibly a direct subsidy is not to be considered, but we can at least offer to provide them with a certain proportion of the cost of construction through the form of Government loans at a rate of interest low enough, in some way, to equalize the higher cost of operation and construction abroad. Furthermore, we can give them more reasonable and more lucrative mail contracts. It seems to be conceded by all hands that something should be done to afford American ship operators a more favorable form of foreign-mail contracts so that these contracts can be more permanent and the remuneration at a higher rate.

My bill directs the Shipping Board to offer this line for sale. The terms of sale must provide that the purchaser shall build two high-class passenger and cargo vessels of sufficient size and speed to augment the efficiency of the present fleet, such new ships to be operated in the North Atlantic service with the other vessels of the line. The board would be authorized to loan from the existing construction loan fund, now standing at about $70,000,000, a liberal proportion, not to exceed $30,000,000, of the construction cost of these two ships, to carry interest at the rate of not less than 2 per cent. The Postmaster General would be authorized to enter into contracts of not exceeding 10 years with the owners or operators at a rate not in excess of $12 a mile for the actual number of miles traveled on each outward voyage, which is undoubtedly a more liberal mail subvention than has as yet been accorded under our law for carriage of the foreign mail. The plans of the ships must be approved by the Navy as suitable for naval auxiliary. But the bill also provides that, in case no advantage is taken of such an offer by the Government, on reasonable terms, within six months, that the Shipping Board itself shall thereupon proceed to construct these two ships at a cost for each of not to exceed $15,000,000, to be operated in the North Atlantic service as part of the United States Lines. But I firmly believe that that alternative will prove unnecessary, and that if the Congress will authorize the sale of this line, with these advantageous features, the right purchaser will soon come forward to take over and relieve the Government from the operation of this line under the reasonable assurance that at least one first-class American line will be, from now on, permanently operated on this our most important trade and passenger route. At least, this bill, if passed, will give notice that we propose to always keep at least one line in this service. Moreover, it will put new heart and life into our shipbuilding industries, and furnish our shipbuilders the opportunity to demonstrate that we on this side can turn out as fine, as fast, as safe, and as commodious ocean liners as can be built on the Clyde or elsewhere in the world. And if this line so supplemented, shall prove to be successful and profitable, then either it may be further expanded or new lines flying the same flag created so that in the days that are to come all American tourists and shippers, all who are so patriotically minded as to prefer to travel and ship abroad under the American flag, will have that opportunity. And maybe we may so advance the day when we shall behold the flag flying from the taffrail of the great majority of ocean liners that enter and clear from our North Atlantic ports. And all I am asking is that we shall

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have spent much time this week attending hearings on the McNary-Haugen bill before the Committee on Agriculture of the House. The merits of various agricultural relief bills are being urged and the contest will wax stronger as the days go by; but, Mr. Chairman, I am still for my own bill, and all the while I am growing stronger in the faith. Faith in a measure must be backed by merit or fail.

Let me tell you what I contend will be accomplished by my bill, then please read it, together with the arguments I have made in support of it, and listen to my repeated arguments in future in support of it, and I feel sure you will become convinced of the absolute soundness of the measure in every respect.

To my mind this bill will bring about the necessary control of production and marketing, thus insuring at all times a profitable price to the producers of basic agricultural commodities, such as cotton and tobacco. By consent of the farmers it will place their production and marketing in the hands of their friends, consisting of appointees by the governors of the commodity growing States, acting in the capacity of commodity councils.

After the bill has become a law it can not become operative as to any particular commodity unless three-fourths of the producers of the commodity so desire, and can not stay in effect longer than one year unless 85 per cent of the farmers producing the particular commodity approve the operation at the end of the year, and then must die during the next year unless at least 95 per cent of the producers of the commodity in question are friends of the plan by that time.

Mr. BLANTON. This is not the bill upon which I am getting communications every day.

Mr. LANKFORD. No; this is my farm bill; if the people knew fully about this bill you would be receiving many communications in favor of it.

Mr. BLANTON. I am getting so many communications from my district about a Lankford bill that I did not know but that this might be the one.

Mr. LANKFORD. No; that is about a supposed bill that they think I introduced. I have introduced no bill with such vicious conditions as are urged by the opponents of my Sunday rest bill.

Mr. BLANTON. It does not affect Texas.

Mr. LANKFORD. No; it does not, except in so far as the Nation's Capital is a model for good or bad.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, why are they so concerned about it?

Mr. LANKFORD. I do not fully know, but if they read the bill many who are now opposed to it will withdraw their objections and be in favor of it.

It was my intention to talk of farm legislation at this time and discuss Sunday legislation on another occasion; but since my friend from Texas has called attention to my bill to provide one day of rest out of every seven in the Nation's Capital, I will make a few observations concerning that measure.

Forty-six States in our country have some kind of Sunday laws. Two States and the Nation's Capital have absolutely none. Most people back in our districts believe we have some Sunday law here and are dumfounded when they find that their Capital—the seat of government of the greatest Christian Nation on earth—has no Sunday law whatever.

I feel that our people, whom we represent, want and expect the Nation's Capital to be fairly representative of the sentiment of the great majority of the people of the country in the matter of Sunday laws and other legislation. Congress makes the laws for the District of Columbia just as the mayor and board of aldermen make the laws for the various cities of the country. Then, if we are to represent our people, we should enact for the District of Columbia such fair and reasonable laws as are for the best interest of the people here and as will represent the wishes of the great majority of the people of the Nation.

But why are the people of the States so very much concerned about a bill to provide for a reasonable Sunday observance here? I will tell you. Congress must take sides either for or against Sunday desecration here. Our failure to pass a Sunday law is being construed as an indorsement by Congress of the Sunday movie, Sunday theater, Sunday dance hall, Sunday night club, and all other forms of Sunday desecration. The movie and theater interests, backed up by those who wish to tear down the Christian Sunday and the various atheistic organizations, are making campaigns in the various States to destroy all Sunday legislation in the States, and are pointing to Washington as a model of Sunday desecration. They are saying, "See what your Congress thinks of Sunday in Washington and elsewhere."

Washington is now used as a model of Sunday desecration by those who hate our Christianity and deny the existence of a God. Would it not be better for us to pass a reasonable Sunday law here and let it be used by those who are in the great majority in this country and who do not want to commercialize Sunday, but who recognize it as a day of rest and who believe that Christianity is the chief corner stone of our civilization and that faith in the Great Architect of the Universe is the foundation of all law, all law enforcement, and of all good government?

For my part, I much prefer for the Nation's Capital to be a model of righteousness rather than a Sodom of ungodliness.

Let me say this: Many people throughout the country are being misled into signing petitions against my bill on the idea that it will interfere with religious freedom, bring about a union of church and state, and deprive some one of some sacred right. I would not introduce any such a bill.

Some people have strange ideas of religious freedom. They seem to think that closing a Sunday dance hall, a Sunday night club, or gambling den interferes with their religious freedom. Neither do I see how the closing of these dens of iniquity would bring about the union of church and state.

For the very life of me I can not understand how the sacred right of religious freedom can be twisted and contorted into meaning the regular continuous Sunday infliction on the public of the obscenity of the modern movie and theater, the profanity of the night clubs, and the vulgarity of the modern dance hall.

No, Mr. Chairman, I would not introduce any bill to interfere with proper religious freedom or to deprive anyone of a constitutional right. If I should introduce any such a bill it would be set aside promptly by the Supreme Court. My bill is fair and is constitutional, and the opponents know it is constitutional. That is why they are fighting it so bitterly. They know the Supreme Court will let it stand, and they want to commercialize Sunday in Washington and use the Sunday desecration here as an argument for the ultimate destruction of Sunday laws throughout the Nation.

But I did not intend to say so much about Sunday legislation at this time. I have made this speech on two subjects, which means that I shall in the very near future make several more on farm relief and at least one extended speech on Sunday legislation.

Just now let me say a few more words on my bill to create the farmers finance corporation.

The bill is drawn in behalf of the individual farmer, and for all farmers and in behalf of no one else, and yet it is fair to all. It is not at all compulsory and must stand or fall by its own strength.

The farmer, under the bill, can hold his product and while so doing can borrow on the commodity the average in full for which the commodity has sold during the last 10 years. The farmer will not have to put up any collateral in addition to the commodity and will not be liable for any part of the loan not paid by the sale of the commodity, and therefore will be guaranteed the average price for which the product has sold during the last 10 years. He can not lose, for the commodity under my plan will not drop below this loan value, and the Government's corporation, which makes the loan, can not lose, for the plan provides a control of both production and marketing so as to hold off the market at all times so much of the product as might depress the market, thus putting on the market only so much of the product as can be absorbed at a profitable price to the consumer. In this way every cent of the loan will be repaid with interest. All expenses will be paid and the farmer receive a reasonable and fair price for his product.

By this method an overproduction will not in the least depress the market. An overproduction can not depress the market if it is known definitely that it is not for sale. Under this plan the overproduction will not go on the market, but will be held by the producers until there is a demand for it at such a price as the farmers themselves decide is fair and reasonable. The farmers, of course, will act through their authorized agents, the commodity councils.

There will be no need for worry over crop reports, weather conditions, price predictions, or the probability of an overproduction. The farmer will be able to hold his commodity by borrowing the full average price of the commodity, thus holding it off the market until it can be sold at a price named by him and his friends. He can name his own price and get it, just like other folks are now doing. Of course, the price fixed by him could not be unreasonable. It could be and should be, though, for the real value of the commodity. No one could steal the commodity from him or get it for less than its real value.

There would be very little, if any, gambling in futures, for cotton could not go below the minimum fixed by the loan value. It might go up, but could not go down. In fact, there would be very little fluctuation of price. The farmer could look the world in the face and say, "How much cotton do you want at 25 cents per pound?" and could get it unless conditions beyond the United States controlled the price slightly one way or the other. Heretofore the production in this country has controlled the price. For many years in future the farmers of this country can control their own prices if they will control their production, and with that control put on the market only so much cotton or other commodity as the demands of the market call for and will absorb at a reasonable price.

This bill gives the farmers perfect control of their production and marketing and therefore gives them perfect control of prices within reasonable bounds. We need not worry about the price of farm products if we will only help the farmer solve his production and marketing problems.

So it is seen the bill solves all controversies with respect to cotton gambling, cotton reports, insurance of fair prices, and price fixing. The bill enables the farmers to fix their prices as other industries are doing to-day.

This bill is a wonderful improvement over the debenture plan, which would only help the exporter of cotton on the theory that some unknown, insignificant part of this help might some way finally find its way to the producer of cotton or other basic commodity. It is likewise far, far better than the other plans, which only set up agencies to speculate on the farmer and make money for themselves, and may or may not help the price level for the farmer throughout any given period. Let us help the farmer directly, not indirectly. There is very little, if any, merit in most of the proposals to help the farmer by helping the other fellow live off the farmer on the theory that they may help the farmer at least to exist.

Under this bill the rights and privileges of the farmer are definitely set out. So far as possible, the bill is definite in its terms. The rights of all parties concerned can be easily ascertained by a reading of the bill.

There is no equalization fee or tax of any kind provided in the bill. There is no need for any. The bill simply enables the farmers to control their production and marketing by mutual contract and thereby become independent in the matter of determining the price of the product of their own labor.

The farmers will gladly join in the control of their production and marketing, for it will mean an additional price for the commodity which they are holding as well as a good price for their new production.

The farmer will make the same money out of any particular commodity with much less effort and labor on less land. Therefore he can more easily diversify his crop and make more money out of other products.

The farmer will have the privilege of borrowing, if he wishes to exercise the right. He will be bound only to help in the control of marketing, production, and price adjustments, and will have the benefit of the loan privileges if he needs money in order to carry his commodity until a better price is assured.

Under the plan suggested by this bill the farmer will in no sense be a pensioner of the Government. I feel the Government owes them a debt that can never be paid, but be that as it may the Government will get back every penny advanced to the farmers' finance corporation under this bill. To my mind the bill is so sound economically that only the Government will not lose any money, but in a short time the farmers will become so thoroughly independent they can borrow from banks, trust companies, and other financial agencies any amount of money needed for the orderly marketing of their crops.

In conclusion, let me say, Come on, let us pass a real farm bill and let the farmers tell us what we have done for them rather than our telling them what great things we hope to do in their behalf. [Applause.]

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, notice was given by my distinguished colleague from Kentucky, Judge ROBSION, in the course of his eloquent address this afternoon that when the bill under consideration is taken up under the five-minute rule an amendment will be offered in the interest of agriculture and the coal industry of this country. In view of the fact that much has already been said on the subject of agricultural depression, I shall confine my remarks almost exclusively to the relief which it is hoped this amendment will bring to the great coal industry of America.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, this amendment possesses very great merit, because it is common knowledge that the coal business of this country to-day is in a very grave condition due, to some extent perhaps, to overproduction and to the development and use of hydroelectric energy and to the use of oil as a fuel, which is to-day coal's greatest competitor. With the further development of water power this competition will naturally and inevitably become more acute and more devastating to the coal industry. Mr. Chairman, I do not offer this suggestion, however, as an argument against the promotion of hydroelectric possibilities, but simply to call attention to the importance of providing a means to protect the great coal industry, which employs, feeds, and clothes millions of our fellow citizens. While the district that I have the honor to represent is not essentially a coal-mining district, yet coal mining is one of its major industries. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have ever seen the coal business of my section in such a sorrowful plight as it is to-day, and as it has been during the past two or three years. Our mines are running on short shifts, and only three or four days per week, with the inevitable result that the miner and his wife and children are suffering great hardship.

This is undoubtedly due to some extent to unequal competition and to overproduction, but both of these evils can be cured and eliminated if we can only find a market for our normal output. Statistics show that we produce in the United States more than twice the tonnage of coal that is mined in Great Britain, yet Great Britain exports almost 20 times the tonnage we export. Our average annual production of coal is 513,772,000 tons, whereas the average of Great Britain is 229,965,000 tons. The average yearly export of the United States from 1922 to 1925, was 3,967,660 tons, while during the same period Great Britain's average yearly export was 76,706,000. During the coal strike in Great Britain of 1926, the United States exported 19,320,022 tons of coal, while Great Britain exported only 20,596,000 tons. This is a practical demonstration of what can be done under favorable conditions.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment which will be submitted will be designed to improve coal mining conditions and agricultural conditions in this country by providing an additional million dollars in the appropriation for the United States Shipping Board to be used to provide at least 10 vessels peculiarly equipped for coal transportation and to absorb whatever deficit may result from competition in foreign markets in the sale of the surplus production in this country of wheat, corn, lumber, cotton, and coal. Thus it will be observed that this amendment will not only benefit the coal industry, but will likewise and to a corresponding degree benefit the other commodities mentioned. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will not only benefit the coal operator and the coal miner, but it will be a blessing also to the farmer. We descant here daily, long and loud, about the plight of the farmer and the predicament of the coal operator and coal miner. Here is an opportunity to do something more than engage in idle talk. Let us adopt this amendment when it is presented and do something practicable and substantial to relieve these two great national industries. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, what our country needs as much as anything else to-day is a well-financed, well-equipped, well-organized, and formidable merchant marine, as has been emphasized many times during this debate. Such an agency would do more to solve our agricultural and industrial problems than anything else. The greatest asset of the British Empire to-day is her wonderful merchant fleet that carries her commerce to every nook and corner of the globe. I want to see American ships flying the American flag sailing the seven seas bearing American commerce, because this will contribute more to American prosperity than anything else just now. While this amendment does not necessarily commit us to a merchant-marine policy, nevertheless it is a gesture in that direction, and as such it should receive the cordial support of every true friend of the farmer, every real friend of labor, every genuine friend of industry, and every sincere friend of American prosperity in this Chamber. [Applause.]

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. HARE. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement, and I am very much impressed with the statement where he shows that there has been such a material reduction in the export of coal from the United States, and an increase in Great Britain. Can the gentleman assign the reason for that reduction of export coal from the United States?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think the gentleman misunderstood me. I said that during the coal strike of 1926 in Great Britain our export of coal increased materially. Of course, after the strike was settled we came back to the normal exportation. The adoption of this amendment will mean a great revival for the coal industry in this country similar to that of 1926. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, back in the beautiful vine-clad city of Boonville, Mo., in the district that I have the honor to represent, lives a brave but broken-hearted mother, Mrs. Minnie G. Short, whose only son, Roger Leslie Short, lost his life in the sinking of the S-4. His body has not been recovered. He died in the line of duty.

Only yesterday I received a letter from this old mother. It is not a complaining letter. It is an instructive letter; and in the brief time allotted to me I wish to read it. It is filled with mother love, the strongest and most sacred love in all the world. I read:

BOONVILLE, MO., January 16, 1928.

Hon. W. L. NELSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. NELSON: As the mother of Torpedoman Roger Leslie Short, I am, of course, intensely interested in any discussion concerning the S-4 and the investigation growing out of the disaster, and feel that I must write you some of the things that are in my heart.

Nothing can bring back my precious boy to me, I know that; but I hope that out of all this discussion there will come something that will make it safer for the other brave boys who go to sea for Uncle Sam. I wish you could read some of the letters I have received from other mothers who have boys in the Navy, and whose hearts are always filled with dread. They know my sorrow, and I know their dread of what may happen to their boys. I know these dear mothers feel as I do; they are not thinking about blaming anyone; they are concerned with the increased safety of our American boys who are on their country's ships.

I hope, Mr. NELSON, that the investigation will be a thorough one and will result, in so far as possible, in preventing such another awful catastrophe which robbed me of a loving son.

You assured me that you would look after all details for me, but I especially urge that you insist that the personal belongings of Roger, and any records that he may have left, be carefully preserved. Especially, please see that I get his locker. This means much to me.

Roger was all I had. He had served in the Navy 14 years and loved the life, but he was never too far away from home but that he kept in close touch with me and saw that I was well provided for. He was a wonderful son.

Hoping to hear from you soon, I am gratefully yours,

MINNIE G. SHORT.

May I add, Mr. Chairman, that if anywhere there is anyone who, in the proposed investigations growing out of the sinking of the S-4 is inclined to play politics, this letter from this old mother should put him to shame. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MCDUFFIE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MCDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall not assume to speak as an expert on the merchant marine, and I will not detain the committee long. I do wish, however, to make one or two observations with reference to the Shipping Board. Its progress, as shown within the last year, in the way of curtailing expenses and at the same time carrying more tonnage, maintaining all the while the regularly established lines, has excited our admiration. They are just beginning to learn the business, which they had to do, because, as was shown by the chairman of the subcommittee to-day, our flag had practically vanished from the seas.

Along about 1900 to 1910 we were carrying less than 9 per cent of our foreign commerce. We were therefore in the position, after the late war, of the pioneer in a new field. We had to learn all over how to conduct a merchant marine. Now, within 10 years we are beginning to make a showing, and I congratulate the board and those who have had the management of the merchant marine upon the showing they have made.

Something was said in the course of debate about the committee's attitude toward the merchant marine. It was even suggested that the committee should not be criticized for what they had done because they were so thoroughly in harmony with everybody in their views upon the merchant marine; that is, those who wanted to have a real merchant marine. I repeat, I think every member of this committee wants to see a fully developed American merchant marine. The chairman of the subcommittee very graphically described the situation confronting us, and every man to-day has protested against anything that would hinder the merchant marine. Some have urged construction of additional ships, and much enthusiasm has been shown on this floor.

This subcommittee, regardless of its attitude, can make a mistake, and I claim it made a serious mistake when, in listening to the enthusiasm of those who had testified about the savings of the past year, they failed to ascertain that the board itself and those charged with the responsibility of running these ships wanted $13,400,000 at least, the amount approved by the Budget; and the thing that impressed me most with respect to this action of the committee in making that cut in the Budget estimate—the thing that I fear, or the result that I fear, is that its cut of more than a million dollars in the estimate will be used by our competitors, who will tell all the shippers everywhere in the world that the United States is no longer enthusiastic in building up the merchant marine. They, our foreign competitors, would say, "The American flag will finally fade from the seas. Here is proof of it: They have not the backing nor proper support of the people of America."

If I could have my way, I would add that million, and I would immediately write a law providing for the construction of additional up-to-date modern cargo ships. I would put such statutes on the books and appropriate enough money to show all the world that, instead of vanishing from the seas, we propose to sail the American flag upon all the high seas, and we are there to stay.

The President is right when he says that our American manufacturers and importers are not giving proper support to the American merchant marine. I was astounded to read in the hearings a statement by Commissioner Plummer, who quoted some representative of an American manufacturing company. They were discussing the Isthmian Line, referred to by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], who has rendered a distinct service to the merchant marine and the country, involving the extension of our service in a new field from which there were 700,000 tons of burlap and bagging coming to this country. The Isthmian Line was making only 4 sailings out of a total of 69. When it was proposed that the Shipping Board go in that field for some of that immense tonnage in accordance with the terms of the law, to the effect that we should establish a merchant marine to carry at least a major portion of our foreign tonnage, this manufacturer said, according to Mr. Plummer:

You would not get a ton of our business if you would carry it for nothing.

That was the attitude of an American manufacturer.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Certainly.

Mr. BEEDY. What is the name of the manufacturer who made that statement?

Mr. McDUFFIE. The record does not disclose his name, but Mr. Plummer stated he was the representative of an American manufacturing company. He told us in so many words. He said:

You would not get a ton of our business if you would carry it for nothing.

Mr. BEEDY. That is certainly an astounding statement for an American to make, and I hope the gentleman from Alabama will get his name and put it in the RECORD.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I would like to have his name go in the RECORD. Here is the reply Mr. Plummer made. He said:

You had better strike the "American" off your name and look up the tariff protection that you are getting at the same time.

Mr. BEEDY. I am in hearty accord with the statement made by Mr. Plummer.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. WOOD then asked Mr. Plummer whether he had communicated with chambers of commerce throughout the country and tried to enlist their aid and support in arousing some interest on the part of manufacturers in behalf of our merchant flag. The commissioner said yes and he had many nice letters from these organizations. Somehow and in some way, gentlemen, we must arouse the interest of our own people in our merchant flag. Those who have control of the overseas tonnage, and especially those enjoying a beneficent high protective tariff, should rally to the support of the flag.

I agree with the statement that we would like to have these ships operated by private enterprise. That is not the primary purpose of the merchant marine laws, but in the final analysis I think the average American prefers not to have the Government in any sort of business. This is not the first instance, however, where the American Government has pioneered in business. It has to lead the way and blaze the trail, so to speak, and it has done that in many instances, and very properly so. It loaned its money and granted its land to build up the great transcontinental railroads, and I say very properly, because they have made of this Nation the wonderful Nation it is, by bringing the East to the West and the West to the East, and developing a great empire west of the Mississippi River. We are pioneering in inland waterway transportation at the expense of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, there are many instances which might be cited showing that the Government has had to pioneer in order to get results and to demonstrate to our people the feasibility of various enterprises and activities so necessary for the welfare of the country as a whole.

So my plea is not to cut these appropriations and thereby force the sale of these ships. This saving, of which we heard to-day, is predicated upon the fact that we will sell ships on the west coast. It is a conditional saving. In our effort to get the Government out of business do not let us destroy the most important activity in all the Federal Government and fail to get our commerce to all the nations of the world, but let us lend our support here in Congress with all our enthusiasm; let us so act our part in this Congress in providing funds for the merchant marine that the whole world may know that the American merchant flag will not leave the seas, but it is there to stay on and on. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I listened with interest, as I always do, to the discussion of the very distinguished Member from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] concerning his colloquy with the gentleman from Illinois. I also had a slight colloquy with the gentleman from Texas when we were discussing the last appropriation bill. It was upon the question as to how an officer or soldier in the United States Army or Navy could be consigned to St. Elizabeths Hospital for the Insane. As I recall the statement of the gentleman—and he is usually very accurate and, I will say, one of the most industrious and efficient Members of this House, and will be much missed here when he goes over to take his new seat in the Senate—he stated that by the scratch of a pen the Secretary of War or the Navy could commit a man to the insane hospital at St. Elizabeths. I served as a member of the Military Affairs Committee for some years and during that time gave some study to Army regulations. I expressed the thought that the gentleman's statement was in error. I suggested that a board would have to pass upon a man's insanity before he could be consigned to an insane hospital such as St. Elizabeths. I secured from the War Department the regulation and rule of the Army upon this matter, and I want to read into the RECORD that part which applies to the consignment of an officer or a soldier to St. Elizabeths. It is as follows:

b. Board of medical officers to examine the insane: No person in the military service will be transferred to a hospital for the treatment of the insane, or discharged from the service because of insanity, except after a critical examination by a board consisting of at least two medical officers, of whom one shall, if practicable, be a specialist in nervous and mental diseases: Provided, That in cases of emergency and where no military hospital is available or suitable for the purpose, natives of Porto Rico or of the Philippine Islands may be placed temporarily for observation and treatment in an institution for the treatment of those suffering from mental disorders, upon the certificate of at least one medical officer, appointed by the commanding officer. Examination by the board will preferably be made in hospital, and report will not be submitted until after the person being examined shall have been observed for a reasonable period of time. The report will contain the diagnosis, a detailed account of the medical history of the case, the board's opinion as to whether the insanity existed prior to entry into the service, whether incurred in line of duty, whether due to his own willful misconduct, or to causes not incident to the service, or whether it is of service origin under section 300 of the war risk insurance act, as amended; a statement as to whether the patient, if discharged from the service, can be released from military control without danger to himself or others; and the board's recommendation for or against the patient's transfer for treatment to a designated institution. When the board recommends the discharge or transfer of an enlisted man, its report will be accompanied by a certificate of disability prepared on the proper form. The report and all papers connected therewith will be executed in duplicate

The insane who may be admitted to St. Elizabeths are defined in the following:

6. Classes of insane who may be admitted to St. Elizabeths Hospital: Insane of the following classes, who may not be entitled to compensation, care, and treatment under the provisions of the war risk insurance act, as amended, may be transferred to St. Elizabeths Hospital, Washington, D. C.:

a. Officers, members of the Army Nurse Corps, contract surgeons, warrant officers, warrant officers of the Army Mine Planter Service, Army field clerks, field clerks of the Quartermaster Corps and enlisted men who become insane while in the military service; civilian employees of the Quartermaster Corps or Finance Department who become insane during such employment; persons who, while in the service of the United States in the Army, have been admitted to St. Elizabeths Hospital, and have been thereafter discharged from it on the supposition that they have recovered their reason, and have, within three years after such discharge, become again insane from causes existing at the time of such discharge, and have no adequate means of support; the indigent insane persons who have been in the Army and have been discharged therefrom on account of disability arising from such insanity, or who have become insane within three years after their discharge from the Army, from causes which arose during and were produced by service in the Army.

The next paragraph which I want to read is that which defines exactly the terms and procedure necessary before a soldier in the Army can be confined in St. Elizabeths Hospital.

7. Procedure for transfer of the insane to St. Elizabeths Hospital.

a. Authority: Authority for the transfer of noncompensable insane to this hospital will be secured from the War Department as prescribed in paragraph 4*b*(1).

I now want to read the language which provides how the insane soldier can be assigned to St. Elizabeths Hospital.

b. Noncompensable insane: (1) When entitled to care and treatment at the expense of the United States.—Request for authority to transfer or discharge a noncompensable insane patient who is entitled to care and treatment at the expense of the United States (par. 2b(1), accompanied by the report of the Board of Medical Officers (par. 1b) and all papers therewith, including the medical certificate required by the Department of the Interior, will be forwarded through military channels to The Adjutant General. If the request is approved, the necessary orders will be issued by the War Department.

The procedure is that first the man comes before a board of competent medical examiners and they make a finding in the case. The matter then goes through military channels to The Adjutant General of the Army, who must approve it. It then goes, at last, to the Secretary of War for the order to which the gentleman from Texas referred. No arbitrary order by the Secretary of War consigning a soldier to St. Elizabeths without trial and finding by a medical board is possible.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. That order, after all, is a mere scratch of the pen of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes. The Secretary merely gives the written order to carry out the findings and order of the medical board.

Mr. BLANTON. And that order is what Doctor White receives as his authority for holding that man for life.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And then he does hold him for life on that scratch of the pen. Now, if our distinguished friend, the former Governor of Nebraska, will look at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the gentleman will find I cited the other day a case from the Navy—and the Navy has the same rules as the Army—where a Navy board was organized with two doctors on it. Without giving the man any hearing—Lieutenant Commander Sandlin—they found him in "a paranoid state" on a superficial examination and confined him to St. Elizabeths Hospital. When they had their so-called hearing these doctors refused to even let his wife be present when they examined him, and they allowed him no witness. When I forced the Navy to give this man a hearing I produced evidence there, and I want the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] to read that evidence. It is of such a conclusive nature that it leads to but one conclusion—his sanity.

This evidence convinced four members of the board out of the five that the man was not insane; but the man who was chairman of the board, the fifth member, still held he was insane, notwithstanding the fact that the board, on a four-to-one vote, released the man, and he is released now and going about his own business. This is what I meant by a mere scratch of the pen.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It is done, after all, by a scratch of the pen.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman has finished his speech, I would like to say a word in the time I have left.

It is true, as the gentleman says, it takes the order of the Secretary of War to finally complete the consignment of a man to the insane asylum, but, as I have called to his attention, the procedure is the same as it is in civil life, and before a man is declared insane or before the Secretary of War can scratch that pen of his they have got to go through all this procedure I have referred to to protect the man who is under examination as to his mental condition. Therefore, I submit I was correct in what I said the other day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman from New York will yield two minutes more, as I would like to ask the gentleman a further question.

Mr. CULLEN. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. May I say to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska that since I have raised this question, the departments are getting uneasy about their power. They have had Secretary Work prepare two special bills, and within the last two days they have been sent to Senator CAPPER, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, to be introduced in the Senate. Do you know what those bills do? One of them is to take away the writ of habeas corpus, so that they can not get a writ of habeas corpus granted by courts, which would be unconstitutional. The effect of the other bill is to provide that they shall not be entitled in any case to a trial before a jury. This takes away from these people the two most valuable rights they have under our bill of rights. And we must defeat both of them.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Gentlemen of the committee, the thing which I wanted particularly to call to your attention was that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy has no such authority as was claimed, nor the arbitrary power to commit a man to the insane asylum at St. Elizabeths without a proper hearing. There must be a finding by a board of qualified medical officers and go through the other military channels which protect a soldier in his rights if his mental condition is challenged. The scratch of the pen which the Secretary of War puts upon the order is a mere formality and does not have anything to do with the actual reasons for consigning the man to the hospital at St. Elizabeths. The finding of the medical board is absolutely essential.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read down to and including line 3 on page 2.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, pending that motion and before we rise, may I submit an inquiry? Will this bill be the business to be taken up on Monday?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; it is expected this bill shall continue under consideration on Monday, until it is finished.

Mr. BLANTON. And we will not have a meeting to-morrow?

Mr. TILSON. We will see a little later. If we can get consent, perhaps not.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. TILSON] having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 9481, the independent offices appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Connecticut, the Republican leader, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it stand adjourned until Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it shall stand adjourned to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the spokesman for the leader whether or not he has any business in which the country might be interested to consider to-morrow? In view of the fact that the Republican organization has no business in which the American people is interested, and that probably whatever business it might have would not be particularly interesting to the American people, I will not object.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman from Michigan does not speak for the Republican organization.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. No; but he speaks for the Republican leader.

Mr. WOOD. I might add that the Republican administration has accomplished so much that we think it needs a rest. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I think it needs a rest from the Republican administration.

Mr. BLANTON. And I think they will get it. [Laughter.]

MARION LETCHER

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State recommending an appropriation for the relief of Mr. Marion Letcher, American Consul General at Copenhagen, Denmark. It appears that on February 18, 1927, while Mr. Letcher was the responsible officer in charge, the office of the Consulate General at Copenhagen was burglarized and official moneys in a total equivalent to $252.93, for which Mr. Letcher is accountable, were stolen. Notwithstanding the efforts of Mr. Letcher, aided by the local police, no recovery has been made.

The conclusion reached by the Secretary of State has my approval and I recommend that the Congress authorize an appropriation of $252.93 to be paid to Mr. Letcher.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
January 20, 1928.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

O God, who art the author of peace and lover of concord, in knowledge of whom standeth our eternal life, whose service is perfect freedom, defend us this day with Thy mighty power, that all our doings being ordered by Thy governance may be righteous in Thy sight. Send Thy Holy Spirit and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of love, the very bond of peace and of all virtues, without which whosoever liveth is counted dead before Thee. Grant this for Thine only Son, Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS IN THE SOUTH

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on yesterday there was published in the Washington Sunday Star an article by Dr. Julius Klein, Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, on the South's trade, which I ask unanimous consent may be published in the RECORD.

Mr. President, the facts and figures given by Doctor Klein concerning the recent development of industry in the South, the increase in her export trade, are interesting, indeed. They show the splendid strides that have been made by our portion of the country since the World War. Doctor Klein is one of the most valuable men connected with the Government. In my judgment, he is doing more to build up our foreign trade and commerce than anyone who has ever been connected with our Government. He is a man of splendid attainments, of good sense, of great activity, and of wonderful knowledge of our foreign and domestic commerce. He is a most pleasing and delightful speaker and he is frequently called to all parts of our country in carrying out the duties of his office. Though he is not a southerner, he has no sectional views and his treatment of this matter is certainly a most pleasing one to our people in the South, and, I believe, is most pleasing to the people of this country. I would like for every southern newspaper to publish in full the article prepared and published by Doctor Klein.

In this connection, Mr. President, I wish to say that since I first came to the Congress in 1911 I have urged in every way I could the increase of appropriations for the purpose of extending our foreign trade. In the last appropriation bill I was glad to increase the number of our representatives abroad and also our commercial representatives in this country for the purpose of extending our trade. One of the reasons that I am so vitally interested in the building up of our merchant marine is for this same purpose of extending our trade. We can not extend this trade as it ought to be unless we have a merchant marine of our own. We can not compete with other nations if we do not have a merchant marine of our own and have to use our competitors' ships. We must have our own ships. We must have our merchant marine. We must add to and build it up so that our country may trade where she pleases, when she pleases, and with whom she pleases, and I am one of those who believes that she ought to trade with all the world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave is granted.

Mr. Klein's article is as follows:

[From the Washington Star, January 22, 1928]

SOUTH'S RETURN TO LEAD IN EXPORT TRADE IS SEEN—RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF INDUSTRIES IS CONSIDERED INDICATION THAT FORMER COMMERCIAL POSITION IS IN SIGHT

(By Julius Klein, Director Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce)

The yellowed pages of our official statistical publications of a century or so ago reveal many interesting facts regarding the commercial awakening of the young Republic. One of the outstanding features was the astonishing predominance of the South in our foreign trade.

In fact, during the eighteen hundred and twenties not less than 45 or 50 per cent of our total export trade was in cotton and at least half of the remaining proportion was in other products of the southern plantations and forests, particularly tobacco and naval stores. To-day cotton still heads the list, but it represents only 18 per cent of our total overseas sales. Our economic historians have made much of the rapid development of the West and its repercussions upon the commercial and industrial life of the Nation, but so far as foreign trade was concerned the period before the Civil War had as its most conspicuous feature the predominance of the South.

COTTON RAISING INCREASE

Indeed, the rapid expansion of cotton raising into the relatively newer States of Tennessee and the lower Mississippi Valley during the first quarter of the century had much to do with this situation. These newer plantations were contributing nearly half of the total supply of exportable cotton by 1830, when the shipments were just under 300,000,000 pounds, as compared with only 87,000,000 pounds in 1819.

This accounted for the rapid rise in importance of the port of New Orleans in our foreign trade during this early period. By 1833

Louisiana had passed New York as our leading export State, and she retained this leadership down to the Civil War not simply because of the enormous expansion of cotton growing but also because of the development of the southbound river traffic from the newly opened lands of the West. In fact, by that time three of the four leading States in our export trade were in the South. New York was second to Louisiana, and South Carolina and Georgia followed closely thereafter.

All of this is simply by way of a foreword—a confirmation of the commonly accepted impression that the "old South" lived by its foreign trade in plantation products. The picture was, of course, entirely distorted by the Civil War, and particularly by the profound changes in industry and transportation which took place during the decades thereafter. But although wars are usually thought of primarily as destructive and are associated chiefly with the appalling losses of men and materials, there is also at least a moderately compensating factor in their stimulation of new constructive energies by way of carrying on the conflict, and especially of restoring the resultant damage. And so in the case of the holocaust of 1914–1918 there were a number of profound commercial and industrial transformations in this country and abroad which have reacted upon the economic life of the South in bringing it back to a position of prominence in our foreign trade.

The war completely remade the international commerce of the world. Factors and influences were set in motion which had never been contemplated previously. This has been particularly true of the realignment of trade routes and of the stimulation of new industries into activity. In no other part of the United States were these two elements more vigorously evident than in the South.

CANAL'S EFFECT ON TRADE

In the first place, the Panama Canal, by the most fortuitous circumstances, was opened at the very gateway of the South on the eve of the war. As a result, what had previously been one of the most retarded trade areas on the globe was suddenly made accessible, and our Southern States were on the threshold of this new scene of commercial possibilities. The significant factor in this connection was the tremendous demand stimulated by the war for every type of raw materials most immediately available along the western seaboard of South America. Nitrates were imperatively necessary for explosives and to stimulate the overburdened soils of the combatant nations. Then, too, the minerals of those countries, notably copper, tin, and such minor but none the less significant ones as tungsten, molydenum, etc., were immediately in great demand for ammunition purposes.

Our ports, especially from Baltimore southward, became the centers of much of this commerce. Trade routes immediately began to shift, and the South came to the fore in traffic along the new lines.

Associated with this development there came a series of new industries throughout the South, utilizing on the one hand the raw materials just mentioned and on the other hand drawing stimulus from the unprecedented demands from across the Atlantic. Among these was, of course, the great new iron and steel development of Tennessee and Alabama, which had opened before the war, but was given its greatest impetus during that crisis. Chemical plants also sprang up throughout this area, and the newly established textile industry shot upward with spectacular speed.

AGRICULTURE LOSES GROUND

Without too extensive a statistical detour, it may be noted that these new developments have crowded agriculture out of its once dominant position in the South, and as a result manufacturers are now in first place, with an annual value of well in excess of $9,000,000,000 as compared with a gross value of $5,000,000,000 for agriculture and livestock products, not deducting crops fed to livestock. If we are to include mineral products on the nonagricultural side of the scale, we add another $1,700,000,000.

In fact, Mississippi and Arkansas are the only Southern States showing a higher value of farm products than for manufacturers and minerals.

The interesting phase of this new development in its foreign-trade aspect is its truly astonishing diversity, which has enabled the South to spread its overseas market risks in a multitude of trade areas, whereas in the old days practically the whole of its commercial future was tied up with the buying power of one great customer—namely, the textile industry of England. To-day the exploitation of an astonishing array of raw materials, which had been practically untouched in pre-war days, except on a very small scale, has greatly minimized the risks of her industrial position and very substantially strengthened her general economic stability.

The value of manufactures of the United States increased from 1923 to 1925 about $2,500,000,000, with a bona fide volume increase of at lease equal proportions, since there were no drastic price fluctuations during that period. The South contributed nearly 40 per cent of this expansion, which was far more than its normal proportion on the basis either of population, area, or capital resources.

There are many significant features of this new industrial diversification. One of the most promising is the fact that it has been built up to no little extent through owner management—the executives in immediate charge of the plants are in large part the actual owners. In other words, the South is much less burdened with the dead hand of absentee ownership than is the case with many older industrial sections of the country. This has made for an alert adjustability of production and marketing policies, which has been particularly important during the world-wide changes in international commerce since 1914. The buying power of whole nations has been completely remade in those years. New demands have come into being and with them the means of gratifying them through the stimulation of new industries to meet war requirements and to cope with enforced war-time isolation during the period of shortage of shipping.

EXECUTIVES ARE YOUNG

The young executives of the southern factories—and no observer can make a tour of any considerable number of factories below the Mason and Dixon line without being impressed with the energetic youthfulness of their managers and directors—are constantly on the lookout for new openings and intimately in touch with changes in requirements and possibilities for their products.

The resourcefulness is invaluable in these days of spectacular and sudden changes in trade requirements. The enormous improvement in means of communication throughout the world, the introduction of trans-Atlantic telephony and of radio service everywhere, of much more rapid and efficient Diesel-motored shipping; of commercial aviation on an undreamed-of scale, of immensely improved automotive traffic for freight as well as passenger purposes, and of electrified rail service—all of these new contributions to transportation and communication have vastly complicated the problems of merchandizing. They transmit the impulses and reactions from world-wide events, so that the effects of the latter are promptly evident in business circles thousands of miles away.

This new situation gives an impressive advantage to the younger and more watchful industrial organization, and in that respect the South enjoys a decided advantage over the operations of the older, more settled parts of our industrial and commercial structure. Experience may be the best teacher in some respects, but too rigid a devotion to the traditions and precedents of the past is certainly a serious disadvantage in these days of kaleidoscopic trade changes.

By way of concrete illustration of this situation two instances may be cited. The postwar housing activities in the United Kingdom created an extraordinary demand for new types of woodwork. This was appreciated and promptly capitalized by certain southern producers considerably in advance of their older and presumably more experienced competitors in different parts of northern Europe and this country. The result has been the development of certain types of new flooring, processed wood, etc., by southern mills, in which a substantial trade has now been built up. Similarly the same industry has undertaken the exploitation of the trade in various lines of hardwood sporting gear to satisfy the new trade that has been stimulated by the astonishing increase in tourist traffic since the war. A large portion of the skis now used at the winter resorts in Switzerland originate in Memphis and other southern centers.

NEW TEXTILE INDUSTRY

The new textile industry of the South, which marshals 1,000 mills, with half the total spindles of the country and includes $30,000,000 worth of rayon plants, is another example of the newer industrial and commercial spirit which has made the South a conspicuous element in international commerce. Here, again, the aggressive leadership of the interested executives has had quite as much to do with the advancement of the industry as the accessibility of raw material or the more moderate wage scale and tax rates.

Instead of specializing on fabrics for wearing apparel during a period when style changes made such a policy highly precarious the bulk—at least 75 per cent—of the southern plants are producing textiles for industrial uses. Executives have been watchful of the successive new demands incident to the growth of industries in other parts of the world and are capitalizing these new markets to the full. Some of them have even succeeded to the extent of shipping certain types of duck fabrics—a specialty of some southern mills—to Manchester, England, in considerable quantities, which is certainly "carrying coals to Newcastle."

These facts explain the rapidly growing stake which the new South has in our foreign trade in fabricated wares, a group which accounted for some 60 per cent of the exports of the Nation as a whole in 1927 as compared with 30 per cent some 25 years ago. To-day our trade in wholly and partly manufactured goods is valued at about $2,000,000,000, in which the South has not only a substantial share but one that is increasing more rapidly than that of any other part of the Nation.

INCREASED OVERSEAS BUSINESS

This is a commerce which is entirely different from our old pre-war trade. In the "medieval" years before 1914 our commerce was made up either of self-selling staples requiring no particular sales effort abroad or a very few patented specialties produced by large companies.

In fact, it has been stated that 90 per cent of our manufactured exports in those days came from some 15 or 20 concerns. To-day our overseas traffic in manufactured lines is built up largely by contributions from thousands of small manufacturers who have learned that there is no deep secret in successful exporting which can not be shared by small firms.

These are the factors that explain the impressive increases in export tonnage moving out of southern ports, which handled nearly half of the total of the United States, even counting the international Great Lakes trade last year. The increase in the ports south of Baltimore was from 18,000,000 to 33,400,000 tons of export tonnage, or about 84 per cent, from 1923 to 1926. It is true that the abnormally high figure of the later year is accountable in part because of the heavy coal shipments from Baltimore and Hampton Roads during the British coal strike, but even if we exclude these ports the increase in that period of years was 24 per cent.

All of this means vastly improved port facilities, such as are evident in Charleston, Jacksonville, Miami, Mobile, New Orleans, and Galveston, to mention only a few of the renewed gateways of the South. Galveston alone showed a higher export value in 1926 than the combined shipments of all Pacific coast ports—$534,000,000 as compared with $519,000,000. New Orleans was almost on the same level, with $414,000,000. Raw materials, especially cotton and oil, naturally supplied the bulk of the tonnage, but there also was a rapidly mounting proportion of steel, lumber, finished woodwork, textiles, cement, machinery, and numerous other whole or partly fabricated lines. It must be borne in mind that heavy raw material movements have a significant function in rendering available the shipping and the sea lanes, which can then be most advantageously exploited by available manufactured exports.

For the further expansion of this trade the South has the substantial advantage of easy accessibility to the great markets in which the bulk of the demand for fabricated lines originates—namely, Latin America and the Far East. The markets immediately to the south of us around the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean absorbed about $225,000,000 worth of American goods each year during 1910–1914.

TRADE IN CARIBBEAN

This represented approximately 9 per cent of our total exports. To-day, however, they have nearly trebled their purchases from us, the total being $603,000,000 in 1926, or nearly 13 per cent of our total sales abroad. Even with substantial deductions for price increases this represents an impressive growth in demand from a market which is right at the doorstep of the new South.

The significant thing, however, for our new southern industries is the fact that this Caribbean and Gulf trade is evidently just in its infancy. According to the above figures, our per capita sales there are about $14 as compared with about $60 in Porto Rico. It is perhaps expecting too much to anticipate a comparable adjustment in purchasing power throughout the neighboring islands and adjoining mainland, but there is certainly room for a doubling of our trade in those regions as their resources are extensively exploited and corresponding stimulus is given to wages and general standards of living. Within a very few years the South should have immediately accessible beyond its southern horizon a market whose annual purchases should total at least $1,000,000,000 of American merchandise.

It is well to bear in mind that many of the industries in northern Latin America are closely comparable to those which have been developed in the new South—sugar refining, oil-well operations, subtropical fruit, and lumber undertakings, etc. Much of the equipment and expert personnel for these new developments should logically originate in the South, as is indeed already the case in many instances.

Incidentally it might be noted that this growing expansion of southward exports by no means involves a life-and-death struggle with European competitors. The real detriment of the potentialities for our trade there is the strengthening of per capita buying power as the result of improved standards of living, more stable political conditions, and new exploitations of raw materials. All of these factors will create openings for European as well as American merchandise. If the experience of the southern factories in recent years is any criterion, we may expect a good portion of this new trade to fall into their hands.

The west coast of South America has been made immediately accessible to southern ports by the opening of the Panama Canal, which lies almost directly south of the tip of Florida. If we include the markets of the whole western seaboard of Latin America, from lower California to Cape Horn, we discover that whereas the United States supplied about 32 per cent of their total imports in the pre-war days, our proportion at present is about 50 per cent and is steadily increasing. Here again the South is contributing substantially, and much of the stimulation of port improvement along the south Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf is in anticipation of a further increase in this traffic.

ON EVE OF EXPANSION

The same general situation holds true in the Far East, where wartime isolation brought into great activity a whole category of new industries—textile mills, iron works, plantations, oil wells, etc.—many of which draw heavily upon the South for supplies, either of raw materials, fabricated equipment, or of wares for the newly stimulated demands of wage earners.

There is every evidence that the South is on the eve of a vast expansion of her foreign trade, not so much along the old lines of passive raw-material distribution, but rather by the introduction of a healthy diversification through increased sales of fabricated wares. In the readiness and alert resourcefulness of her industrial leaders in meeting new problems, in the multitude of her supplies of necessary raw material, in the abundance of her water power and fuel, in the up-to-date equipment of her many ports, and in her proximity to nearby markets, and to well-traveled sea lanes leading to others of vast potentiality, she enjoys a combination of advantages that are unique and of compelling power.

AMENDMENTS TO LAWS AFFECTING DISABLED VETERANS

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I present several bills for reference to the Finance Committee, proposing amendments to the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended; amendments to the World War veterans' act, 1924; and an amendment to the law relating to medical examinations of applicants for pensions of veterans of the Civil War, Indian campaigns, and the war with Spain.

I ask that a brief statement explaining these amendments be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the ordinary RECORD type.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

First. S. 2745. An amendment to the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, providing for the extension of the time when veterans or dependents of deceased veterans may apply for adjusted-service certificates.

Under the present law veterans or the dependents of deceased veterans were required to apply before January 1, 1928.

The amendment proposed permits the filing of these applications at any time, either by the veterans or the dependents of deceased veterans.

Unofficial figures indicate that at least 400,000 veterans or their estates have failed to apply for adjusted-service certificates, to which all World War veterans are entitled. It is said that approximately 50,000 Massachusetts veterans alone have failed to apply. The Government having recognized the right of all veterans or the dependents of deceased veterans to receive this adjusted insurance, should permit persons entitled to same to make application at any time during life.

Second. S. 2746. An amendment to section 202 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, would provide the same money allowances for the dependents of veterans whose disability is rated as total and permanent as is now by law provided for the dependents of veterans whose disability is rated as total and temporary.

The law now provides compensation for dependents of veterans having a disability rating of temporary and total, but not for the dependents of veterans having a permanent and total rating. This makes an unfair distinction between temporarily disabled veterans and permanently disabled ones.

The United States is the only country in the world which does not recognize dependency on a total and permanent disability rating of its veterans.

Third. S. 2747. An amendment to section 202 of the World War veterans' act of 1924, would extend free out-patient treatment in Veterans' Bureau hospitals and dispensaries for any disease or injury, without regard to its nature or origin, to the veterans of all wars who are now receiving a pension or compensation from the Government.

Under the present law only veterans of the World War are entitled to out-patient treatment at the Veterans' Bureau hospitals.

The facilities at the disposal of the doctors in the Veterans' Bureau hospitals are so complete that no great expense will be entailed by granting this out-patient treatment to the pensioners, etc., of other wars.

There are many veterans of the Civil and Spanish Wars and the Indian campaigns living at home who require periodical medical attention and treatment and, under existing laws, are unable to get this treatment except at the hospitals maintained by the soldiers' homes or at their own expense.

Fourth. S. 2748. An amendment to section 200 of the World War veterans' act of 1924 would classify veterans suffering from chronic diseases of the heart or circulatory system, diabetes, or nephritis within the presumptive clause of this section.

At present veterans suffering from any of these diseases, in order to get a favorable decision on a claim for compensation, must show, by the presentation of medical evidence, that these diseases, or any one of them, existed within one year from the date of discharge from the service, and that the disability was actually a service-connected one.

This proposal would presume a service connection of these diseases if shown existent prior to January, 1921. And, further, would amend the present law, in so far as these four diseases are concerned, so that any veterans concerned may file their claims for compensation at any time within one year from the date of enactment of this amendment.

The law now requires these claims be filed within five years from the date of discharge from the service.

Fifth. S. 2749. An amendment providing for the medical examination of pensioners and claimants for pensions by the United States Veterans' Bureau.

Under present laws pensioners and claimants must be examined by the regular medical boards of the Pension Bureau convened from time to time as exigencies require, at central points throughout the Union.

With the extension of medical and clerical facilities of the Veterans' Bureau it is thought that the work and expense of conducting these examinations under this new plan will tend to simplify matters and conduce to a more efficient handling of this work.

Sixth. S. 2750. An amendment to existing law providing for the admission of sons of deceased veterans, or veterans injured in line of duty, under certain condition, to Military Academy at West Point and Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Under an act of Congress approved June 8, 1926, the President may appoint 40 cadets to the Military Academy and 40 midshipmen to the Naval Academy from among the sons of officers, sailors, soldiers, and marines who were killed in action or died prior to July 2, 1926, of wounds contracted in line of duty during the World War.

The amendment proposed would broaden the scope of this law and provide that the President include among his 80 appointments the sons of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines who were disabled to a compensable degree during the World War.

Under operation of the present law, only 5 appointments to West Point and only 2 to Annapolis were made in the first year, leaving 73 vacancies. The proposed amendment would give equal opportunity to sons of disabled, as well as deceased, officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines to take advantage of this opportunity to enter these academies.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (S. 2745) to extend indefinitely the time for filing application for the benefits of the World War adjusted compensation act;

A bill (S. 2746) to amend an act entitled "World War veterans' act, 1924," as amended, approved June 7, 1924;

A bill (S. 2747) to amend the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, in respect of out-patient treatment;

A bill (S. 2748) to amend section 200 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended;

A bill (S. 2749) providing for the medical examination of pensioners and claimants for pensions by the United States Veterans' Bureau; and

A bill (S. 2750) authorizing the appointment of cadets at the United States Military Academy and midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy from among the sons of disabled veterans of the World War.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. McKELLAR, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2015) to authorize the creation of organized rural communities to demonstrate methods of reclamation and benefits of planned rural development, and it was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

SIGN-POSTING WORK ON HIGHWAYS

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1341) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. COPELAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COPELAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the War Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1929, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page —, line —, insert the following:

"Provided further, That not to exceed $15,000 of this appropriation shall be expended for continuing work incident to and of repairing the old building known as the "Castle" at Fort Niagara, N. Y., and in addition to this amount the Secretary of War is authorized to expend such sums as may be contributed from private sources for the rehabilitation of such old building."

COMMITTEE SERVICE

On motion of Mr. WATSON, and by unanimous consent, it was—

Ordered, That Mr. GOFF be excused from further service as a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that Mr. MOSES be assigned to service on the committee.

CHARLES EVANS HUGHES'S HABANA ADDRESS

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very notable speech made on last Saturday night by former Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes, chairman of the American delegation at the Pan American Congress in Habana, Cuba.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Hughes's speech is as follows:

We are charmed with Cuba. Our eyes rest with delight upon the beauty of Habana. Our hearts respond with gratitude and affection to the eloquent words of the President of Cuba and to the warm greetings of the Cuban people. We feel that we are identified with you in spirit and bound to you by the ties of sacred memories and invincible aspirations.

We cherish the thought that Cuba, in her liberty and independence, is the vindication of the idealism of the people of the United States. It is that idealism which at the very beginning, during the struggles of over 100 years ago, nurtured our policy in this hemisphere. It is that idealism which has ever been the guardian of our liberty at home.

DOMINATED BY IDEALS

You will find us keen in trade, zealous for the advantages of commercial intercourse, but no one knows us well who fails to recognize, despite all our shortcomings, the dominance among us of the ideals of independence and democracy. These brought us to the aid of Cuba in 1898, and again summoned us with imperative command to take our part in the titanic contest of the World War. You can not adequately explain the United States in statistics of population, of commerce, or of wealth. There is a power above all these which gives final direction to our public opinion and establishes the standards of our statesmanship, according to which we take measure of executives and legislators.

If you would find what we worship in our inmost thoughts, do not rest content with going to our marts, but visit our shrines. We like to be thought shrewd, but we erect no monuments to mere shrewdness. We reserve our highest veneration for the greatest exemplars of liberty and independence—Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln. They are still, and I trust ever will be, the true spokesmen of the American spirit.

But this idealism is that of practical and industrious people. We rejoice with you in the material gains of progress. With vast and increasing populations there must be opportunities well used, to give talent its proper play and workers their full reward, or we should have the discontent that leads to anarchy rather than the cooperative efforts which give better standards of living and a widely diffused prosperity. The advancement of civilization is in the care of the factory, the plantation, the markets of commerce, as well as the halls of learning. Progress must have its economic basis, and the commercial movement between North America and Latin America is one which in the main is equally satisfactory to the statesmen and the economist. The steady development of our commercial exchanges reflects the contrasts of products and of industrial needs.

Latin-American products for the main part are typically those which either are not produced in North America or are produced there only to a degree insufficient to fill the national needs. Conversely, the typical products of the United States, so far as they enter foreign commerce, are those which in large measure are not produced in Latin America or are produced there in amounts insufficient to satisfy national demands. There can be no better basis for the development of international exchanges advantageous to all concerned. Along with this development has come a rising purchasing power, notable both in the United States and in many Latin-American States. This has been particularly the case in Cuba, which has developed per capital imports exceeded by few countries in the world and equaled by no other Latin-American country. The statistics showing the growth of economic relations between American countries in the last 25 years emphasizes the growing unity of economic interest.

In 1910–1914 exports from the United States to Latin America had already reached a value of over $302,000,000 a year. But the steadily increasing demands of the Latin-American countries have now pushed the total far above that level. The total exports from the United States to Latin America in 1926 were over $872,000,000, or more than two and one-half times the value a quarter of a century earlier, showing an absolute gain over the pre-war years of $570,000,000.

But the growth of purchases by the United States in Latin America has been even more remarkable. In 1910–1914 these purchases had a value of $435,000,000; but the purchases of the United States in Latin America rose in 1926 to $1,094,000,000, an increase of over 250 per cent, and a gain in total of $659,000,000.

REVIEWS TRADE FIGURES

It is especially gratifying for the people of Cuba and the United States to consider the growth in the commercial exchange between the two countries. Imports into the United States from Cuba have risen from $122,000,000 in 1910–1914 to an average of almost $300,000,000 for the period 1921–1925. Exports to Cuba from the United States in the same periods have grown from $63,000,000 to $181,000,000.

There are developments long planned and partially achieved in both countries which have been of the greatest importance. I refer to our national highway building programs. Land and other forms of wealth have but little value when they are inaccessible or difficult of access. Nothing is of greater importance to the development of an appropriately diffused prosperity than the establishment of efficient highways. The plans for the promotion of public health through advanced measures of sanitation, for increased facilities for public education, for the better utilization of natural resources; these are basic conditions of economic advance.

We could not be satisfied with the expansion of commercial relations if these contacts failed to develop a better understanding and a more comprehensive and sympathetic view of the lives and the problems of our peoples. We need the clear analysis of facts, the intellectual grasp, the open mind with its scientific method and its unbiased conclusions.

But we wish more than intellectual appreciation. Understanding is of the heart. There must be the sympathetic interest which ripens quickly into esteem and affection. There is no guaranty of friendship in disregard of differences.

The difference in individuals, groups, and nations save life from monotony and give to our contacts a never-failing fascination. But, however noteworthy the varieties of our particular environments, our resemblances are more fundamental than our differences. Even our problems, to the keen observer, have many elements in common. Underneath the superficial contrasts there is the bond of fellowship between democratic peoples in their age-long quest of solidarity, efficiency, and equal justice. It may be a long journey to our goal, but we are on the way. At the sixth Pan American Conference we are taking counsel together to help us onward.

In the eloquent address of the President of Cuba at the opening of the conference he said: "Pan Americanism is not merely the result of covenants, treaties, or noble institutions, it is also and primarily public spirit, will of the people, and collective ideal."

Pan America rests upon four pillars. The first is independence. It is the firm policy of the United States to respect the territorial integrity of the American republics. We have no policy of aggression. We wish for all of them, not simply those great in area and population and wealth but for every one, to the very smallest, strength and not weakness. What a fatuous idea it would be to think that the United States desired that any of these states should be weak or the prey of disorder! There is no promise for the United States in that. We do not wish their territory. We have troubles enough at home without seeking responsibilities abroad. The rights we assert for ourselves we accord to others. Nothing could be happier for the United States than that all the countries in the region of the Caribbean should be strong, self-sufficient, fulfilling their destiny, settling their problems, with peace at home and the fulfillment of their obligations abroad. It is in the strength of these powers, as equal and responsible states, and not in the weakness of any, that lies our confidence for future tranquillity and the mutual benefits of intercourse.

STABILITY VITAL FACTOR

The second pillar of Pan Americanism is stability. Independence is not enough. Independence gives opportunity, but stability is essential to take advantage of it. It is our desire to encourage stability in the interest of independence.

Let me recall to you an illustration. Several years ago, in circumstances which it is not necessary for me to reveal, the United States entered Santo Domingo. But what did we do? Did we endeavor to stay? On the contrary, we labored to get out. It would have been very easy to remain, but the Government of the United States was most solicitous to arrange for the termination of its occupation and the withdrawal of its forces, and endeavored earnestly and successfully to aid the Dominican people in establishing a sound basis for an independent government.

The leaders of all parties were brought together for consultation. A plan of evacuation was agreed upon; arrangements were made for a provisional government and for the establishment of a permanent government. These arrangements were carried out and the United States withdrew. It was my happy privilege to be associated with these endeavors which had this successful fruition. If we had cherished an imperialistic purpose, we would have remained in Santo Domingo, but we withdrew. We would leave Haiti at any time that we had reasonable expectations of stability and could be assured that the withdrawal would not be the occasion for a recurrence of bloodshed.

Meanwhile, we are endeavoring in every important direction to assist in the establishment of conditions for stability and prosperity, not that we may stay in Haiti but that we may get out at the earliest opportunity. We are at this moment in Nicaragua, but what we are doing there and the commitments we have made are at the request of both parties and in the interest of peace and order and a fair election. We have no desire to stay. We wish Nicaragua to be strong, prosperous, and independent. We entered to meet an imperative but temporary exigency, and we shall retire as soon as it is possible.

FOES OF GOOD WILL NOISY

The third pillar of Pan Americanism is mutual good will. Strong and stable governments that do not trust each other afford no assurance of peace and beneficent collaboration. Good will does not mean identity of views. It is not jeopardized by candid, but at all times, friendly expressions, albeit there are differences of opinion. The enemies of good will are on every hand. There are those who seek to find in every act a wrongful motive, who poison the air with suspicion, who will never be content. For, as the great English wit, Sidney Smith, once said: "You can never make those content whose game is not to be content." Fortunately, these enemies of happy relations between our countries are few. They are noisy; they are constantly active, but after all they can not affect the deep currents of our life.

There was once a catechism which I understand contained this question: "What is the difference between the Lord and the devil?" And the answer was: "The Lord excels the devil in original power, but the devil makes up for it in infernal activity."

Good will rests on mutual respect, upon a common appreciation that each harbors no mistrust of the other. In international relations justice is the impregnable foundation of good will, but confidence in the sincerity of each other is essential. We desire the wide dissemination of information, but unfortunately good works, the calm and quiet efforts of those who have the good will of nations at heart, rarely contain elements of sensation. The enemies of our peace and happiness often get the center of the stage and their declamations fill the air. But this need not discourage us. In the case of an honorable individual we know that it is his reputation with his intimates—with those who know his purposes and activities—that gradually extends in ever-widening circles until it becomes proof against any possible assault. So it is with nations. There are those who in the intimacies of international intercourse know the truth. Nations which conduct themselves justly and aim to establish relations of mutual advantage with other nations, which respect the rights of others and discharge their own international obligations, will acquire a reputation which can not successfully be assailed.

In the promotion of good will organizations like this chamber of commerce have an important rôle. The honorable transaction of business is as important as the honorable conduct of diplomacy. We all have in our care, to some extent, the reputation of our country, and if each of us lives up to his opportunity we need have no fear of the attacks of either ignorance or malice.

PEACE PATH TO PROSPERITY

The fourth pillar of Pan Americanism is cooperation. Peace and good will are not ends, but means. They give us the promise but not the fruit. It is in our working together that we reap the benefits which friendly relations should bestow. Cooperation among the Pan American States does not mean the organization of a superstate. It does not mean that any of the 21 American Republics or any group of these Republics will attempt to dominate others. It is the cooperation of equals for common advantage in those directions where there is prospect of success.

Cooperation does not mean that we should ignore differences in conditions and in the varied circumstances surrounding our lives. It means mutual helpfulness, where we can be of assistance by doing together what we can not so well do alone.

It is not for us to be wearied with futile anxieties about the future. It is for us, in our day and generation, to play our part. And if we do that with sincerity of purpose and an earnest desire to advance the cause of civilization so far as it is in our keeping, future generations will rejoice in the inheritance of our labors.

PROPOSED FEDERAL DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hold in my hand an article which appeared in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, entitled "Dangerous to the Nation and especially to the South," written by one of the greatest men of the Nation, Bishop Warren A. Candler, a great author and a great statesman. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

Education next to religion affects most influentially and vitally the life of any people, and hence it should be most carefully fostered and safeguarded.

This is especially true of a nation organized as is our Federal Union.

In the matter of education the Federal Government has neither the right nor the duty to interfere with its authority.

Nevertheless, a bill to establish a Federal department of education, like that of the Department of the Interior and other executive departments, has been pressed for adoption by the Congress during the last several years.

This measure has been introduced in the present Congress. Lobbyists and agitators are urging its passage, and the President has recommended it in his last annual message.

To create a department of religion would not be more unreasonable or more dangerous than would be the erection of a department of education.

But while the pending bill has strong and organized support, both within and without the Congress, the great majority of the American people are not awake to the peril which would most certainly arise from the adoption of this mischievous measure.

Wise and patriotic men in both Houses of the Federal Congress have been able to defeat the measure heretofore, but they have not had from their constituents the support to which their wisdom and fidelity entitled them.

Members of Congress from the South have opposed it unanimously, and they have done well to oppose it, as will appear from an argument for the bill which was published in a number of church papers of the North some weeks ago.

The writer approaches the subject with a seductive and sinister appeal to sectionalism and partisanism, as a few paragraphs from it show most clearly. He begins with a reference to the discussion of the right of the two Senators elect from Illinois and Pennsylvania to take their seats in the Senate, and proceeds to say:

"The right of the negro citizens to cast their ballots for Federal officials promises to split the forthcoming Congress into sharply defined camps. Machine politics in Pennsylvania have become so notorious that sponsors for that State plan to counter by uncovering conditions in the South. Thus ghosts of the Civil War and reconstruction period threaten to parade up and down the aisles of Congress. Out of political wrongs occurring in the Keystone State great evils which have denied civic justice to thousands of colored citizens may be righted.

"Many a United States Senator is being kept on the anxious bench because with the first days of Congress the controversy will be resumed over seating Senators-elect Frank L. Smith, of Illinois, and WILLIAM S. VARE, of Pennsylvania. In the long-drawn-out and bitter debate over this question, a debate which lasted through a continuous session of days and nights, it was brought out that in certain of the election districts controlled by the Vare machine in Philadelphia not a vote was reported as cast for the opponent of Senator-elect VARE. This seemed to indicate that either the Democrats and anti-Vare citizens did not dare to vote or, if they did vote, their ballots were not counted.

"When the Southern Democrats, headed by Senator REED of Missouri, entered actively into an effort to block the admission of the Republican Senator elect from Pennsylvania into the Senate, Senator REED of Pennsylvania made some rather ominous threats. He declared that if districts in his State where no Democratic votes were cast were to be investigated then districts in the Southern States in which no Republican votes were counted would also be investigated. This threat made legislators from many of the Southern Commonwealths look uneasy.

"The Pennsylvania Senator, noting the consternation caused by his remarks, followed on with statistics in which he pointed out districts in the South having thousands of registered voters in which not a single Republican vote was counted. He had no trouble in proving that thousands of educated and respected citizens of the colored race were not permitted to cast their ballots for the President of the United States.

"Thus it is seen that the Smith and Vare contests are likely to open the way for a bitter political and racial debate which will cause a nation-wide stir."

Then, after giving what the writer calls the "history of negro suffrage," he closes his article with these significant paragraphs:

"When the debates in the Senate over the alleged corruption in the election of a Senator in Pennsylvania are reopened the question of the denial of the ballot to millions of negroes in the South will come to the front. It is to be hoped that while a political house cleaning is going on in Pennsylvania the whole Nation may be aroused to clean out political corruption wherever it exists.

"As far as the South is concerned, there are men and women prominent in public affairs and of both parties who believe a change should come respecting the franchise rights there. Such citizens of every section would unite in placing suffrage, irrespective of color, upon the basis of true and able citizenship. Every community should have the opportunity of protecting itself from a mass movement of ignorance, whether it be white or black, political or social. This does not mean that any disqualification should be based upon color. Let there be set up proper standards of education and conduct and make all people of whatever color who choose to exercise the full right of citizenship measure up to these.

"The forthcoming strife in Congress over this question will reveal the need there is for a Federal department of education, that all children living under the Stars and Stripes may have equal opportunity to prepare for their civic duties. It will further reveal the justice of basing representation in Congress upon the number of citizens voting in elections rather than on the numerical census of a State. It will also show the need there is for all the moral and Christian agencies of the Nation to fight on to overcome political evils and social injustice and to establish those principles of justice and fair dealing which are founded upon the Scriptural injunction: 'Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.'"

The southern people have shown no opposition to the education of the negro. Southern legislatures have taxed southern white people—who pay most of the taxes—to provide schools and colleges for the negroes.

Southern churches have expended many thousands of dollars in the establishment and maintenance of educational institutions to prepare negro teachers and preachers for their work.

Indeed, the southern people have done more for the education of the southern negroes than all the northern boards of philanthropists combined have done; and their zeal for such work is right and praiseworthy. They will doubtless do more in the future.

But they will not, and ought not, to agree to Federal interference with the educational efforts and enterprises which they have so wisely and generously put forth for the welfare of the negroes among them.

Such interference by the Federal Government would lead inevitably to racial antagonisms and irritations. It would not help either race but would hurt both.

No Federal department of education is required for the promotion of the education of the negro.

The States on the Pacific coast need no such meddlesome department to solve for them the race issues which confront them.

No section of the country needs any such department as is proposed.

The national bureau of education is a Federal instrumentality which goes quite far enough in the direction of Federal supervision of education in the United States.

The American people are really and seriously threatened by a dangerous form of bureaucracy, centralized at Washington, and constantly calling for larger and larger appropriations with each successive year.

The measure proposed for the establishment of a department of education at Washington served by an expensive staff of secretaries, and sending its agents and supervisors into all the States, is a most dangerous form of centralization—perilous to the whole country, and especially dangerous to the South.

It is quite evident that there is no natural or logical connection between the seating of the Senators elect from Illinois and Pennsylvania and the establishment of a Federal department of education. The article moves along through a current of antisouthern criticism to its objective, which objective is the rallying of northern sentiment to the support of this thoroughly unwise and unconstitutional measure which is packed as full of evils as the Trojan horse was full of Greeks.

ADDRESS BY WILLIAM GREEN, PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, on January 13 of this year Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, delivered a very thoughtful and able address before the Chicago Bar Association on the subject of "Economic Freedom and Industrial Peace." I ask unanimous consent that that address may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows.

ECONOMIC FREEDOM AND INDUSTRIAL PEACE

The human race has ever sought the enjoyment of freedom. It has learned, however, that this can only be secured and maintained within certain prescribed legal limitations. Men can not be free like the wild beasts of the forest or the birds of the air. Society must be protected through the imposition of self-restraint and the adoption and enforcement of laws which will operate to protect and safeguard the rights of all. We can only enjoy liberty within the law and establish freedom when we maintain a proper regard for the rights of others.

All attempts to suppress human liberty and the exercise of individual and collective rights incite conflict and invite reprisal. This human characteristic has manifested itself at every stage of the world's history and has been the mainspring of the world's social and political progress. Invariably all attempts of one group of society to dominate and control another group are based upon some form of selfishness and greed. They usually grow out of a clashing of interests, either financial, economic, or political. Behind all the achievement of modern civilization lie centuries of intense struggle, great sacrifice, and determined effort.

This has been the bitter experience of the men and women of labor. From the days of barbarism and feudalism they have fought, with courage and determination, for the realization of economic and political freedom. Their heroic deeds as they broke the legal, social, and economic bonds which held them constitute a glorious page in the world's history. They lifted themselves through their own efforts from one social level to another, because they were inspired by an imperishable idealism and a consciousness and understanding of their individual and collective rights. Through all these changing periods in the social and economic status of labor the workers learned many valuable lessons. Organization and collective action grew out of these experiences. The value of concerted effort and cooperation became better understood.

The growth of trade unions paralleled the development and growth of corporations. This was a natural, logical consequence of our modern factory system and a rational development of our expanding industrial life.

The organization of working men and women represents the mobilization of their collective resources and economic strength. It stands as a protection against exploitation and serves as an instrumentality through which they may advance and promote their common interests. The gradual substitution of collectivity among working people for individualism in industry provoked hostility and opposition among many employers of labor. The exercise of the right of the working people to organize was not only challenged but also bitterly opposed. This has led to the extended and constantly broadening use by many employers of court injunctions in labor controversies.

It is this kind of opposition which has led labor to vigorously protest against the character of injunctions, with their broad and sweeping terms, issued against labor restraining it from doing things which it firmly believes it has a legal and moral right to do. This policy of fighting trade-unions through the use of injunctions is embittering labor. It reasons that in many instances the courts place themselves on the side of corporations and big business in their attempts to destroy labor organizations. The situation growing out of the use of court injunctions has become acute. Labor regards it as its most serious problem. It is a real grievance against which labor emphatically complains, smarting under a deep sense of wrong and injustice. Labor is determined to seek legislative redress from the destructive effects of court injunctions.

The question of economic freedom is involved in this court-injunction problem. Shall the right of labor to organize, to function, to solicit members, and to strike be abridged? Shall labor be free, economically free, and may it enjoy the rights and privileges which economic freedom guarantees? What shall be the answer to these questions?

In the Bedford Cut Stone Co. case an injunction was granted which restrained members of the Journeymen Stone Cutters' Association of North America from refusing to set stone manufactured by a company which refused to employ these union men in their quarries. By this action union men were compelled to work against their will and to serve a corporation indirectly, at least which would not employ them or any of their union members in the quarries where the stone was manufactured for use. The injunction in this case was based upon the allegation that the acts of the union stonecutters constituted an interference with interstate commerce. Upon this point Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice Holmes, in a vigorous dissenting opinion, stated: "If on the undisputed facts of this case refusal to work can be enjoined, Congress created by the Sherman law and the Clayton Act an instrument for imposing restraints upon labor which reminds of involuntary servitude."

This solemn warning of these two distinguished jurists made a deep impression on the hearts and minds of labor. The very suggestion that labor, through judicial interpretation and the use of the injunction, might be reduced to a condition of involuntary servitude arouses and intensifies the determination of labor to be free. A choice must be made between the exercise of the right of workingmen to be the master of their own labor power, to give service or withhold service at will and as free men and a condition bordering on involuntary servitude.

Free men shrink from the contemplation of a condition where, through a court order, labor would be completely stripped of the use of its economic strength, the only power which working men and women can exercise as a means of protection against tyranny, injustice, and oppression. The right of labor to organize has been recognized and conceded by the courts and by a crystallized public opinion. If it may enjoy this right, then it should be permitted to function. If labor may organize but can not use its economic strength for its own protection, when organized, then the recognition of the right to organize is meaningless. If it is an illegal organization, why not say so! Why say unions may exist and then enjoin them from exercising their normal functions?

There are numerous other injunctions which have recently issued against labor which in force and effect reduce labor to a condition approximating economic bondage. In the Schoonmaker injunction, issued a short time ago, it was held that a refusal to mine coal and a resort to picketing at the mine, where a strike was declared constituted interference with interstate commerce and bonding companies were restrained from furnishing bonds in appeals taken in house-eviction cases. In the first Coronado case the United States Supreme Court held that "Coal mining is not interstate commerce and the power of Congress does not extend to its regulation as such." In view of these apparently contradictory decisions it is impossible for labor to know or understand what constitutes a conspiracy to interfere with the shipment of goods in interstate commerce.

The whole legal status of labor is uncertain and unknown. We find to our surprise, when a new injunction is issued—more sweeping and comprehensive than the one which preceded it—that labor is enjoined from doing many things it had been doing without question for many decades. In the midst of all the confusion which has been created through the issuance of injunctions affecting labor, working men and women hold that it is more essential to the preservation of the Republic that labor should remain free, economically and industrially free, than that some corporation's goods should, at the cost of the exploitation of unprotected workers, be shipped in interstate commerce. Human rights should take precedence over property rights.

It is this distinction which labor seeks to legally establish through the passage of legislation which it proposes as a remedy for court injunctions. We propose that the equity courts return to the original purpose and use of the equity power, which was the protection of physical, tangible, transferable property. This was the practice followed in England from which we inherited our system of jurisprudence. Injunctions are not used in labor disputes in England but they are on the increase here. The power of the equity courts is not invoked in controversies between employers and employees there. Houses, land, money, buildings, supplies, and materials are property. Let this and all other tangible, transferable property be protected through the use of the injunction, if threatened with irreparable injury, when there is no remedy at law.

It is the classification of business, barter, good will, and other intangible values as property and subject to equity jurisdiction which forms the basis of many applications for injunctions. Labor holds that legal proceedings dealing with these values should be instituted and dealt with in the law courts instead of the equity courts.

We believe that Congress intended through the passage of the Clayton Act that labor should be made free and that this legislation would accord labor relief from injunctions and the antitrust provisions of the Sherman Act. Labor was thrilled when it learned that Congress incorporated in the provisions of the Clayton law the declaration that "the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce."

President Wilson in a letter to Representative Underwood, dated October 17, 1914, stated:

"Incidentally justice has been done the laborer. His labor is no longer to be treated as if it were merely an inanimate object of commerce, disconnected from the fortunes and happiness of a living human being, to be dealt with as an object of sale and barter. But that, great as it is, is hardly more than the natural and inevitable corollary of a law whose object is individual freedom and initiative as against any kind of private domination."

Later, at the dedication of the American Federation of Labor Building, on July 4, 1916, President Wilson expressed himself as follows:

"Referring to the sixth section of the Clayton antitrust law, the section in which the obvious is stated, namely, that a man's labor is not a commodity but a part of his life, and that, therefore, the courts must not treat it as if it were a commodity, but must treat it as if it were a part of his life. I am sorry that there were any judges in the United States who had to be told that. It is so obvious that it seems to me that that section of the Clayton Act were a return to the primer of human liberty; but if the judges have to have a primer opened before them, I am willing to open it. If any part of the United States through habit, through ancient prejudice, through long addiction to technical ideas, insists upon living in an age which everyone else with his eyes open knows has gone by, why then we have got to sound some great note that will wake them up, but wake them up always to the same thing with which we would thrill as well as others; that it is take as well as give; that the other man has as much right as we have; that we are not to seek for an advantage but for an equality; that though we have been put upon, we do not desire to see any other man put upon, or any other class, but that we should all have as our highest ideal merely to bask in that only nourishing sun that has ever shown on the human heart—the sun of justice and of truth and of humanity."

The New York World in an editorial on October 18, 1914, stated:

"The Clayton antitrust bill, signed yesterday by the President, may not be the last word on the subject, but it ends for the time being an agitation that has been in progress for years and it is a fulfillment of another emphatic party promise. To the extent that it relieves labor unions, lawfully conducted, from the pains and penalties of the Sherman Act it is the most important legislative reversal of judicial decisions that has taken place in this country since the Dred Scott judgment was overturned by civil war. In other respects, as affecting the administration of the antitrust law, extending its scope and clarifying some of its meanings, it is quite as notable. No ceremony attended the approval of this measure, and yet it is likely to be regarded hereafter as the world-mark of justice and progress."

My predecessor, the late Samuel Gompers, expressed abiding faith in the remedial features of the Clayton Act. After the passage of the Clayton antitrust bill he stated:

"The Clayton antitrust bill that has been passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate declared as a legal principle of the law of our land the declaration: 'The labor power of a human being is not a commodity or an article of commerce.' That is the reason for declaring that labor organizations do not come under the provisions of trust legislation and that their legitimate activities can not be restrained or forbidden. This principle is the basis upon which all industrial liberty depends. It is the Magna Charta of America's workers. The labor provisions of this measure embody the highest full conception of industrial freedom ever enacted into law. The declaration contained in section 7 of the Clayton antitrust bill is of the greatest significance—it deals with the fundamentals of industrial freedom * * *."

The late Senator Albert B. Cummins stated when the Clayton Act became a law:

"The labor sections of the Clayton Act are not a license to do wrong but a grant of liberty to do right. The value of the legislation is found in the recognition of the everlasting difference between the conscious capacity of man to accomplish something and the inanimate commodity which his intelligent activity creates. It is a legislative declaration that contracts, combinations, or actions which concern only the labor of a human being do not and can not restrain trade in the sense in which the word is used in the law."

Notwithstanding these high hopes and expectations so fervently and eloquently expressed, we find that through judicial interpretation the Clayton Act has made the conditions of labor more onerous than before. The Clayton Act has not supplied the legal relief intended. We must try again. We will try again. We will urge that the original intention of Congress to accord relief to labor be carried out. Labor must be free. The shackles which prevent the full exercise of economic freedom must be removed. With an unconquerable courage labor will fight on until it is made free.

The Sherman antitrust law was originally passed in response to a public demand for protection from extortion and price control of commodities by monopolies and combinations. It was never intended to apply to labor. In the light of judicial interpretation it is my opinion that if farmers would organize and form practical and successful cooperative organizations, as suggested by certain statesmen and executives of our Government, so that they could increase the sale price of farm products, they, like labor, would be charged with conspiracy in restraint of trade and with a violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

The Sherman law has failed of its purpose. While it has borne heavily on labor and would, in my judgment, bear equally upon farmers if they were nationally organized, notwithstanding its original purpose, large corporations and large combinations of capital have been formed. The uncertainty caused to both business and labor through a full and complete understanding of its scope and meaning is an impediment to industrial progress and economic production. The Sherman antitrust law and the Clayton Act should, in the opinion of labor, be repealed or so amended as to cause this antitrust legislation to conform to the requirement of modern industrial life.

In urging the establishment of economic freedom for labor we are willing to accord to industry the enjoyment of the same right. Artificial barriers, legal or otherwise, which interfere with economic and scientific production ought to be removed. Both labor and industry should be made free so that both may work together in developing our industrial enterprises to the highest point of efficiency and productivity.

Economic freedom and industrial peace are not mere ideals about which we may speculate without hope of practical realization. The enjoyment of both are within the range of human possibilities.

Obviously industrial peace is predicated upon the establishment of economic freedom. When working men are free they do not think in terms of hate and enmity. A favorable psychological condition is thus created so that cooperation on the part of all human factors is practiced and individual and collective efficiency is promoted.

I am very happy to know that committees representing the American Bar Association and the American Federation of Labor are making progress in the efforts they are putting forth to find a legal basis of accommodation for both employers and employees which may serve to still further the cause of industrial peace. I hope these committees will succeed in their laudable efforts.

INVESTIGATION OF SINKING OF SUBMARINE "S–4"

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution (S. Res. 109) submitted by Mr. TRAMMELL on the 12th instant to create a committee of the Senate to investigate the sinking of the submarine S–4.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we have had before the Senate for consideration the House joint resolution reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs touching this matter, and also a proposed substitute, I ask that the resolution may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

TAX REFUNDS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate another resolution coming over from a previous day.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution (S. Res. 110) submitted by Mr. HEFLIN on the 14th instant, requesting the names of certain persons receiving tax refunds.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I would like to have the resolution read as modified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the proposed modification.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Alabama modifies his resolution by inserting on page 1, line 4, after the word "refunded," the words "and the amount so refunded in each case," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate a list, by States, of the names of people to whom taxes have been refunded, and the amount so refunded in each case, in the last refund of taxes made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah wish to speak to this resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have stated to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] that I would not press the resolution if it should lead to debate. Therefore I ask that the resolution may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MOSES. What is the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a resolution presented by the Senator from Alabama calling for the names of those receiving tax refunds. If any Senator desires to speak it is in order to do so on this resolution, no matter what the subject on which he desires to speak may be.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in view of my understanding with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

FORCE AND EFFECT OF THE FOURTEENTH AND FIFTEENTH AMENDMENTS

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, whenever occasion arises that makes it desirable to influence the votes of southern Representatives in Congress, threats are made by certain parties and from certain sources to enforce the fifteenth amendment or to reduce southern representation in the House of Representatives under the second section of the fourteenth amendment, and thus curtail the political power of the South. This effort of intimidation is indulged in in order to influence southern Representatives in Congress to act contrary to their judgment and conviction. I can not too strongly express my resentment of such threatening utterances from whatsoever source they may emanate or whatever may be the motives that prompt the indulgence. The time has passed when such utterances can be effective in accomplishing results in the South. Threatening language is that used either by superiors or self-assumed superiors in addressing their supposed inferiors. I resent that any person or the representative of any constituency in this Union should arrogate to himself the authority to indulge in the menacing language which is so frequently applied to the South. The time is passed in the history of this country when the South is subject to hostile and repressive supervision or can be intimidated by partisan vituperation. The time has been auspiciously reached when this Republic is a Union of 48 States equal in rights, equal in privileges, and each State equal in every respect to every other. Those who now repeat the bitter animadversions of the sixties and seventies should realize that certain victorious States no longer hold 11 of their sister States under military domination and control. These 11 States as members of the Union are in no sense whatever inferior or subordinate, and purpose to assert and maintain their rights as defined in the Federal Constitution.

The South is no mendicant asking favors, and the activities of the small surviving horde of harpies which once preyed upon her vitals cause her only feelings of disgust and contempt; but they serve to remind her of the horrors of its former times and confirm her in the resolve that never again shall she be cursed with the conditions which brought confusion and disaster to one of the happiest and loveliest portions of the Nation. Conscious of unswerving loyalty to the Union, conscious of her rights under the Constitution, conscious of a patriotic desire for the development of the entire country along the pathway of prosperity and justice, willing to make in the future such unstinted contributions and sacrifices to national greatness and glory as she made in the olden days, the South proposes to exercise her rights under the Constitution as her own will and judgment may dictate, undeterred by those who are controlled by either hate or ignorance.

Mr. President, let us, divesting ourselves of all partisan predilections free from all political considerations, fairly and justly examine the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments and ascertain their full import as disclosed by the circumstances surrounding their enactment and the interpretation that has been given them by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and determine whether their provisions have been violated, and conclude whether there is any necessity for further congressional action or legislation. I shall not enter into any discussion of the regularity and validity of the adoption of the amendments, a question which has been the subject of much debate and difference, since that question has been disposed of finally by the Supreme Court.

I shall not discuss the question of their wisdom or unwisdom, but in passing shall only state that many of the leaders who were most responsible for their enactment afterwards gravely doubted whether they furnished a proper solution of the problems existing in the South at the conclusion of the Civil War. Many of them in their declining years even apologized for the evils that were produced by enactments which the right-minded among their advocates designed to have the contrary effect. The disgraceful reconstruction conditions to which they led did find some apologists but no defenders.

Mr. President, it is proven by all the debates in Congress at the time, it is conceded by historians and law writers, and held by the Supreme Court that the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments were adopted to meet conditions in the South created by the large number of negroes living in that section at the conclusion of the Civil War. The thirteenth amendment abolished slavery and gave the negroes absolute freedom. The thirteenth amendment did not go any further than the abolition of slavery. It did not make a citizen of the negro and did not confer upon him the right of suffrage. The fourteenth amendment was intended to make the negro a citizen of the United States, to give him the right to contract, to sue and be sued, the full right to acquire and hold property, and "all the privileges and immunities" that appertain to a citizen of the United States. The right of suffrage was not given, but that was left absolutely in the control of the States. The Supreme Court in repeated decisions has held that the right of suffrage is not "a privilege or immunity" conferred by the fourteenth amendment, and that it does not vest suffrage in the negro or anyone else, and that under the terms of the second section the right is recognized as belonging absolutely to the States.

The thirteenth and fourteenth amendments left unchanged the exclusive jurisdiction of the States respecting the exercise of the right to vote. It was the purpose of the second section of the fourteenth amendment to induce the South to confer suffrage upon the negroes who had been freed by the thirteenth amendment, by providing for representation in the House based on population of the respective States, and for reduced representation in the proportion that citizens of the United States might be denied or abridged in their right to vote in a State except for crime or treason. The South was presented with this proposition: Enfranchise the negro and you will have full representation on the basis of your entire population; disfranchise him and your representation in Congress will be reduced to the extent of the negro population. It was hoped by those who supported this proposition that the States of the South would enfranchise the negro and thus obtain unrestricted representation and not disfranchise him and suffer reduced representation. The second section of the fourteenth amendment was very offensive to some rabid Republicans, like Sumner, of Massachusetts, because it conferred on the States of the South the power to disfranchise the negro. Senator Henderson, of Missouri, a radical Republican, when it was being considered, offered the fifteenth amendment as a substitute, but it was defeated, as it was feared at the time that it would not be ratified by a sufficient number of States. Later I shall discuss this second section and hope to convince the Senate that it is not operative and was repealed by the fifteenth amendment. The Southern States refused to confer suffrage on the negro, declining to be bribed by the offer of complete representation in Congress, knowing full well the inevitable demoralization and disaster that would follow. Disappointed at the attitude of the South on the 27th of February, 1869, Congress submitted to the States for approval the fifteenth amendment. This was intended as a settlement of the question of negro suffrage in the South. That amendment is as follows:

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. President, let us examine the suffrage situation at the time of the adoption of the fifteenth amendment, the debates in Congress disclosing the purposes sought to be accomplished by its adoption, and the decisions of the Supreme Court defining its import and meaning. Until the fifteenth amendment was adopted the States had absolute control of suffrage. Suffrage before the Revolutionary War was in the control of the Colonies, each colony fixing its own qualifications for its voters. The Articles of Confederation contained no provision affecting suffrage in the new States. The only provision in the Federal Constitution regarding suffrage is in section 2 of Article I, which is as follows:

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

This provision did nothing more than prohibit the States from having a qualification for electors of Congress different from those of electors for the most popular branch of the State legislature. Subject to this limitation the Constitution left suffrage wholly within the control of the States. At that time the respective States of the Union had varying qualifications, the matter being left, as stated, absolutely within their discretion. The right to vote, or suffrage, is still left with the States under all decisions of the Supreme Court and also in the opinion of law writers, except so far as this right may be affected by the fifteenth and nineteenth amendments.

We will now examine the fifteenth amendment and ascertain what are the rights of the States under it regarding suffrage. We may look to the proceedings and debates in Congress for light upon this question. The Supreme Court has uniformly held that to be a proper guide for information in determining the meaning to be given legislation and to constitutional amendments. On January 11, 1869, Mr. Boutwell, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, reported a resolution intended as the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution, which provided:

The right of any citizen of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of the race, color, or previous condition of slavery of any citizen or class of citizens of the United States.

The Congress shall have power to enforce by proper legislation the provisions of this article.

When this amendment was pending in the House—now, I call the attention of Senators to this—Mr. Shellabarger offered a substitute for the Boutwell resolution, as follows:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall deny or abridge to any male citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years or over, and who is of sound mind, an equal vote at all elections in the State in which he shall have such actual residence as shall be prescribed by law, except to such as have engaged or may hereafter engage in insurrection or rebellion against the United States, and to such as shall be duly convicted of treason, felony, or other infamous crimes.

Now, this was offered in the House of Representatives as a substitute for the existing fifteenth amendment.

This would have conferred universal manhood suffrage on all the citizens of the United States except those who were convicted of crime and such as were disenfranchised on account of participation in the secession movement. The House defeated this proposal by a vote of 126 to 61. Thus, the House decisively refused to give the Federal Government power to require the States to confer suffrage upon all citizens of the United States 21 years of age and to give to the United States Government the right practically to institute universal manhood suffrage.

That was refused; and I can not too often iterate and reiterate that. That is the interpretation which some people now think should be given to the fifteenth amendment—a provision that was rejected in the House of Representatives by a vote of 126 to 61.

It was argued that if this should be done the Federal Government would absorb all the power of the States in connection with suffrage and elections, and the States would disappear in a consolidated Nation. It was argued that very few, if any, of the States were willing to surrender the power they then possessed in respect to suffrage and put themselves under the unlimited domination of the Federal authority. Thus, the House of Representatives by an overwhelming vote refused to approve the theory of universal suffrage which is now contended for by some as the proper interpretation of the fifteenth amendment. The proceedings in the Senate as well as in the House disclose beyond controversy that Congress intended to give this amendment no such interpretation as is now sought. The Boutwell resolution went to the Senate where it was long and elaborately debated. Mr. Stewart, chairman of the Judiciary Committee offered a substitute for the House resolution, as follows:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote and hold office shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The fifteenth amendment as it now reads does not include the words "hold office," but those words were included in that proposal.

Several amendments to this substitute were offered, some of them bestowing universal manhood suffrage as proposed in the House, but all of them were rejected. Finally, after being first defeated by a small vote, the Senate by a vote of 31 yeas to 27 nays adopted a substitute to the Stewart resolution offered by Senator Wilson, of Massachusetts, which was as follows. Now, I call attention to this substitute, which was first rejected, and then offered and adopted by a small majority.

That no discrimination shall be made in any State among the citizens of the United States in the exercise of the elective franchise or in the exercise of the right to hold office in any State, on account of race, color, nativity, property, education, or religious creed.

That amendment passed the Senate by a very small vote, and went to the House. The Senate also adopted a proposal by Senator Morton, of Indiana, making certain provisions for the election of electors for President. And so the Stewart resolution, as amended on the motion of Wilson and Morton, passed the Senate. It should be noted that this resolution provided that there should be no discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and also on account of nativity, property, education, or religious creed. Had it been submitted to the States in that form and been ratified it would have prohibited the States from establishing any property qualification or any educational qualification. When the resolution went to the House that body, by a vote of 133 to 37, refused to concur in the Senate action. Thus by an overwhelming majority the House placed its negation upon the suggestion that discrimination on property, education, nativity, and religious creed should be forbidden, and by subsequent action and judgment refused to prohibit property or educational disqualifications upon the right to vote.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. WATSON. Do I understand the purport of the Senator's argument to be that it was not the purpose of the fifteenth amendment to confer the right of suffrage on the negro, and that it does not confer that right?

Mr. SWANSON. No; my contention is that the fifteenth amendment does not confer suffrage on anybody. It prohibits any State or the United States from discriminating in suffrage on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. If the Senator will read it, he will find that that is what it says.

Mr. WATSON. I have read it. I want to get the Senator's view.

Mr. SWANSON. My view is clear, if the Senator will listen.

Mr. WATSON. I am listening. I always listen with interest to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I say that suffrage remains in the States as it existed in colonial times, Revolutionary times, and up until the fifteenth amendment was passed, except that neither a State nor the United States can pass any law discriminating on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, or on account of sex. If the Senator has not that view, he differs from every decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. WATSON. No; I am not making any contention on that. What I wanted to get at was this: The Senator's construction, then, is that under the operation of the fifteenth amendment a State may pass a property qualification or an educational qualification?

Mr. SWANSON. I shall show that the Supreme Court has said that repeatedly, if the Senator will just content himself and wait until I reach that phase of it.

Mr. WATSON. The second section of the fourteenth amendment provides, as the Senator knows, that if the States shall adopt any restriction of suffrage——

Mr. SWANSON. I will get to that. If the Senator will content himself, I will dispose of that. That is the fourteenth amendment. I am discussing the fifteenth amendment now.

Mr. WATSON. All right. I shall be glad to hear the Senator on the second section of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. All right. The Senator will hear me fully, and when I reach it he can interrupt me all he pleases. Let us not get diverted from the fifteenth to the fourteenth. The Senate did not appoint a committee of conference but receded from the Wilson and Morton amendments and yet refused to concur in the Boutwell resolution. The House adhering to its decision and the Senate refusing to concur, the Boutwell resolution was defeated.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. BORAH. When the fifteenth amendment first came over to the Senate the Senate adopted an amendment——

Mr. SWANSON. Prohibiting an educational qualification.

Mr. BORAH. Well, including that with others—nativity, education, and property. The Senate adopted that, and it went to the House and the House defeated it.

Mr. SWANSON. That is right.

Mr. BORAH. Then, when the Senate took up the fifteenth amendment on a report from its Judiciary Committee and sent it over to the House the House put on an amendment, "nativity, property, or creed," and the Senate defeated it.

Mr. SWANSON. I will show that on final judgment and debate, and its final conclusion when it passed, both the House and Senate refused to attach to the fifteenth amendment any prohibition on account of property or educational qualifications.

It is perfectly clear that the House and the Senate each refused finally to submit an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting discrimination on account of nativity, education, or property. When the status was announced in the Senate, Senator Stewart at once moved that the Senate adopt the joint resolution which had been originally proposed by Senator Henderson, and after many substitutes had been offered, each in turn defeated, it passed the Senate by a vote of 35 to 11. This resolution went to the House and was there amended and passed, as follows:

The House tried to put on, as suggested by the Senator from Idaho, an amendment to the fifteenth amendment as it passed the Senate.

The House amendment was as follows:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote and hold office should not be abridged or denied by any State on account of race, color, nativity, property, creed, or previous condition of servitude.

The House adopted that amendment to the fifteenth amendment, though it rejected it when the Senate presented it.

The Senate disagreed to the House amendments and asked for a conference, the result of which was a compromise, the House substantially receding from its modifications. The resolution as agreed upon by the conference was passed by each body and was sent to the States for ratification and became the present fifteenth amendment.

It can not be too often stated that the proposition to prohibit discrimination for any other purpose except race, color, or previous condition of servitude was rejected in both the House and the Senate. It was distinctly understood in both Houses of Congress that the resolution as passed permitted suffrage qualifications to be imposed by the States on any ground except "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." This was explicitly admitted and advanced by Senator Morton, from the State of the Senator from Indiana, who tried to enlarge the scope of the resolution, but failed, and finally voted for it as the best that could be obtained. Now I call the attention of the Senate to what this great Republican leader, Senator Morton—who, next to Senator Fessenden of Maine, was more responsible for this amendment in the Senate than all others combined—said about the fifteenth amendment.

This Republican leader spoke as follows:

The pending amendment is:

"The right of citizens of the United States to vote and hold office shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

It will be observed—

Said this Republican leader, who was leading the fight for these amendments—

That this language admits or recognizes that the whole power over the question of suffrage is vested in the several States except as it shall be limited by this amendment. It tacitly concedes that the States may disfranchise the colored people or any other class of people for other reasons save and except those mentioned in the amendment.

This amendment leaves the whole power in the States just as it exists now, except that colored men shall not be disfranchised for the three reasons of race, color, or previous condition of slavery. They may be disfranchised for want of education or for want of intelligence. The States of Louisiana and Georgia may establish regulations upon the subject of suffrage that will cut out 49 out of every 50 colored men in those States from voting, and what may be done in one of these States may, perhaps, be done in others. They may, perhaps, require property or educational tests, and that would cut off the great majority of the colored men from voting in those States, and thus this amendment would be practically defeated in all those States where the great body of the colored people live. Sir, if the power should pass into the hands of the rebel population of those States—perhaps I should beg pardon now, I should rather call it the conservative or Democratic population—if they could not debar the colored person of the right of suffrage in any other way, they would do it by an educational or a property qualification.

His view was undisputed, and it proves beyond dispute that Congress understood and it was conceded by all that if the amendment as submitted should be passed, any State could impose property or educational qualifications and that this might practically deprive nearly all the negroes of the right of suffrage. That this would be perfectly permissible, no one doubted.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from California rose first.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have listened to the words of Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana, a great Senator, a great Republican Senator. Does Senator Morton advance the thought there, or did he ever elsewhere express the thought, that a law could be passed prescribing an educational or a property qualification and made applicable to the colored man which was not equally applicable to the white man?

Mr. SWANSON. He did not, and the Supreme Court has held that any law that attempts that is null and void. The qualifications must apply to everybody, irrespective of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. I will give the Senator the decisions of the Supreme Court if he will just content himself.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I happen to know what they are.

Mr. SWANSON. I will discuss them for my own pleasure, then, and not for the Senator's enlightenment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Senator from Virginia can not enlighten me on that subject.

Mr. SWANSON. No; I could not, and I am not trying to.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Senator could not.

Mr. SWANSON. That would be a work of supererogation I should never attempt.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That would be a foolish attempt on the Senator's part.

Mr. SWANSON. I recognize that these men who stand on Mount Sinai do not need instruction. Very few people get to Mount Sinai, and I am not one of them.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; but we observe the Ten Commandments.

Mr. SWANSON. Not everybody who speaks from Mount Sinai observes them. I have found that most of the people who, subsequent to Moses, have spoken from Mount Sinai violate them. That is my experience.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, does the Senator in his speech give the names of the States which have educational qualifications?

Mr. SWANSON. I do, later in my speech.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think there is a background to the proposition, excluding education and property, that signifies a great deal. It does to me, at least. Six Northern States had just defeated negro suffrage in their respective States, and Indiana was one of them.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the Senator that there were but six States in the Union that conferred negro suffrage when the fifteenth amendment was adopted, and, as I understand, the State of Connecticut, which is ably represented in this body, rejected negro suffrage about the year before the fifteenth amendment was adopted.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Will my friend permit a kindly question?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Why, to-day, in the year of our Lord 1928, indulge in these ante-bellum arguments?

Mr. SWANSON. I am showing what the fifteenth amendment means. The people who are eternally attacking the South as violating it are mistaken.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Nobody is attacking the South.

Mr. SWANSON. The South was attacked the other day, as appears in the RECORD.

Mr. WATSON. I do not know of anyone who is taking a position opposite to that advanced by the Senator from Virginia as to the meaning of the fifteenth amendment. What I want is to have the Senator discuss the second section of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. I will do that.

Mr. WATSON. Granting that a State may pass a property qualification or an educational qualification on the right of suffrage.

Mr. SWANSON. I will discuss that.

Mr. WATSON. If the Senator will discuss that——

Mr. SWANSON. I shall discuss it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator, in the course of his discussion, explain why the people of a State can not elect their own Senator?

Mr. SWANSON. That has been discussed here by the Senate, and it is a work of supererogation to discuss it further. When a man appeals from the final judgment of a court of last resort he is engaged in folly, and I never engage in it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. A decision of the Senate is not res adjudicata.

Mr. SWANSON. It is in that matter, when it passes on it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And the doctrine of stare decisis does not prevail.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, Senator Morton prophesied that if the Conservative Party of the South should come into power, they would impose property and educational qualifications which would substantially eliminate the negro vote. When the Conservative Party of the South did obtain power they passed educational and property qualifications which accomplished the precise results foretold by Senator Morton and which it was not denied would represent an entire legitimate exercise of power. It was expected by some and hoped by others the amendment would serve to perpetuate conditions then existing in the South where there was negro suffrage and control. The reconstruction acts of Congress denied representation in Congress to each of the 11 Southern States until the State should by State constitution provide universal manhood suffrage.

These acts further provided that the military governors in these 11 States should prepare a list of all voters consisting of all negroes and other male citizens 21 years of age, except those who had participated in the secession. The military governors, in pursuance of these acts, prepared such lists of voters, which practically included all the negroes and disfranchised nearly all the whites. The voters on these lists were authorized to elect delegates to constitutional conventions to prepare constitutions to be ratified by these very voters. By this process in nearly all the States negroes and their unscrupulous white allies were put in control of local, municipal, and State governments. The constitutions prepared by the conventions thus called provided for universal suffrage with practical general disfranchisement of the white people who had participated in secession. Thus the fifteenth amendment was intended to continue the existing Republican control in the South. It was not believed that the Conservative or Democratic Party could ever come into power under the new State constitutions and hence with negro suffrage assured Republican control in the South would be prepetuated. The extreme radical wing of the Republican Party, to which Senator Morton and Senator Wilson belonged, was unable to secure a prohibition of education, property, and other qualifications because of the misgivings as to ratification. Many of the States outside of the South had at that time educational and property qualifications and it was believed enough States would reject the amendment to prevent its adoption and that for this reason the amendment must be confined to discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

We will now examine the interpretation given the fifteenth amendment by the Supreme Court. In United States against Reece and others the Supreme Court says:

> The fifteenth amendment does not confer the right of suffrage upon anyone. It prevents the States or the United States, however, from giving preference in this particular to one citizen of the United States over another on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Before its adoption this could be done. It was as much within the power of a State to exclude citizens of the United States from voting on account of race, etc., as it was on account of age, property, or education. Now it is not.

In United States against Cruickshank Chief Justice Waite said:

> From this it appears that the right of suffrage is not a necessary attribute of national citizenship; but that exemption from discrimination in the exercise of that right on account of race, etc., is. The right to vote in the States comes from the States; but the right of exemption from the prohibited discrimination comes from the United States. The first has not been granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States, but the last has been.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of Stone v. Smith (159 Mass. 413) held that the amendment to the constitution of the Commonwealth providing that—> no person shall have the right to vote who shall not be able to read the constitution in the English language and write his name—is valid and not contrary to the Federal Constitution. In the same case the court held as valid, and not in violation of the Federal Constitution, a statute of that State providing that registration of voters shall require certain applicants for registration—> to read at least three lines other than the title from an official edition of the constitution in such manner as to show that he is neither prompted nor reciting from memory—> to write his name in the register.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts sustained that provision, holding that it is not invalid under the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Does anybody question that proposition?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator can content himself to hear this or go out, just as he prefers.

This case also held that suffrage was not one of "the privileges and immunities" conferred under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. It also declared the right of the States by a uniform and impartial rule of prohibition to deny the right to vote to such of its inhabitants as were not thought to possess the qualifications necessary for an intelligent and impartial exercise of the right.

Thus, Mr. President, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts has sustained the validity of the provisions in its constitution and also its statutes which are similar to those in the Southern States, which operates to disfranchise illiterates and those who will not pay taxes required as a prerequisite for voting. The decision concurs in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that suffrage was not conferred on anyone by the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, but that the determination of the right remains with the States, except the States are prohibited from passing any law affecting the voter which discriminates on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Williams against Mississippi decided that section 244 of the constitution of Mississippi making ability to read any section of the constitution or understand it when read a necessary qualification to vote to be not in conflict with the Federal Constitution. The court further held that section 241 of the same constitution, prescribing as a necessary qualification to vote residence in the State for two years, one year in the precinct, and prepayment of all taxes legally due by him prior to the 1st day of February of the year he offers to vote, to be likewise valid.

This decision sustains the constitutionality of the provisions in the Mississippi constitution known as the "understanding clause." The decision is in accord with the decision just previously cited of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. The "understanding clause," so-called in the Mississippi constitution which eliminates a large number of the negro voters of that State, has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States as valid under the Constitution of the United States, and there is no justification for anyone to criticize that constitution because it is effective in saving the State from being ruled and ruined by the ignorant and illiterate. Mississippi has been able to obtain for herself a government constructed and directed by her intelligent, patriotic, and capable citizenship in a perfectly legal and constitutional manner.

Mr. President, Chief Justice White at the October term, 1914, of the Supreme Court rendered in the case of Guinn v. U. S. (238 U. S. 347) a very important judgment on the fifteenth amendment, which I will now ask the Senate to consider. It refers to what was alluded to by the Senator from California. The decision in that case was upon the constitutionality of a section of the constitution of Oklahoma providing that no person shall be registered or vote unless he is able to read and write any section of the constitution of the State, and also provided that no person or lineal descendant of such person who was on January 1, 1866, or any time prior thereto, entitled to vote under any form of government or who resided in some foreign nation shall be denied the right to register on account of his inability to read or write any section of the constitution. The court held this provision null and void. It held that a literacy test was valid and not contrary to the fifteenth amendment when applied to all, and was no dicrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, but when its clear purpose and practical effect was to so discriminate it was invalid and contrary to the fifteenth amendment. In discussing the fifteenth amendment the court said:

> (a) Beyond doubt the amendment does not take away from the State governments in a general sense the power over suffrage, which has belonged to those governments from the beginning and without the possession of which power the whole fabric upon which the division of State and national authority under the Constitution and the organization of both Governments rest would be without support, and both the authority of the Nation and the State would fall to the ground. In fact, the very command of the amendment recognizes the possession of the general power by the State, since the amendment seeks to regulate its exercise as to the particular subject with which it deals.
> (b) But it is equally beyond the possibility of question that the amendment in express terms restricts the power of the United States or the States to abridge or deny the right of a citizen of the United States to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The restriction is coincident with the power and prevents its exertion in disregard of the command of the amendment. But while this is true, it is true also that the amendment does not change, modify, or deprive the States of their full power as to suffrage except, of course, as to the subject with which the amendment deals and to the extent that obedience to its commands is necessary.
> With these principles before us, how can there be room for any serious dispute concerning the repugnancy of the standard based upon January 1, 1866 (a date which preceded the adoption of the fifteenth amendment), if the suffrage provision fixing that standard is susceptible of the significance which the Government attributes to it? Indeed, there seems no escape from the conclusion that to hold that there was even possibility for dispute on the subject would be to declare that the fifteenth amendment not only had not the self-executing power which it has been recognized to have from the beginning, but that its provisions were wholly inoperative because susceptible of being rendered inapplicable by mere forms of expression embodying no exercise of judgment and resting upon no discernible reason other than the purpose to disregard the prohibitions of the amendment by creating a standard of voting which on its face was in substance but a revitalization of conditions which when they prevailed in the past had been destroyed by the self-operative force of the amendment.

At the same term of the court, in Myers v. Anderson (238 U. S. 368), Chief Justice White delivered an opinion of the court nullifying the so-called grandfather or descendants clause contained in the statutes of Maryland fixing the qualification of voters for the city of Annapolis. Thus in both the Oklahoma case and the Maryland case the court declared the grandfather and descendants provisions invalid, and as they were interwoven inseparably with the other provisions of the law it declared the entire suffrage provision invalid and the previously existing election laws as continuing in operation. It was held the fifteenth amendment being self-executing nullified by its own force these enactments and restored the prior election laws.

At the October term, 1926, of the Supreme Court, Justice Holmes, speaking for the court, declared null and void that part in the Texas primary law which provided that "in no event shall a negro be eligible to participate in a Democratic Party primary election held in the State of Texas."

In this case, which was a suit to recover damages from the Democratic primary judges at El Paso for refusing to permit a negro to vote in the primary, the court said:

States may do a great deal of classifying that it is difficult to believe rational, but there are limits, and it is too clear for extended argument that color can not be made the basis of a statutory classification affecting the right set up in this case.

The Supreme Court at the October term, 1914, in the case of United States v. Mosley (238 U. S. 383), Justice Holmes delivering the opinion of the court, held that section 19 of the Criminal Code was constitutional and applies to acts of two or more election officers, who conspire to injure and oppress qualified voters of the district in the exercise of their rights to vote for Member of Congress by omitting the votes cast from the count and the return of the electoral board.

These four cases clearly establish that the right of suffrage is left to the States, and that they can impose qualifications and conditions requisite to its exercise, provided they do not discriminate on account of sex, race, color, or previous condition of servitude. These cases also establish the law to be that where a voter is illegally deprived of his right to vote he can recover damages from the election officers and that the officers guilty of thus depriving him of his right to vote are liable to prosecution under the existing statutes of the United States. Hence, there can be no complaint that all classes of voters have not ample protection afforded them by the courts and the Federal law. Under the decisions of the Supreme Court no necessity exists for further legislation. This conclusion is strengthened by the decision of the Supreme Court that the power of Congress to legislate under the fifteenth amendment is limited to preventing the States from denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and does not apply to individuals. And the courts extend to every voter the protection of all rights he has under the fifteenth amendment and all the rights and remedies that Congress has any authority to give him in carrying out the purposes of the amendment.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. Speaking my own personal views, I do not think the fifteenth amendment is being violated. If there be any violation it is of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. But let us continue to talk about the fifteenth amendment. However, I am glad the Senator has made that statement.

Mr. WATSON. I think the South has a perfect right to apply its educational qualifications and its property qualifications.

Mr. SWANSON. But the newspapers and public speakers are always referring to the fifteenth amendment as being violated.

Mr. WATSON. I do believe, if the Senator will allow me, that the second section should be enforced.

Mr. SWANSON. I am glad to get the Senator's concession that the South is completely exonerated from any violation of the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. WATSON. But I do not make the same concession as to the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. All right. I will get to that later; but I am glad there is one Senator who has nerve and courage enough to say that all this false clamor, all this abuse directed against the South's violation of the fifteenth amendment, is uncalled for, unreasonable, and that there is nothing in it.

Mr. President, in considering the fifteenth amendment and the power of Congress, it should be noted, as Watson, on the Constitution, says, quoting many authorities to sustain him:

The fifteenth amendment has reference only to acts of the United States and States and not to any action of private individuals.

Hence, it follows that no power is vested in Congress to legislate against individuals. The prohibition is confined to the United States and the States. States act through their officers, legislative, executive, and judicial.

Mr. President, let us summarize the conclusions that are inevitable from these decisions and the circumstances surrounding the adoption of the fifteenth amendment.

First. The States have unlimited power over suffrage and in fixing the qualifications of voters except so far as expressly prohibited by the fifteenth amendment.

Second. The fifteenth amendment confers no right of suffrage whatsoever on any voter but continues the former status, except that no State can pass a law denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, this being the full extent of the change.

Third. Educational and property qualifications for voting, requirements of residence in State and locality for a limited time, and the prepayment of taxes prior to the time of the right to vote, if applied to all citizens irrespective of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, are not in contravention of the fifteenth amendment, but are valid even though their effect may be to eliminate a large percentage of a certain class of voters; and the power of States to fix such qualifications was understood by Congress and the States as valid when the amendment was adopted, and has been uniformly recognized as valid by the Federal and State courts.

Fourth. Provisions in State constitutions and election laws commonly known as grandfather or descendants clauses, creating the right to vote but fixing a time when the right accrues so that it is impossible that the negro could under any circumstances be made eligible for the right given others, are discriminatory on account of race and color, and are invalid; and such provisions, whether contained in State constitutions or statutes, as have not expired by limitation, are held by the Supreme Court to be null and void.

Fifth. The fifteenth amendment is self-executing and by its own force declares as null and void all acts of legislation that create discriminations in voting on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and no protection is afforded officers who vouch such legislation as a defense. The courts will award damages to individuals thus deprived of their rights under the fifteenth amendment, and officers who seek to enforce the legislation that is null and void are liable in damages as well as subject to prosecution.

Sixth. There is no necessity whatsoever for any further legislation by Congress, since the courts already give all the protection and have all the authority to do so that is in any direction possible.

Mr. President, accordingly it seems to me that the complaints we so frequently hear that the South is violating the fifteenth amendment are without any foundation or justification whatever. If there is a single Southern State that has an election provision denying anyone of the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, the provision is null and void, and hence any such discriminatory legislation has no effective existence. No act of Congress is necessary to make discriminatory provisions invalid, as things already invalid can not be made more invalid. Many negroes have been eliminated as voters, not by any violation of the fifteenth amendment but by the States imposing educational and property qualifications, the requirements of residence a certain length of time in State and locality, and the prepayment of capitation taxes as a prerequisite to voting, all of which have been sustained by the uniform decisions of State and Federal courts, have been recognized as legal and valid by all constitutional law writers, and which, I repeat, were considered permissible by the proponents of the fifteenth amendment and understood permissible by the States when it was ratified.

All of the clamor against the South about the nonenforcement of the fifteenth amendment is engendered either by ignorance or is inspired by the ulterior purpose to intimidate and threaten the South and embarrass her judgment and will upon other matters. The South has exercised her constitutional right to eliminate a class of ignorant, shiftless, and corrupt voters who for many years were in charge of her local, municipal, and State affairs, with the result of unspeakable impoverishment and disgrace. And, Mr. President, I am sure I voice the sentiment and judgment of the patriotic men of the North, East, and West when I say that no right-minded person can desire a return of the wretched conditions which were incident to the days of reconstruction—the darkest period in all the history of America.

Exercising their clear legal and constitutional right, the Southern States have enacted suffrage laws which are necessary to obtain clean, economical, and capable governments. The South is resolved and determined that no part of that section shall ever become a Haiti or Santo Domingo and the dark, festering sores of reconstruction shall never reappear to afflict her. Suffrage laws, legal and constitutional, are and always will be invoked to save the happiest and fairest portion of this Nation from being again blighted by the rule of ignorance and corruption.

Mr. President, I have clearly proven, I think, that the fifteenth amendment can not be violated and that any attempt at its violation is constitutionally impossible.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, does the Senator mean by "other matters" the prohibition law or the eighteenth amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know of anybody that objects——

Mr. BRUCE. Is it not a fact that the eighteenth amendment and the claim that it should be rigidly enforced is the inspiration of the speech which the Senator is making to-day?

Mr. SWANSON. Not at all; but to all people who say that we southern people are violating the fifteenth amendment I am making this speech. Many claim that we are violating the fifteenth amendment. I have heard enough of it. The Supreme Court has sustained every constitution we have there to-day that I know of, and I have not tried to inject any issue except the issue that the South is exercising its constitutional right under the fifteenth amendment of prescribing educational and property qualifications, which it has the right to do.

Mr. BRUCE. I trust the Senator before he completes his speech will nevertheless explain why it is that such a small percentage of the negroes of the South vote and why it is that so much larger percentage of the whites vote. I live in a State where there is no restriction of any kind imposed on negro suffrage, and the negroes vote quite as freely as the whites. I am curious to know why things should not work that way in those other Southern States where the Senator alleges that no discrimination whatever is operated by the law.

Mr. SWANSON. We can not have a discrimination under the fifteenth amendment on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. If there is any such discrimination it is null and void and invalid, and that has been frequently held by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has held that we have a right to impose qualifications for education, for property, and for length of residence. It is applied to whites and colored alike, and the State has exercised its right merely to do that, whether it prohibits negroes or whites or any others from voting.

Mr. BRUCE. Then the discrimination must be in the application of the constitutional and statutory provisions.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator knows of any violation under the fifteenth amendment, or of any officer making an improper application of our statutory provisions, I remind him that the Supreme Court has decided in repeated cases that such officer is liable for damages and liable to prosecution. If the Senator knows of any such case, and it ought to be corrected, why does he not have the party in interest make complaint, and have the party violating the law indicted and prosecuted?

Mr. BRUCE. The point I make is that if the Southern States have contrived by one means or another to escape the consequences of negro suffrage, it would seem to me that we who are opposed to the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment might be allowed to practice some degree of ingenuity, too, in escaping the trammels of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maryland if he is among those who threaten the South with universal negro suffrage unless the South shall quietly sanction the violation of the eighteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution?

Mr. BRUCE. Why, of course, not. Looking at the matter in the light of historic charity, for that is what it comes to, I think the South was absolutely warranted in doing everything it did do to avert the first results of the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. GLASS. There is no historic charity about it. The South does what it does within the provisions of the Federal Constitution, and if the Senator from Maryland or anybody who coincides in his view of the matter can get his liquor within the limitations of the Federal Constitution, let him get it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCE. That position is exactly opposed to the one that the Senator has heretofore taken, because only a short time ago——

Mr. GLASS. No; it is not at all. I am simply tired of Senators like the Senator from Maryland threatening the South with universal negro suffrage unless the South sanctions the violation and nullification of the eighteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution. I want to serve notice upon him that neither he nor any of his associates can constrain or restrain Virginia in her attitude upon that question by threatening Virginia with negro suffrage.

Mr. BRUCE. It is absolutely untrue that I have ever at any time made any such threat.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator upon the floor of the Senate time and time again has asserted that those people who are thirsty for their dram have as much right to nullify the eighteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution as the Southern States have to nullify the fifteenth amendment, and the RECORD will show that he has said that.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I say that if the Southern States have the right, by the exercise of legal ingenuity, to nullify, practically speaking, the fifteenth and fourteenth amendments, we have the right by any lawful means in our power to extricate ourselves from the tyrannous oppression of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act.

Mr. GLASS. Then why does not the Senator exercise the ingenuity to do it? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCE. We have sought to do that very thing. We have introduced bill after bill into Congress in an endeavor to amend the Volstead Act as well as to amend the eighteenth amendment, but so far without avail.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I must decline to yield further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield further.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest peace and harmony. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCE. The suggestion for peace comes from a very dubious source. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think an onlooker in Venice may have a word to say without being regarded as influenced by conditions which some people think obtain in the South. I think it is fair for those who say that the South has by legal ingenuity disfranchised the negro to point out where that legal ingenuity is. I have given a great deal of attention to this matter since those who are opposed to the eighteenth amendment have undertaken to suggest the nullification of the fifteenth amendment in the South to find out wherein the South by any dishonest practice or legal ingenuity which would not bear the stamp of morality does disfranchise the negro under the fifteenth amendment. I do not know wherein they have done so. I have gone through the laws of the Southern States, and I am unable to find that to be the case. I am now speaking of the fifteenth amendment.

Nobody objects to your getting liquor under the eighteenth amendment which can be obtained in accordance with the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator from Idaho does, because he has consistently opposed any modification of the Volstead Act limiting the use of intoxicating beverages.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will not yield my time for a prohibition discussion. Such a discussion is not within the purview of my remarks.

Mr. BRUCE. Well, prohibition is the inspiration of the Senator's entire speech, and it seems to me it is very relevant.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me say just a word in conclusion. I should like to know wherein the South is violating the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator will never find out, because it is not true.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I think.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to know how the South could violate the fifteenth amendment. It could not violate it, because if it should pass a statute contrary to the fifteenth amendment, which is addressed to the States and to the United States, the Supreme Court has decided that it would be null and void. The Supreme Court has decided that if anybody tried to execute a law which is null and void to the detriment of any individual, the individual affected may sue for damages and also have the officer attempting to execute it prosecuted. If the power existed to nullify, it is impossible to violate the fifteenth amendment, which is self-executing under the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator, of course, is perfectly conscious of the facility with which a board of judges of election can pervert for racial or other purposes such a provision, as in force in the State of Mississippi, which withholds the suffrage from any person who can not read a constitutional provision and understand it.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, a similar provision was in the Massachusetts law.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. Why do you strike at a provision of law in the Southern States and be silent as to a similar provision in a Northern State?

Mr. BRUCE. The whole background was different in Massachusetts. They had no such powerful compelling motive to pervert the application of the law. The white people of Mississippi believed that they were struggling for nothing less than civilization, for nothing less than self-preservation, and so that provision, of course, that no man should vote unless he could read a clause of the Constitution and understand it exquisitely served all the practical exigencies of the occasion.

Mr. SWANSON. But the Supreme Court has said that that law is valid.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, there is no such provision as the Senator from Maryland has cited in the constitution of the State of Mississippi.

Mr. BRUCE. Was there not a provision of the constitution in that State that a voter must be able to read? Was not such a provision in the Mississippi constitution, or was it in the constitution of some other Southern State?

Mr. GLASS. That is not what the Senator said. There is a provision in the Mississippi constitution which requires a voter to be able to read or write or in default of that literacy qualification to understand a clause of the constitution.

Mr. BRUCE. That is practically the same thing.

Mr. GLASS. Which is not a provision for disfranchisement but is a provision for enfranchisement.

Mr. BRUCE. How easy it would be to find that the white race had one measure of understanding and the black race another measure of understanding. Mind you, Mr. President, in spite of what the Senator from Virginia says, I will not be put in the position in any way of condemning what was done by the people of the South after the reconstruction period to protect their civilization, but I say that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Mr. GLASS. If the gander has not sense enough to take the sauce, whose fault is it? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCE. It is your fault and the fault of the other instrumentalities that have set up this system of prohibition tyranny.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I can not yield any further. My remarks were not intended to precipitate a wet and dry discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield further.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia permit me to make a brief statement?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I do not believe there is any law in Mississippi which violates the fifteenth amendment. If there is, I should like to ask the Senator to bring it to the Senate Chamber and read it.

Mr. BRUCE. Does the Senator believe that the law is never applied in such a way as to work practical disfranchisement of the negro? If he does, I say that he has a capacity for all-absorbing credulity that I had not been disposed to impute to him.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the law as applied in Mississippi applies to the whites the same as it does to the blacks, and it will be found from the statistics that there are almost as many whites disfranchised as there are blacks. The fifteenth amendment does not preclude disfranchisement on an educational test, and the Supreme Court has held that it does not.

Mr. BRUCE. I am not talking about law in the abstract; I am talking about the administration of the law.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I can not yield further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield further and the Senator from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope I have made it clear to the Senate that the fifteenth amendment is self-executing and does not apply to individuals, but applies to the States, and that any law of a State that violates the fifteenth amendment is null and void.

Mr. President, I purpose to discuss another phase of this question which is frequently presented and upon which threats are likewise based. There are those who insist that while there is and can be no violation of the fifteenth amendment in the South, nevertheless under the second section of the fourteenth amendment Congress should reduce the representation of the South in the House of Representatives and curtail the power of the South not only in the House but also in the Electoral College which elects a President. While there have been no serious efforts to do this, yet bills to accomplish it have been introduced in the House and the proposition has been included in the platforms of parties and made the subject of no little discussion.

Mr. President, I for one am tired of the universal attacks and threats made on the South. The South is living under the Constitution and proposes to live under it and to exercise its rights under it regardless of criticisms that may come from any source.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment more? Has the Senator heard me make any threat against the South?

Mr. SWANSON. I have not alluded to the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. I asked that question in view of what the Senator's colleague said. Has the Senator ever heard me make any threat against the South?

Mr. SWANSON. I have not.

Mr. BRUCE. Has the Senator ever heard me make an attack upon the South?

Mr. SWANSON. I have not. The Senator has made some speeches, but I do not know whether he ever talked about the South violating the fifteenth amendment or not. I can not say as to that.

Mr. BRUCE. No; I never have.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator from Maryland insist that he has never here in the Senate assailed the South for alleged violation of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments?

Mr. BRUCE. I do not recall ever having done so. I have called attention to the fact, of course, that the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments are not fully in force in the South.

Mr. SWANSON. I deny that.

Mr. GLASS. So do I.

Mr. BRUCE. And in the existing state of public opinion they could not be fully enforced.

Mr. SWANSON. I deny that.

Mr. GLASS. I assert that the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution is enforced in the South and hangs about the South like a dead corpse and has done so for 60 years, and has compelled us in Virginia to disfranchise thousands upon thousands of white men along with the negroes.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I can not yield further.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask the Senator to yield for just one more question, because the Senator knows that his colleague flies into such a state of demoniac fury whenever he enters into debate——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to be patient, but he must remind the Senator from Maryland that the Senator from Virginia has declined further to yield.

Mr. BRUCE. Will not the Senator permit one more question?

Mr. SWANSON. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have yielded for interruptions that have already consumed at least a half an hour. I did not wish to have a prohibition debate injected into my speech, which was intended to have nothing to do with prohibition.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I am not debating prohibition; I am resenting the assertion that Virginia violates the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield even to his colleague.

Mr. GLASS. I say that such an assertion is not true.

Mr. SWANSON. I say Virginia does not violate the fifteenth amendment, and I go further and say that it can not violate it.

Mr. GLASS. Of course, it can not.

Mr. SWANSON. Anybody who will read the fifteenth amendment and the decisions of the Supreme Court will realize that that court has decided the fifteenth amendment applies to the States and to the United States, and not to individuals, and that no State can pass a law discriminating on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Any law which attempts to do that is null and void, and when a law is null and void it can not be made any more null and void. That was decided in the Oklahoma case and other cases, and it has been held that any officer who tries to enforce an invalid law is liable to damages to the individual who has been deprived of his right to vote and liable to prosecution under the nineteenth section, as I recall of the election law. In view of that situation there can not be any violation of the fifteenth amendment in the South attempted or enforced, and all the talk that the southern people are violating the law, that we are a parcel of lawbreakers and violating our oath to the Constitution is not true, but is a travesty on the truth.

Now, Mr. President, I want to discuss the second section of the fourteenth amendment, with regard to depriving the South of representation.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask just one brief question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. I should really like to hear the Senator explain why it is that, notwithstanding what he says, such a very small percentage of negroes vote in the South. In the State in which I live they vote quite as freely as do the whites. Why is it that just as soon as you cross the Potomac River you find that they no longer vote so freely as the whites?

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator want them to vote?

Mr. BRUCE. That is beside the question. In the State of Maryland it is our policy to let them vote as freely as the whites.

Mr. SWANSON. There is no property qualification in the State of Maryland, is there?

Mr. BRUCE. No.

Mr. SWANSON. And no educational qualification?

Mr. BRUCE. No. We have universal suffrage.

Mr. SWANSON. Maryland has not exercised its right under the fifteenth amendment, but Virginia has.

Mr. BRUCE. We try to educate the negro up to the duties of citizenship and then let him vote.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I can not yield any further. They may have universal suffrage in Maryland, which they have a right to have, but in the Southern States we have educational and property qualifications on account of certain conditions there. However, they do not apply entirely to the colored people, for if that were the case the law would be null and void under the decisions of the Supreme Court. But to get rid of conditions of ignorance and illiteracy and not to go back to the horrible days of reconstruction, to prevent the South from being a Haiti or a San Domingo—and when we prevent such a thing as that happening we ought to receive encouragement and not criticism—we have merely imposed educational and property qualifications as the Constitution permits us to do, and which it was understood when the amendment was adopted that we would have a right to do. When an effort was made to amend it to prohibit us from doing what we have done, both the House and the Senate refused to enact such an amendment. That is the reason for the conditions which prevail. The Southern States have had a perfect right to do as they have done under the Constitution, and they have been sustained by the Supreme Court; and the State courts of Massachusetts, which State enacted a similar law, have sustained such right on the part of the State of Massachusetts.

Now, Mr. President, what is the next threat that is made against us? It is under the second section of the fourteenth amendment. Let us fairly examine the fourteenth amendment and the second section of it to see whether the people—let us fairly and without prejudice, with a free and open mind, examine the second section of the fourteenth amendment and see if it confers on Congress any such authority as is suggested. That section is:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature therein, is denied to any of the male inhabitants—> of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States—> of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

Note the words "male inhabitants"—

The section repeals that portion of section 2, Article I, of the Constitution which provided for the apportionment of Representatives in the House. The Constitutional Convention, when it met had much difficulty in fixing the basis of representation in the House of Representatives. Should it be based on the number of qualified voters or on the entire population? That was the question.

If based on population, what people should be included? That was another question. The States had great differences among themselves about the qualification of voters. The States were not willing to conform to a single uniform standard of qualification and were unwilling to surrender to the Federal Government the power to fix the qualification of voters. Such a surrender would have involved a centralization of power in the Federal Government destructive of the authority of States. Hardly a vestige of State rights would have been left. Therefore the Constitutional Convention rejected any proposal to establish representation in the House of Representatives on the basis of qualified voters and decided to accept population as the basis.

Article I of the Constitution provided for representation and direct taxes to be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, to be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and, excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons. The expression "three-fifths of all other persons" was intended to include the slaves. By this compromise the North and South were each given full representation for their white population, and the South was given three-fifths representation for its negro slaves. The idea prevailed in the Constitutional Convention that representation and taxation should be in accord. Thus the negro slaves of the South were counted three-fifths for taxation and three-fifths for representation. It was contended by some that the slaves should not be taken into account in fixing representation in Congress. The South replied that if slaves were excluded for representation they should also be excluded for the purpose of taxation, as the Revolutionary War had been waged in support of the great principle that there should be no taxation without representation. Thus the compromise was effected, the negro slaves of the South being estimated at three-fifths both for taxation and representation.

The question of the qualification of voters was left absolutely and entirely to the respective States. In other words, representation in Congress was definitely fixed and the qualification of voters was left to the States. This continued until the Federal Congress enacted its reconstruction legislation providing the conditions upon which the 11 seceding States should be permitted again to have representation in Congress. To make effective the reconstruction policy the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution were adopted. All the thirteenth amendment did was to free all negroes who were held in slavery and it went no further. Suffrage, when this amendment was adopted, had not been conferred on the negro. There were only six States in the Union where negro suffrage existed at that time. It would have been impossible to secure ratification of the amendment had it included negro suffrage. The judgment of the country was decidedly against any such plan.

Mr. Lincoln, in the address made a few days before his assassination, suggested that suffrage might be conferred upon those negroes who had served in the Federal Army and others who were sufficiently intelligent and educated. That was the limit of his suggestion in connection with the enfranchisement of the negro.

After the adoption of the thirteenth amendment Congress sought to settle the new status of the negro, who had been freed, by having the fourteenth amendment adopted. The first section conferred citizenship upon the negro; enabled him to contract, sue and be sued, hold and acquire property, and have all the rights and immunities of a citizen of the United States. The Supreme Court has repeatedly decided that the right of suffrage is not "one of the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States conferred by the fourteenth amendment." It has repeatedly decided that the negro obtained no suffrage right by the fourteenth amendment, but that suffrage, under the fourteenth amendment, was to remain under the jurisdiction of the States.

I wish to confine my remarks to the second section of the fourteenth amendment, and especially that portion upon which is grounded the contention that Congress has authority to reduce southern representation in the House of Representatives. Mr. President, we should examine this amendment and ascertain what its purposes were, and what were the objects sought to be accomplished, this being in accordance with the general rule of construction of constitutional or statutory provisions which are assumed to have had definite objects in mind and definite evils which should be remedied.

Justice Miller, in interpreting the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments in the Slaughterhouse cases, said:

> But what we do say, and what we wish to be understood, is that in any fair and just construction of any section or phrase of these amendments it is necessary to look to the purpose which we have said was the pervading spirit of them, the evil which they were designed to remedy, and the process of continued addition to the Constitution, until that purpose was supposed to be accomplished as far as constitutional law can accomplish it.

It is to be noted that this expression of the learned justice is contained in an opinion defining how the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments should be considered and construed. Enormous weight attaches to the view of a judge who could have had no disinclination to extend the provisions of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments as far as possible in order to give full protection to the negro and carry out as far as he properly could do so the purpose and plan of a Government which was in the hands of the party to which he belonged.

First. What were the purposes sought to be accomplished by section 2 of the fourteenth amendment? Mr. Thaddeus Stevens, who was Republican leader in the House of Representatives when it was submitted, and who was more responsible than any one else for the fourteenth amendment, introduced a resolution proposing to amend Article I of the Constitution, providing for representation in the House of Representatives, so as to provide that representation should be apportioned among the several States according to the qualified voters in the respective States.

This proposition was favored by Senator Sherman, of Ohio, and nearly all the Senators of the West and Middle West. If representation among the States should be apportioned on the basis of qualified voters, the West would have had its representation greatly increased, and the East and New England would have their representation greatly decreased. There were 2,000,000 aliens in New England and the East who could not vote and yet were a part of the population, and were included under the then existing law in fixing the basis of representation. If Mr. Stevens's proposal for basing representation on qualified voters should prevail, these aliens would be excluded from the reckonings and the representation of New England and the East would be reduced. In addition a great many male persons had left New England and the East and gone West, thus making the proportion of qualified voters in the West much larger in proportion to population than in the East and New England. As New England and the East had an excess over the West of aliens, women and children representation based on voting and not on population would have been a great deprivation to them and a corresponding advantage to the West.

The opposition of the East and New England was led by Mr. Blaine, of Maine. In discussing the Stevens proposal Mr. Blaine said:

> Basing representation on voters—unless Congress should be empowered to define their qualifications—would tend to cheapen suffrage everywhere. There would be an unseemly scramble in all the States during each decade to increase by every means the number of voters, and all conservative restrictions, such as the requirement of reading and writing now enforced in some of the States, would be stricken down in a rash and reckless effort to procure an enlarged representation in the national councils. Foreigners would be invited to vote on a mere preliminary "declaration of intention," and the ballot, which can not be too sacredly guarded, and which is the great and inestimable privilege of the American citizen, would be demoralized and disgraced everywhere.
> And the worst feature of all is that there is no need whatever of precipitating the evils I have referred to. The great end of depriving the South of representation which is based on the colored population until that population is enfranchised can be very readily secured without accompanying it with these offensive inequalities of representation among the loyal States. The Constitution may be amended so as to prevent the one evil without involving others of greater magnitude, and I venture to express the belief that the proposition submitted by me this morning, and on my motion referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, will, if adopted, secure the desired result.

Mr. President, this speech of Mr. Blaine, the leader of the Republican Party, twice its nominee for President, declares what? First, that he considered it would be a greater evil for the Federal Government to create unlimited manhood suffrage and base representation upon it than it would be to deprive the negroes of the right to vote. Second, that he did not believe suffrage should be cheapened and the right of citizenship conferred upon people destitute of the qualifications to exercise this great privilege. Third, that he would propose an amendment which would not affect the qualification requirements of suffrage in other States but would compel the South to enfranchise the negro or submit to a reduced representation in Congress.

Mr. Blaine's resolution, offered as a substitute for the Stevens resolution, was as follows:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included in this Union according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed: Provided, That whenever the elective franchise shall be denied or abridged in any State on account of race or color all persons therein of such race or color shall be excluded from the basis of representation.

Mr. Stevens accepted the substitution and it passed the House and went to the Senate, so it is perfectly apparent that the effort made in the House to base representation on the number of qualified voters in each State was overwhelmingly defeated, and the House decided it would adhere to the plan then existing of basing it upon population with the reduction provision contained in the Blaine substitute. The House unhesitatingly rejected the proposition now urged by some that representation should be based upon the number of votes cast in the elections or the number of qualified voters in each State. The sentiment which influenced its defeat was irresistible.

When the Blaine resolution reached the Senate it provoked much discussion and much difference of opinion among the Republicans. On the 9th of March, 1866, by a record vote of 25 to 22, it was brought to a vote and failed to receive the necessary two-thirds. Sumner and other extreme radicals opposed it because, as they argued, it in terms recognized the right of a State to discriminate against voters on account of race or color and limited the reduction to this discrimination, and that instead of enfranchising the negro voter in the Southern States it would result in his disfranchisement, although reducing representation.

The speeches of Blaine, Stevens, Sumner, Henderson, Conkling, and others clearly disclose the purpose it had in mind in the second section of the fourteenth amendment. The purpose was evident—either to force the South to enfranchise the negro or submit to a reduction of its representation or power in the House. Any course taken by the South, it was contended, would be beneficial to the Republican Party. Should it enfranchise the negro the Republican Party would control the 11 Southern States and thus enhance its chances of continuing in power. Should the negro not be enfranchised, southern representation would be reduced and Republican power in Congress and in the national elections would be greatly enhanced.

Senator Henderson, of Missouri, a stanch radical Republican, bitterly antagonized the Blaine resolution and offered instead a provision, which was practically the fifteenth amendment, abolishing all discrimination by the Federal Government or States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. He insisted that the end sought for could be better and more effectively attained by striking out the provision for reduced representation and prohibiting discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

That was the amendment that he thought would settle the suffrage question in the South.

Mr. Henderson, in the course of his remarks, said:

> It is the proper amendment. I am aware that the Senate will vote it down. Let them vote it down. It will not be five years before this body will vote for it. You can not get along without it.

Mr. President, in less than two years his prophecy was fulfilled and the fifteenth amendment was submitted and ratified by the States. Thus, the fifteenth amendment, which Senator Henderson offered as a settlement of the negro question when the fourteenth amendment was pending, became a settlement of the negro question, and through its adoption that portion of the second section of the fourteenth amendment permitting reduction of representation was repealed and is not now operative, because a new solution was made two years afterwards, when the fifteenth amendment was passed. The Congress and the country had decided by adopting the fifteenth amendment to make a different settlement. Mr. Henderson, in discussing his proposal relative to the elective franchise which afterwards became the fifteenth amendment, said:

> I do not ask that they shall grant it to every uneducated negro. I would not do it. I would as soon think of giving treasure to the idiot. But if the negro is educated, if he discharges his duties as a citizen, if he is qualified for the suffrage, why not give it to him upon an equality with others?

Thus, the author of the fifteenth amendment realized the right and necessity of fixing educational and other qualifications in order to prevent evils which would arise from universal negro suffrage. The author of the fifteenth amendment himself approved the educational qualifications contained in the constitutions and election laws of the Southern States. It comes with poor grace for others to complain of a violation of the fifteenth amendment when the author of this amendment pointed out at the time the necessity for educational qualifications in order to prevent the gravest evils which would arise from unlimited negro suffrage.

As previously stated, the radical Republicans, led by Senator Sumner, objected to the manner in which the fourteenth amendment was proposed as it came from the House with the Blaine substitute. Objections arose because it especially conferred upon the South the right to disfranchise voters on account of race and color with reduced representation. They urged that this would be very prejudicial to the Republican Party in some States, and that the provision would make ratification difficult, and for these reasons the House resolution for the amendment was defeated.

After this reverse and some delay a measure was agreed upon by the Republican leaders and introduced in the House by Mr. Stevens, which passed the House and came to the Senate. In the Senate debate developed further differences of opinion among the Republicans and favorable action appeared doubtful. Facing the prospect of final defeat, the Republicans in the Senate caucused during several days, and as a result of protracted effort approved a resolution, the fourteenth amendment, which passed the Senate by a party vote and upon receiving the concurrence of the House, the amendment was submitted and ratified. This is the history of the fourteenth amendment as it now stands in the Constitution.

Mr. President, it can not be overlooked that the amendment was adroitly framed in order to get rid of objections urged by certain radical Senators. It was designed to and did accomplish the same purpose as the proposal for which it was substituted. It discarded the language expressly permitting disfranchisement on account of race and color which had been opposed by enough Senators to prevent its acceptance, and used language which would still permit this discrimination with the penalty of reduced representation if the negro should be disfranchised.

This substitute was in effect the same as the other resolution, would accomplish the same results, but was stripped of the verbiage which had proved an insurmountable obstacle. The amendment, it can not be too frequently stated, was intended to deal with the conditions and in the same manner as the proposal which it displaced.

Under the amendment as it passed, if the negro should be enfranchised representation would be increased, and if disfranchised representation would be decreased. Under the amendment, inasmuch as the fifteenth amendment had not then been adopted, the Southern States possessed the right to discriminate on account of race and color. It only differed from the Blaine resolution in not expressly giving the right to discriminate on account of race and color, and did not confine the reduction in representation to such discrimination alone. It operated, and was deliberately meant to operate exactly as the Blaine measure, though there was an adroit change in language. Discussions in the State legislatures and in the press at the time serve to make incontestable the view that has just been stated—namely, that the South was afforded the alternative of enfranchising the negro or of disfranchising him and bearing the penalty which would attach.

The contention was that if the amendment should be ratified there would be no reduction in representation except in Southern States where there was a large number of negro voters. Mr. Conkling, one of the leaders of the Republican Party, replying to criticism, said:

> The amendment we are pressing is not for Greece or Rome, or anywhere where any besides Africans were held as slaves.

This great Republican leader was clear and frank in admitting that the amendment was to apply only where negro slaves and not other voters were disfranchised; that it was to be operative in the South alone; that it was designed to dispose of the problem of negro suffrage.

Mr. Thad Stevens, speaking in the House, was equally clear and frank. Referring to the South, he said:

> If they do not enfranchise the freedman, it will give to the rebel States but 37 Representatives. Thus shorn of their power they would soon become restive. Southern pride would not long brook a hopeless minority. True, it will take two, three, possibly five years before they conquer their prejudices sufficiently to allow their late slaves to become their equals at the polls. That short delay would not be injurious. In the meantime the freedmen would become more enlightened and more fit to discharge the high duties of their new condition. In that time the loyal Congress could mature their laws and so amend the Constitution as to secure the rights of every human being and render disunion impossible.

This Republican leader, more responsible than anyone for what was done, was unequivocal in declaring that the purpose was to force the South either to give the negro suffrage or have its representation severely cut, and that the solution was only temporary and would be followed by another amendment, which would finally dispose of the entire problem.

Of course, what he had in mind was the fifteenth amendment, which was submitted and ratified a few years later. Mr. President, let me say once more that the party responsible for the fourteenth amendment took the position when he projected it that the provision of the second section looking to reduction of representation was only intended to apply to the South in case it should refuse to enfranchise the negro, which under the amendment it had a right to do, and that it was only a temporary experiment to be followed by a more permanent device.

Mr. President, by the adoption of the fifteenth amendment the right to disfranchise voters given in the second section of the fourteenth amendment on account of race or color was prohibited to the States was repealed, and the South was deprived of the alternative furnished by the second section of the fourteenth amendment. Can there be any question that the solution of the problem effected by the second section of the fourteenth amendment was discarded and another solution found by the fifteenth amendment; and that accordingly, in substance and in effect, the provision relative to suffrage in the earlier amendment was repealed by the later amendment? The answer to this question, the answer which is in line with the view I am now presenting, is found in all of the contemporaneous proceedings that attended this matter, in the surrounding circumstances, and in the well-considered opinions of the most thoughtful students and writers who have given it definite attention.

In the Slaughterhouse cases, previously mentioned, Justice Miller in delivering the opinion of the court interpreting the two amendments stated that it is necessary to look to the purposes sought to be accomplished, the evils designed to be remedied, and the process of continued addition to the Constitution until the purposes could be accomplished and the evils remedied as far as possible.

Mr. President, the fifteenth amendment destroyed most valuable power possessed by the States, making impossible the solution of the problem as contemplated by that section. It absolutely changed the political conditions created by that section and made a new and entirely different settlement of the problem of negro suffrage. The irresistible conclusion is reached that the fifteenth amendment repealed the penalizing provision of the fourteenth amendment for reduced representation in the House. There is no principle more fully established than that where rights are withdrawn to the exercise of which penalties are attached that the penalties disappear with the withdrawal of the rights. When the fifteenth amendment destroyed vital rights theretofore enjoyed by the States the attaching penalty disappeared.

Mr. President, it is true that the question at issue can never be determined by the courts, as the authority to fix representation in the House is vested in Congress, and that Congress alone has authority to determine the question. I am satisfied, however, that Congress will never place upon section 2 of the fourteenth amendment the narrow and ridiculous interpretation for which some contend. The penalty clause of the fourteenth amendment is as follows:

> But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

What would be the result if this provision should be enforced by Congress so as to reduce representation in the House? The basis of representation is fixed on the number of inhabitants in each State. The proportion of representation is not fixed on the basis of qualified voters. This idea was emphatically rejected in both the House and Senate. Representation is given to every person enumerated by the Federal census as living in the State. The penalizing clause provides that reduced representation shall only accrue where the male inhabitant of a State, and who is a citizen of the United States, is denied his right to vote, or that right is abridged. Let it be observed that all aliens who live in large numbers in certain sections of our country are a part of the basis of representation, and not laid aside bceause they can not vote. Representation is given to all anarchists, communists, Chinese, and Japanese who live in any State, and the fact that they can not vote is not a factor for reduced representation. The curtailment of representation only comes when a citizen of the United States has his right to vote denied or abridged. Thus, we have the anomaly, if this section is to be literally interpreted and enforced, that the foreigner and alien will be preferred over American citizens. I repeat, the foreigner and alien is given full representation, although he does not vote, yet an American citizen can not be estimated in giving representation to his State unless he is a qualified voter.

It would be a gross injustice to permit States to have representation in the House on account of those who are not citizens of the United States and do not vote, and refuse representation to the citizens of the United States because they do not possess the educational and other qualifications required by the local laws. Is the alien anarchist to be rated above the native American? Are our immigration laws to be made a subject of ridicule and derision by allowing the foreigner to be a source of political power and the citizen rendered powerless? Are foreigners a better source from which political power can be derived than American citizens? Can such a situation be regarded as possible in such a Republic as this?

Is it not plain that American citizens can be maintained on an equality with aliens in obtaining representation in the House only by taking the position that the fifteenth amendment repeals section 2 of the fourteenth amendment? The conclusion to which we are compelled is that representation must be based on population only save and except that there can be no discrimination on account of race or color. Mr. President, if this conclusion is not accepted and the penalty section of the fourteenth amendment is held to be still operative, what will be the situation in the United States regarding representation in the House? Why, representation would be reduced in any State, in any section of the Union, in the proportion that the right of any male citizen to vote is denied or in any way abridged. Is an educational qualification an abridgment of the right to vote? At the time the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments were adopted Massachusetts and many other States had educational qualifications. Is it reasonable to suppose that if these states had understood that the word "abridged" would include educational qualifications they would have been persuaded to favor the amendment? I ask anyone who has the hardihood to so answer this inquiry in the affirmative.

Mr. President, not Massachusetts alone, but more than one-third of the States to-day have educational qualifications, and if an educational qualification such as exists in the Southern States is an abridgment of the right to vote under the second section of the fourteenth amendment, the representation in all these States would also have to be proportionately reduced. But is it conceivable that America will consent to reduce the representation in such States and adhere to the policy that in the proportion that a section is illiterate its representation shall be increased and its political power enhanced? It is fundamental that the success and endurance of a republic is founded on the extent of the intelligence and patriotism of its voters.

A republic can not survive where political power is based on ignorance and not intelligence. No policy can be successful that gives a premium for ignorance and incompetency and imposes a disability on education and intelligence. Never before in the history of America has there been greater necessity for intelligence and education in directing our public affairs. The vast extent of our country, the many perplexing and important problems, foreign and domestic, demand more now than ever before an intelligent electorate, and yet there are those who in the passion of partisanship and prejudice would abandon this conception.

Mr. President, if the second section of the fourteenth amendment is to be literally construed and enforced there will be brought about a most astonishing condition. Any State which denies the right to vote to any male inhabitant 21 years of age and a citizen of the United States, except for participating in a rebellion and other crimes, will be liable to the penalty prescribed. Such a construction would prevent a State from denying the right of suffrage to idiots or insane persons without being subject to reduced representation. If it is to be literally construed, it would condemn any regulation requiring registration or the prepayment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting. It would prohibit the requirements in nearly all the electoral laws of the States that a person should reside in a State so many years and in a local community so long before he could vote. If it is to be literally construed, a citizen of the United States is entitled to vote in a State the moment he arrives, and if this right is in any way restricted by registration or requirements of residence it is an abridgment and the penalty prescribed in this section would have to be enforced against the State.

The section reads the right to vote "in any way abridged," and these qualifications, if this section is to be literally construed, amount to an abridgment, and hence would invoke the penalizing provision. If the section is to be literally construed and enforced, the voting by the Australian ballot is an abridgment and would become a reason for reduced representation. If the section is to be literally construed and enforced, the only States that could have full representation for all the inhabitants living there would be a State without qualifications for voting except that the person should be 21 years of age and a citizen and free from participation in rebellion and other crimes. This would create such a chaos of corruption and irresponsible voting as to result in the practical destruction of the ballot. Compliance with a rigid interpretation of this section would make elections impossible without the existence of unrestrained frauds and corruption. The elections would be so tainted with fraud that all respect for them would be obliterated.

But it is contended by some that while the amendment is impossible of literal enforcement, it would not exclude reasonable regulations with regards to suffrage. But who is to determine what regulations and restrictions are reasonable and which are not? The amendment says "in any way abridged," which, if taken literally, means universal suffrage to all persons over 21 years of age unrestrained and unabridged in any respect. There is no State in the Union that could measure up to this standard, and it would be impossible to ascertain the extent, if this section is to be strictly construed, of the reductions that would be made. It is impossible of enforcement, and being impossible of enforcement, even if not repealed by the fifteenth amendment, it becomes inoperative and Congress finds itself powerless in the matter.

Mr. President, either the word "abridged" must have such interpretation or else it must mean it does not apply to qualifications and requirements which are within the power of the voter ultimately to meet. His right to vote is not denied or abridged, only delayed until he can acquire the qualifications considered wise and necessary for exercising the right of suffrage.

Mr. President, the passage of the nineteenth amendment furnished additional proof that Congress considered that the fifteenth amendment repealed the second section of the fourteenth amendment. The nineteenth amendment provides:

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

The fourteenth amendment provides for the reduction of representation where voting is denied or abridged to "any of the male inhabitants of such State." Thus, if the penalizing section of the fourteenth amendment is still operative, the reduction of representation occurs only when a male citizen has his right to vote denied or abridged. It does not apply to female citizens who have their right to vote denied or abridged. So if the penalty section of the fourteenth amendment is still operative along with the nineteenth amendment, we have the further anomaly that all men and all women in a like condition shall vote, but when the penalizing section becomes operative the reduction shall only affect the male citizens whose right to vote is denied or abridged and not the female citizen. As we are considering a penalizing section and not a suffrage-conferring section it would seem that the word "male" would continue in the fourteenth amendment and would not be eliminated by the text of the nineteenth amendment. Is it to be believed that if Congress and the States had not considered that the penalizing section of the fourteenth amendment was repealed by the fifteenth amendment that they would have permitted this anomaly to exist, or the doubt regarding it, and would not have made the nineteenth amendment either correct this or clear the doubt?

Mr. President, it seems to me the only conclusion that can be reached, considering all the circumstances surrounding the enactment of the fourteenth amendment and the fifteenth amendment, is that the fifteenth amendment repealed the penalizing section and that the negro voters have been fully and amply protected by the fifteenth amendment. Representation is now based, as it has always been based since the foundation of our country, upon the population and not the voting. The suffrage is still with the States unrestrained and uncontrolled by the Federal Government, except that the States can not make any discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, or sex. With these exceptions the State has full power of suffrage. When a State undertakes to violate any constitutional amendment the Supreme Court of the United States will interfere and declare these statutes null and void and give ample protection to those who are injured by efforts to enforce nugatory laws. The Southern States stand on equality in this respect with all other States and will not be intimidated by threats nor deterred by criticism from pursuing the course deemed by them best for the industrial development and the political salvation of their section.

We appreciate that the difficult problem confronting us must be settled justly and fairly, and for the higher good of all concerned. We realize we can not settle it in prejudice, malice, or ill will without the results being prejudicial alike to us and the others involved. We recognize the necessity for dealing fairly and justly with all classes and races in our section. We have enacted laws providing for qualifications and requirements for voting which we deem necessary to protect ourselves from a class of voters whose introduction into politics has been most ruinous, not only to ourselves but to themselves and the entire country. We have gone no further than was necessary to protect the South from having a repetition of the infamies, social and political, which cursed our section in the dark and dismal days of reconstruction. Our suffrage provisions are similar to those contained in many other States which are enforced and declared legal and constitutional. We believe these enactments are legal and constitutional, and if they are not, they will be invalidated by the Supreme Court of the United States, and there is no necessity for continued agitation of this question and the repeated efforts to discourage and humiliate the South.

Mr. President, the South is back in this Union on an equality with each of the 48 States. It is possessed of equal rights and equal responsibilities. It will fearlessly assert its rights and will patriotically discharge its responsibilities. The South rejoices that in every field of national endeavor her sons have toiled and sacrificed so successfully, so bravely, that many are numbered among America's immortals. No section of this country loves the Union better or is willing to make greater sacrifices for it than the people of the South. They are proud of their fathers, the work of whose masterful hands is seen in all parts of our magnificent national superstructure.

Mr. President, I believe the narrow, partisan talk indulged in by some to arouse prejudice against the South now falls on deaf and unsympathetic ears. The partition wall between the North and the South, which once existed, has been battered down by the patriotic heart throbs of more than 120,000,000 people who are now one, loving one flag and one country. The flag once rent now floats without a seam.

Mr. President, why seek unjustly and illegally to lessen southern power? The hour may come in time of storm and stress when one of the best defenders of our great national interest will be the conservative and patriotic forces of the South. Sirs, made brave by burdens borne and overcome; made patient by long suffering; chastened by great misfortune; made self-reliant by conquering difficulties and distress as great as ever afflicted a poeple; cherishing to a passion the high ideals inherited from her matchless Washington and her majestic Lee; thrilled by the possibilities of an industrial development and wealth almost unspeakable created by her own skill and effort, the South presents a combination of strength and of sentiment destined to make her once again a wise leader of national thought and national achievement.

During the delivery of Mr. SWANSON's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEIWER in the chair). The Senator from Virginia will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

After the conclusion of Mr. SWANSON's speech,

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. I understand the Presiding Officer has recognized me.

Mr. HEFLIN. Under previous notice on last Friday that I would address the Senate immediately following the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]——

Mr. BRUCE. There was nothing obligatory about that.

Mr. HEFLIN. I just sent word up to the Chair a little while ago that that arrangement had been made, and that I wanted him to recognize me, and I understood the Chair stated that he would do so; so I rose——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I intend to speak very briefly; otherwise I would not speak at all under the circumstances.

Mr. HEFLIN. About how long does the Senator from Maryland intend to speak?

Mr. BRUCE. Such a question is always a little drastic——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I submit to the Senator from Maryland——

Mr. BRUCE. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. That he ought to let me have the floor, because it has been arranged, and I hope that the Senator will not insist on getting in here now and preventing me from speaking. I have had no lunch; I have given notice that I would speak at this time; and I trust the Senator from Maryland will not insist on proceeding.

Mr. BRUCE. I am very sorry, but some remarks of a highly personal nature have been made with reference to me in connection with the colloquy that has just taken place. Under other circumstances, I should be glad to yield to the Senator from Alabama. I do not expect to speak except briefly, but under the circumstances I must insist upon my rights.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to state that I do not think the Senator has any right to speak in view of the understanding that I had with the Senate and with the Chair.

Mr. BRUCE. That matter has been decided. I knew nothing of that understanding. There is nothing obligatory in the announcement of a Member of this body that he is going to speak. There is nothing obligatory in a statement upon the part of the Presiding Officer that he will recognize any particular Senator when he rises to his feet. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that but for the special nature of the circumstances I should not at this time rise.

Now, I wish to say a few words about my relations to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. In one of his poems the Latin poet Martial said that his relations to his sweetheart were such that there was no living with her or without her, and I begin to feel that way about the Senator. Nobody knows better than he does how greatly I respect his abilities and character, and what a sincere admiration I entertain for him in all respects. I have over and over again gone so far as to say that if our party was at a real loss for a proper candidate for the Presidency of the United States I did not know anyone, so far as capacity and other qualifications for the place are concerned, on whom its choice could better fall than on the Senator from Virginia; and yet I regret to say that it is impossible for me ever to mention the Volstead Act or the eighteenth amendment without having the senior Senator from Virginia rush at me as I have so often when I was a boy in Southside, Va., seen an infuriated bull rush through the sedge grass and old field pines of that region at some object that had excited his wrath.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, does the Senator from Maryland allude to me as "the senior Senator from Virginia" or does he allude to the junior Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BRUCE. Oh, I thought for the moment that Senator GLASS was the senior Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Maryland had reference to age and not to service?

Mr. BRUCE. I must say, however, that so far as the real senior Senator from Virginia is concerned, I entertain for him, too, nothing but feelings of the strongest respect; but, of course, I was referring to Senator GLASS, who for the moment I thought was the senior Senator from Virginia.

However, simply because I mention the Volstead Act or the eighteenth amendment is no reason why the lips of the Senator from Virginia should foam like the lips of a pythoness. He seems to find a peculiar pride in the fact that he has never taken a drink. All I have got to say on that subject is that, in my humble opinion, he has denied himself a very rich measure of perfectly legitimate enjoyment. [Laughter.]

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I remind my friend, the Senator from Maryland, that I never ventured upon that topic at all here in the Senate Chamber, until he was unkind enough to suggest that I had taken too many drinks. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCE. I do not recall any such statement as that. Perhaps that was provoked by the very vehement way in which the Senator from Virginia sometimes throws himself into debate. Of course, I was not familiar with him when I first became a Member of this body.

Mr. GLASS. Of course, the Senator from Maryland is so characteristically temperate that he can not appreciate the vehemence of anybody else. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUCE. All I have got to say is that if everybody had the same ardent temperament that the Senator from Virginia has I myself would be strongly in favor of prohibition if it could possibly be made enforcible. Passionate as is the temperament of the Senator from Virginia anyhow, if he were to take to drink God only knows what murderous consequences would follow.

Mr. GLASS. It may be that that is the reason why I have got sense enough not to take a drink.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator has got sense enough for anything except that he has not at times, it seems to me, just exactly the proper sense of the measure of patient consideration that is due from one brother Senator to another.

Of course, the admirable, able, and interesting speech delivered by the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] was inspired merely by what has so often been said recently; that is, that if the South was justified in finding means for circumventing the fifteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, and lawfully circumventing it, then we antiprohibitionists would also be justified in resorting to any legal means that we could for the purpose of circumventing the eighteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. That is not the only source from which attacks have been made on the South in connection with the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments; they have come from political and many other sources. The South being subjected to criticism from so many sources because of the allegation that it was violating the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, of defying the Constitution, and being violators of law, whether those accusations were made by the so-called drys or the so-called wets, whether made by politicians in statements or newspapers, I felt the time had arrived for the South to speak out and show that it was not violating the Federal Constitution or any law but was merely exercising its right. I did not have in mind the so-called wets a bit more than the so-called drys; but I wanted to make it plain that we in the South have violated no law; that we are living up to the Constitution; that we purpose to live under it; that we purpose to exercise our rights under it. So I thought the time had come for the South to repel the criticisms coming from many different sources that we were violating the Constitution. I hope the Senator does not think that we are violating it.

Mr. BRUCE. I hear no such other criticism emanating from any substantial source.

Mr. SWANSON. Very well; then, there is no difference between us?

Mr. BRUCE. The only line of criticism that has been brought to my attention was that to which I have just referred. I had supposed that we had passed out of the deep troubled waters in which we found ourselves in the South for quite a time after the Civil War into waters perfectly serene and tranquil. So far as I can see, the whole country at the present time, without reference to party, is accepting, and I might almost say, accepting unmurmuringly, the results which have been brought about by the political efforts of the South to keep in check the full consequences of the second section of the fourteenth amendment and the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. Let me call the Senator's attention to this incident: Not long ago there was a suggestion that Federal marshals should be sent to the State of Kentucky to supervise a purely State election there. It was not merely a suggestion; it was an attempt on the part of certain public men in that State to induce the Department of Justice in Washington to proceed upon that course. A representative of one of the metropolitan newspapers of this country, foremost in its advocacy of the repeal of the Volstead Act, asked me what I thought of the proposition, and with my characteristic conservatism I said I thought it was idiotic. Thereupon this newspaper editorially challenged me to define the difference between having the Department of Justice in Washington send its agents to supervise a State election in Kentucky and having the department charged with the duty here in Washington sending its agents throughout the State to enforce the Volstead Act. Of course, the difference was so manifest that I did not trouble myself to respond to the editorial. It was the difference between having the Federal Government do something that it had no constitutional or statutory right to do and having it do something that it was obliged by the Constitution and the statute to do.

Mr. BRUCE. I think that the Senator laid down a perfectly clear and unanswerable distinction.

Mr. GLASS. Exactly. But thereupon that newspaper threatened the South with a revival of the issue of universal negro suffrage unless the South would abate its advocacy of prohibition. That editorial was forwarded to me with the request that I answer it if I could; it was dispatched to me by the head of the association organized to repeal the eighteenth amendment, with the statement that the Senator from Maryland himself would vouch for the character and good sense of this gentleman. It was not until that had been done that I presented myself in a public way upon this problem. So how the Senator from Maryland could proceed to identify me as a prohibition zealot or among the leaders of that cause I am unable to say, unless it be that I am not in the habit of drinking liquor.

Mr. BRUCE. I should be very glad to take the Senator out of that class of zealots even if he were within it.

Mr. GLASS. I wanted to point out to the Senator that that sort of an attack has been made against the South, and it has been made repeatedly.

Mr. BRUCE. That was not called to my attention. It must have been made in a very isolated way.

Mr. GLASS. It was made in a very concerted way until I made my response to the distinguished gentleman who referred me to the Senator from Maryland as sponsor for his character and good sense.

Mr. BRUCE. I have had very often in my life to refuse to act as a reference for people who were referred to me.

Now, I want to say just this: There is no Member of this body who believes more firmly than I do that the adoption of the fifteenth amendment was one of the most lamentable things that ever happened in the political history of any people—a thing not more regrettable for the whites of the South than for the colored people of the South.

Mr. GLASS. And vicious in itself.

Mr. BRUCE. It was, as Talleyrand said, one of those blunders that are worse than a crime. I will not stop to ask whether it was a crime; suffice it to say that it was one of those blunders that are worse than a crime.

Hardly had the thirteenth amendment been adopted before Gen. Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, who was a true statesman, as we all know, advocated in a speech at Columbia, S. C., the extension by the State of South Carolina itself of the franchise to the negro. His idea was that in the first stages of his enfranchisement the enfranchisement of the negro should be a discriminating one as respects the negro; and I am free to say that the fault I find with the fifteenth amendment is that it does not discriminate. The fifteenth amendment should have been so framed, as General Hampton contended, as to leave in the hands of the whites of the Southern States the power in the beginning of discriminating between the whites and the negroes; that is, of not at once admitting the negro in as full measures to the suffrage as the whites. In other words, the historic background of the whole subject should have been duly taken into consideration—the fact that the negro had been recently a slave and that for centuries his master had been a freeman, and the fact that the whites, of course, had enjoyed all kinds of privileges and advantages conducive to the intelligent exercise of the suffrage that the colored people of the South had not enjoyed.

If that had been done, if the wise counsels of General Hampton had been followed, in my judgment in process of time the southern whites would gradually have extended a larger and larger measure of civic capacity to the negro, just as the negro showed that he was fit for it; and all the turmoil and the sectional misunderstandings and the tragic consequences of every sort that flowed from the fifteenth amendment would have been avoided.

The fifteenth amendment was adopted; and, while I approve as unqualifiedly as either one of the Senators from Virginia of all the steps by which the southern people succeeded in anticipating the distressing results that would have followed the unqualified extension of suffrage to the negro before he was prepared for it. I think that the time has now come when the whites of the South should be a little more liberal to the negro, not simply as a matter of obligation to him but as a matter of obligation to the permanent interests, the lasting welfare, the long future of the southern whites themselves.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. When the Senator says that the South should be more liberal to the negro, does he mean from the political standpoint, or economically and industrially?

Mr. BRUCE. I mean, of course, economically, industrially, and educationally, too, to begin with. I think that the southern whites should be absolutely liberal to the negro in those respects.

Mr. BORAH. My opinion is that the South is much more liberal to the negro economically and industrially than the North.

Mr. BRUCE. I do not deny that proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does not the Senator from Maryland know that every Southern State levies taxes for the support of schools for the colored population?

Mr. BRUCE. I do. I most gladly confirm what the Senator says. I think that industrially and economically and educationally the negro of the South at the present time has every opportunity that he could reasonably expect.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BRUCE. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does not the Senator also know that the principal portion of those taxes is voluntarily imposed upon the white people by legislation enacted by them?

Mr. BRUCE. Of course, that is the case; and it is a most creditable thing to the southern white people that they did not enter on that policy only a few years ago. They entered on it almost immediately after the conclusion of the Civil War.

I say, considering the resources of the South, the whites have done everything substantially that they could be justly expected to do to elevate the economical and educational condition of the negro. Of course, I, too, am opposed to anything like social amalgamation or intermixtures at the South. I do not hesitate to say, speaking for my own race, that I trust that the time will never come when any darker tint of any kind, African or Mongolian, will ever creep across the fair disk of the white Anglo-Saxon face at the South, but I trust that in time the negro will come to feel the same pride in his race that I do in mine.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, just in what particular does the Senator think that greater liberality should be shown?

Mr. BRUCE. I think that the general attitude of the South toward the negro as a citizen and a voter might at this day be a little more liberal than it is. That is to say, I think the occasion has passed for the attitude of the people of the South to be quite so intolerant in that regard as it has been in the past. In other words, I am giving countenance a little bit to the ideas—I know that the Senator will not relish what I say any more than that—that have been advanced recently by men like Mr. Fairfax Harrison, of Virginia, or Mr. Henry W. Anderson, of Virginia, and other Virginians that I might name, who think that a strong minority party in Virginia would not be a bad thing.

I think the South would be immensely benefited in every respect by cultivating just a little more liberal spirit than it has at the present time. I think it perfectly natural that it should be a little more intolerant than the rest of the United States in some regards; but, in my opinion, the most important lesson that it has to learn now is that of tolerance—tolerance for social usages and habits differing in some respects from its own, tolerance for the spirit of free inquiry in the theological field, tolerance especially for diversities of sectarian belief.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I urge this point——

Mr. BRUCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GLASS. Without seeming in the slightest degree to suggest that the speech of my distinguished colleague [Mr. SWANSON] was not complete, may I, right at this point, answer a question propounded by the Senator from Maryland, who desired some explanation of why a large body of the negro race failed to exercise the right of suffrage? I will take as an example the Senator's own State of Virginia, where he was born and brought up.

Mr. BRUCE. Indeed I was; and I am proud of it.

Mr. GLASS. It so happens that I myself largely drew the suffrage article of the Virginia constitution, and in almost a word I can recite its provisions, and ask the Senator from Maryland to point out the inequity of any one of them, or the discrimination as between the white race and the colored race, and ask him to suggest how the suffrage laws of Virginia could be rendered more generous or more liberal to the Negro race with perfect safety to the Commonwealth itself.

We provide, in the first place, that a man shall be 21 years of age, whether he be white or black. We provide that he shall have had a certain length of residence in the State, whether he be white or black. We provide that he shall have resided for a certain length of time in the city or county in which he offers to vote, whether he be white or black. We require that before he shall have the privilege of a voter he shall register, whether he be white or black. We require that he shall make out his application for registration in his own handwriting, without memoranda or assistance of any sort, stating in the application his name, his place of residence, his business, and, on the day of his application, his age, which involves not only a literacy test but an ability to compute from the day of his birth to the day of his application for registration, and that whether he be white or black. After he shall have been put upon the registration books we require that he pay $1.50 poll tax, to be devoted to the public-school educational fund of the State, whether he be white or black. We require that he shall pay this poll tax six months in advance of the election.

The Senator knows that in the reconstruction period, and for a long time thereafter, it was the habit of this unhappy race to act en bloc, en masse, in groups, and under the leadership of mean white men. The Senator knows that it was their habit to sell their votes to the highest bidder en bloc. The design of the election laws of Virginia was to put a stop to that species of corruption. The poll-tax prerequisite of six months in advance of an election produced a certain situation. No candidate has been nominated for any office. There is no inducement to the negro to sell his vote six months in advance of the election, because there is nobody to buy; and those requirements—I have stated them exactly—apply with equal force to black and white.

The result is that instead of casting 157,000 votes at a presidential election, as was formerly the case in Virginia—votes either bought or mustered under the leadership of mean white men appealing to the racial prejudices and passions and ignorance of the race—I seriously doubt if there are as many as 20,000 negro votes cast in Virginia. Will the Senator suggest any desirable alteration in those requirements?

Mr. BRUCE. I am——.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to remind my friend from Maryland of his promise to me. I hope he will not permit the whole constitution of Virginia to be discussed here.

Mr. BRUCE. It seems to me that the Senator from Alabama should convey his reminder to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator is yielding.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator wanted that inquiry answered, and I think I have answered it, and now I am asking the Senator what alteration he would suggest in the suffrage laws of my State in order that the negro may be treated with the greatest consideration.

Mr. BRUCE. I did not have Virginia, which is quite far north, so much in mind when I was making the statements that I did make with reference to electoral conditions in the South. I am very glad to hear that electoral conditions in the State of Virginia are in such a healthy state. Perhaps they are leading up, gradually, to the formation of a good, strong, minority party there, which I think would be one of the best things that the State of Virginia could have.

Mr. GLASS. We would have had a minority party in the whole South long ago if we had not had the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. I believe that as firmly as does the Senator from Virginia. When I first went to the State of Maryland there was not a more partisan State in the United States. You almost put yourself at personal risk when you entered into party disputation, and for a long time the people of the State thought that utter ruin would overtake them if the Democratic Party were to meet with any reverse. Of course, the fact that for some time we had only a single party in Maryland led to all the characteristic abuses, election abuses, administrative abuses, legislative abuses, and the rest that usually attend such a situation, north of the Potomac at any rate. Then, finally the people of the State of Maryland, without regard to party, rose up and elected a Republican governor, and since that time, as it has suited their pleasure, they have elected Democrats and Republicans indistinguishably to the office of governor.

I do not hesitate to say that unquestionable benefit has followed from the fact of our having, instead of one single, stagnant, arbitrary, tyrannical party organization, two vigorous parties in the State of Maryland. Our people have become thoroughly independent in the formation and exercise of their political sentiments, all sorts of administrative reforms have been adopted that would not have been adopted if the State had continued to be hopelessly a one-party State; and while

I do not think that some of the southern communities are by any means ripe at this time for such a change, I have a strong feeling that if the State of Virginia at least would only foster a minority party she would find, even if that party occasionally came into power, that it would be no bad thing for the State. Those views are the views of some eminent Virginians at the present time, if I am not mistaken.

Now, to get back to the eighteenth amendment—and by doing that, of course, I am simply getting back to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]—I say that we have the right, by any lawful means that we can command, to soften, as far as it is possible, the rigor of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I do not suppose anybody would question that proposition at all.

Mr. BRUCE. Still, whenever we bring in a measure looking to a mitigation of the rigor of the eighteenth amendment, we always receive, I am very sorry to say, the opposition of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I have not seen any proposition of that kind. But suppose I were opposed to it. I might be opposed to a particular proposition, but the right of the Senator, or any other Senator, to move, within the eighteenth amendment, to modify the Constitution or to modify the law, nobody in his right mind would ever dispute.

Mr. BRUCE. I suppose not, and yet, at the same time, I have always understood the Senator to apply the sweeping word "nullification" to any and all efforts of every sort made to modify the Volstead Act or the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has not understood me correctly, then, in that regard. I have stated over and over again that you not only have the right to urge a repeal, you have a right to urge modification, but you have a right to urge the modification of any law, to bring it within the amendment, if you think it is not at present. There is no doubt about that. But there are those—and if the Senator is interested to know who they are I can advise him—who deliberately say, "We can not repeal the eighteenth amendment; we can not modify it; we will defy it." Those are the people I speak of.

Mr. BRUCE. I do not know who they are. I do not suppose that in the United States there is an individual who abominates the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment more than I do, and yet at the same time—and the Senator will bear me out in this—I have never at any time given the slightest approval here to the idea that the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment should not be enforced, and enforced like any other law or constitutional provision, so long as they are in operation. The Senator will doubtless recollect that when it was alleged that it was impossible for one judge to look after the great number of violations of the Volstead Act in Maryland, I came to this body and secured the creation of another Federal judgeship for that State, and practically the whole time of the additional judge is given up to hearings in Volstead Act cases. I have never at any time turned my face with approval to any suggestion that any judge should be criticized, or that any officer of the law should be reprehended, when engaged in the lawful enforcement of the Volstead Act.

The fight I and thousands of others in this country are making is, first of all, for the modification of the Volstead Act and then for the amendment of the eighteenth amendment. The Senator knows that General Andrews, one of the most intelligent men who has ever been connected with the Prohibition Unit in my time, and also Mr. Waddell, another most intelligent prohibition administrator, have certified that if Congress would only pass a law allowing a larger alcoholic content for beer, that would work a great change for the better in prohibition conditions throughout the United States. So far as the modification of the Volstead Act is concerned, that is all we are striving for. We think that if the use of a 2.75 or 3 per cent beer, which is certainly not intoxicating, were allowed, that would do a great deal to mitigate these deplorable conditions of lawlessness which now prevail.

In addition to that, as the Senator knows, I have brought forward a most conservative proposition looking not to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, but to the amendment of the eighteenth amendment. That program proposes to amend the eighteenth amendment in such a manner as to enable Congress to adopt the Quebec system of liquor control, which has worked in the Province of Quebec as well as any legislation of the sort can ever be expected to work.

That is our program, a lawful program, a perfectly legitimate program, and, as I said before, if the South is to be allowed by lawful means to circumvent the effect of the fifteenth amendment—it has circumvented it——

Mr. GLASS. "Is to be allowed?" Who can prevent the South from doing that?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. GLASS. I do not know of anybody in the Congress of the United States who wants to prevent it except the only white man that I know on earth, with a single exception, who seems to regret he was not born a negro.

Mr. BRUCE. Who is that?

Mr. GLASS. Oh——

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator surely does not intend to apply such language as that to me?

Mr. GLASS. I am utterly astonished that the Senator in his wildest imagination could think I intended to apply it to him.

Mr. BRUCE. I know the Senator could not; I never felt any real doubt on that subject. Yet the language was so equivocal that I did not know what its scope was.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to be conceded now that the fifteenth amendment is not being violated.

Mr. BRUCE. It is being circumvented.

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator, confining our remarks to the fifteenth amendment, how the fifteenth amendment is being violated or circumvented?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I am absolutely unwilling to go into that subject. I have already said I approve of all the lawful methods, even of the most extreme, by which the fifteenth amendment was nullified at the South, but I said at the same time that I think that an era has now come in the history of the South when the South can afford to deal with its racial problems in a very different manner from that in which it had to deal with them in the past. That is the point. I am not willing to be taken back over the field of discussion that the Senator from Idaho would open out.

Mr. BORAH. I am not asking the Senator to go back. I am asking the Senator at this time to point out wherein any Southern State is circumventing or nullifying the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator will not say that the Southern States have not attempted to, will he?

Mr. BORAH. There have been laws passed which the Supreme Court has held were in contravention of the fifteenth amendment. That is not an unusual thing. Laws have been passed in the Northern States which have been held in contravention of the fourteenth amendment. What I say is that at the present time I should like to know what laws are on the statute books of the States in the South which are in violation of the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. I am not going into that subject.

Mr. BORAH. I believe if the Senator will investigate the matter he will find that, so far as the charge now being made is concerned that the fifteenth amendment is being circumvented or violated, it is a mistake.

Mr. BRUCE. The fact is, as we all know, that the negro does not vote. Is that from a lack of inclination to vote? We know that is not so. As soon as we cross the Potomac, we find him voting everywhere.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the South has a perfect right, under the fifteenth amendment, to pass an educational test.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. That is not violating the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. But laws can be applied in such a way as to answer all the purposes of discriminating statutes.

Mr. GLASS. I want to assert for Virginia that the laws there apply with perfect equality between the whites and the blacks.

Mr. BRUCE. I recollect a few years ago that I happened to be present at a conversation between the late Cardinal Gibbons, that eminent and beloved prelate who lived in Maryland, and Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, and myself. The cardinal, in the course of the conversation, said to Senator Tillman, in that unique voice of his, "How many negroes are there in South Carolina?" "Ah," said Tillman, "your eminence, we are so little in the habit of counting them at elections that I really can not tell you." That is but one of many illustrations which might be used of the methods by which the South—for its own preservation, mind you; I am not disputing that—brought about this condition of safety in which it finds itself to-day.

A Senator in this body said to me that when an election was taking place in a Southern State under one of those constitutional provisions requiring the voter to read and understand a portion of the Constitution, a negro was asked to read and explain the two words "quadrilateral parallelogram." So you see you do not have to have disfranchising constitutional provisions or statutes on the statute books in order to disfranchise a voting element in a community. The real thing that disfranchises, of course, is the absolute determination of the white race that, so long as the negro generally is unfit for suffrage, law or no law, Constitution or no Constitution, he shall not bring southern civilization to a state of shipwreck.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand the Senator's position, it is this: That in the administration of the election laws there are dishonest and crooked administrators.

Mr. BRUCE. Everywhere.

Mr. BORAH. And, as I understand the Senator, citing the acts of those crooked and dishonest administrators as a precedent, he wants the same right to do those things in the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment?

Mr. BRUCE. Indeed, I do not. I deny that. There are issues far more vital than the issue as to whether prohibition is or is not a sound policy. There is that issue as to whether anything is left to human society or whether the foundations of the orderly, upright, and fearless administration of justice in the courts are undermined.

Mr. BORAH. What I am trying to ascertain is why the fifteenth amendment is constantly cited as a justification for treatment of the eighteenth amendment?

Mr. BRUCE. Because the South has found lawful means in the past of nullifying, wherever it was necessary to nullify, the pernicious effects of negro suffrage. We are searching for lawful means by which the full force of the eighteenth amendment may be reconciled with liberal changes.

Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. EDGE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BRUCE. I will yield to the Senator from New Jersey in a moment; but before he interrupts me let me say this: This is what I mean by the long future of the South, and, mind you, I am a southerner, and there is not a drop of blood in my veins that is not southern blood. There is no one who is more devoted to the South than I; but I trust that my patriotism is broad enough to include the whole country. The negro is no longer a slave. He is no longer an ignorant, staggering freedman such as he was just after the Civil War. He is acquiring education, and intelligence along with it. He is acquiring property. He is becoming a better citizen; he certainly is in Maryland. Another thing is that there has been a vast efflux of negroes from the South to northern communities, where they are beginning to exert a very great measure of political influence.

I say in view of these facts that measures which once suited the requirements of the South, and justly and properly suited them in every respect, are not just the measures now on which the welfare of the South should be made to depend. I think that the whole attitude of the South toward the negro ought to be a little more liberal than it has been in the past. I think it can be without any sacrifice of sound principles or any peril to the social integrity of the white race. That is what we believe in Maryland. We give negroes there the same educational opportunities that the members of every other race has.

Mr. BORAH. But you are not circumventing the fifteenth amendment in Maryland?

Mr. BRUCE. There was an effort made to circumvent it 15 or 20 years ago by the adoption of some of those constitutional devices to which reference has been made to-day, but the people of Maryland refused to give their approval to them.

Mr. BORAH. If Maryland is not now practicing circumvention, why not follow Maryland as a precedent with regard to the eighteenth amendment?

Mr. BRUCE. I think Maryland could be taken as a good precedent on almost any subject. I think our people entertain about as sane and conservative and judicious views on public matters as any people in the United States. Some time ago I said incidentally to President Coolidge in a conversation with him, "You know, Mr. President, our people in Maryland are a very successful, sane, well-balanced people." In reply he spoke up with more animation than I had ever seen him exhibit at any time previously in his life, and said, "That, Senator BRUCE, is undoubtedly so." I took pains to convey that statement back to our people in Maryland.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. If I understand the gravamen of the Senator's complaint, it is that the South is not sufficiently liberal to the negro, but treats him with injustice and harshness, and ought to moderate its treatment of the negro. On behalf of Virginia, I resent that statement.

Mr. BRUCE. I did not say that. The negro is treated very justly, on the whole, in Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I resent it. When Virginia hardly had money enough to educate its own soldiers—the boys who fought in the Confederate Army—it took one-third of the funds which it received from the Federal Government for an agricultural college—when people could not go to college because we did not have colleges—and gave it to create a negro college at Hampton, a great institution for the colored people. When she did not have money enough to educate her own own children she created a great college for colored teachers—a normal school at Petersburg—to educate negro teachers to teach the negro people, to encourage higher education, at a time when we were almost depriving our own children of education.

I know in my own county we have had negro schools, which were never overcrowded. I resent the suggestion that anybody should say that Virginia is unfair to the negro in commerce, in education, or in any other way. They have a better chance in Richmond than they have in Baltimore.

Mr. BRUCE. I am in no position to institute a comparison.

Mr. SWANSON. But the Senator has done so.

Mr. BRUCE. I do know that in Maryland the negroes have political freedom, but I do not say that that would be a good thing for a community where the negroes are in the majority, or nearly in a majority. I am not saying that.

Mr. SWANSON. Any negro in Virginia can vote who will get $250 in money and stay there a certain length of time and have certain educational qualifications. I resent the imputation on Virginia.

Mr. BRUCE. There is no imputation about it. The Senator is simply setting up a straw man and knocking him down.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRUCE. Just a moment, if the Senator pleases.

I have said repeatedly that I think that the South as a whole has done everything which anybody could reasonably expect it to do for years back to improve the educational status of the negro. I am not going to say that any more. I said it once, and I do not propose to say it again. I have not said a thing, it seems to me, to which any southern Senator could possibly object unless he is given over to a hopeless spirit of intolerance.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BRUCE. I say at the present time, and I say it as a southerner, that the Southern States should first of all cultivate a spirit of tolerance in more than one respect.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not in all the history of this body has a Senator intruded himself in and taken the place of another Senator who gave notice that he was going to speak. I rose as he rose, and I ought to have been recognized in accordance with an understanding that I would be recognized in compliance with the notice given; but a new Senator, inexperienced as Presiding Officer, who happened to be in the chair at the time, recognized the Senator from Maryland. I stated the situation, and the Senator from Maryland insisted that he would talk, but talk only a few moments. He has been on the floor 50 minutes. I insist that he has not the right to consume this time when I had given notice that I would speak. I am entitled to speak, and I now ask that the Senate pass upon this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The chair at the time was occupied by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], and the present occupant of the chair was notified that he had recognized the Senator from Maryland. In that event the Senator from Maryland has the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the Chair sent me word that he would recognize me according to the notice given.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. BRUCE. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I hope opportunity will be afforded the Senator from Alabama to make his address.

Mr. BRUCE. An opportunity will be afforded.

Mr. HEFLIN. And there will be ample opportunity for me to pay my respects to certain Senators.

Mr. BRUCE. I have only a few more words to say, and I want to say them.

While the South appears to be more intolerant in spirit at the present time than other sections of the country, it should in justice be recollected that with the exception of small portions of its territory it has a very small foreign element in its population. The South is inhabited mainly, of course, by descendents of the Anglo-Saxon stock which came to this country during the colonial period and after the Revolutionary period.

It should also be remembered that the Catholic population of the South, outside of the State of Louisiana, is very small. As I often say to my southern friends, if there were only more Catholics in the South they would not be so much misunderstood. I do not believe there is any general widespread feeling of intolerance in the South, but there would not be any worth speaking of if there were more Catholics for the other elements of the southern population to associate with and intermarry with and have a thorough understanding with, as is the case, for instance, in the State of Maryland. But the peculiar constitution of the southern population and other causes have brought it about, as I see it, that the South at the present time is marked by an intolerant spirit of which it should divest itself just as soon as possible. I think it is going to have a perfectly splendid opportunity, when the next Democratic National Convention meets, to show to the world that its sectarian and sumptuary prejudices are not so deeply ingrained as they appear to be. That is all that I desire to say.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Maryland how long it has been since the end of the Civil War? Let me ask the Senator if he believes that a southern man could be nominated for President of the United States? He is talking about prejudice.

Mr. BRUCE. If a southern man could be nominated?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly I think so.

Mr. GLASS. Why has not one been nominated in the last 65 years?

Mr. BRUCE. That is a different proposition.

Mr. GLASS. That is not prejudice, is it?

Mr. BRUCE. I think we will have a southern man in the White House again in the future.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but the Senator's great-great-grandchildren will not live to see it.

Mr. BRUCE. When we put Woodrow Wilson, a southern man, in the White House, we put him in through the back door, and I think that the time will come pretty soon when we will bring in a southern man, provided he has the same high qualifications for the office as anybody else in the country generally through the front door of the White House. I had hoped at one time that it might be the Senator from Virginia himself.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no; it will never be.

Mr. BRUCE. There is no reason why it should not be.

Mr. GLASS. A good many southern men have superior qualifications to some other people who are conspicuously talked of for the Presidency.

Mr. BRUCE. I can not admit that unqualifiedly just at this time, because I think that superior qualifications for the Presidency are possessed by Gov. Alfred E. Smith, of New York, as well as Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—ALLEGED MEXICAN PROPAGANDA

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] has certainly punished the galleries to-day. He could not resist, when he saw this magnificent array of fine men and women, getting into the RECORD something about the eighteenth amendment. If the Senator keeps up the "lick" he is going, he is going to defeat himself. He butted in here on Friday on the Nicaraguan question and took the side that favored the murder of our boys in Nicaragua. That is what they are doing down there. They killed an Alabama boy down there. This morning he took issue with the two distinguished Senators from Virginia on the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, and waded down into the pool, out again, and in again until he almost drowned.

Mr. President, his performance in taking the place that I was entitled to under the custom of the Senate was very improper and in very bad taste. If he had given notice, as I had, and had risen and notified me, though I had gotten recognition, I would have yielded to him. I do not believe there is another Senator in this body who would have insisted on holding the floor under the conditions that he did.

I know that there is no rule that entitles a Senator to give notice that he will speak, and then take the floor in spite of anything that may arise, but it has been a custom here that has never before been violated. This body is about 150 years old, and no Senator, so far as I know, has ever taken such a position in all the history of the Government, but the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], standing here talking away on the eighteenth amendment and on the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. Against the attacks on the South on those questions, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], able, strong Republican comes to the defense of the South, backing up the able speech made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], a princely and powerful Democrat, backed up by his colleague [Mr. GLASS], both of whom presented an unanswerable argument in support of their position. However, the Senator from Maryland wanted to get in; he could not resist the temptation to get in. He did not walk in; he fell in. [Laughter.]

Will not that read good in Maryland—God bless that State! The people of that State are not in sympathy with anybody that jumps on the South about the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. How they will hang their heads when they see that the senior Senator from Maryland has done that thing here to-day! I have not the time to waste more on that phase of the question.

It was bad taste from many standpoints. I had been misrepresented by newspapers over the country, especially by the Roman Catholic press, and had given notice that I would reply to those villainous sheets that have lied about me and my position, and I would reply to some of the whisky sheets in my State, and the Senator from Maryland gets in here, intrudes himself in, and gets the floor from a new and inexperienced Senator who did not know the rules or the customs, and gets recognition.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield for just a moment, but not for a speech.

Mr. STEIWER. I assume the distinguished Senator from Alabama refers to the junior Senator from Oregon, who happened to be in the chair for the moment. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I fully intended to recognize him, in accordance with his request, when the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] yielded the floor. The Senator from Alabama, however, apparently was asleep in his chair and did not rise to his feet; he did not address the Chair; he did not seem to be conscious that the Senator from Virginia had discontinued; so the Chair recognized the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], who addressed the Chair.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the fact is—and that is all I want to say—that a Member of the House, a good friend of mine, Representative BELL, from Georgia, was talking to me. As he was just walking away I nodded my head and said, "Mr. President"; but the Senator from Maryland did address the Chair before I did; I concede that. If, however, the present occupant of the chair [the Vice President in the chair] had been in the chair after the notice had been given, and I had addressed the Chair nearly simultaneously with the Senator from Maryland, I would have been recognized by the Vice President of this body. But enough of that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama intend that as a compliment or the reverse?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not hear the statement of the Chair? What was it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to state the rule. This is a good time to emphasize the rule. The rule requires Senators to address the Chair as well as to rise. The Chair thinks the Senator from Oregon pursued the proper course.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Chair has the discretion to recognize whom he pleases when four or five Senators arise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When they address the Chair.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have frequently seen a Republican Presiding Officer recognize a Republican, and I have seen a Democratic Presiding Officer recognize a Democrat, when two or three Senators were trying to obtain recognition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the Senator to understand at this time that it is necessary, in order to get recognition under the rules, for the Senator to rise and address the Chair. The Senator from Alabama has stated that he was unable to do that; therefore the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], who was then in the chair, was correct in his recognition of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say that I did not rise and address the Chair; but I did say that the Senator from Maryland addressed the Chair first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland first addressed the Chair, and the duty of the Chair was to recognize the Senator from Maryland. The Chair does not want his position on this matter misunderstood. The Chair agrees thoroughly with the position of the Senator from Oregon, for the reason that the Senator from Maryland first addressed the Chair, on his feet.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then does the Chair hold that a notice given by a Senator does not carry any weight?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not after a Senator has been recognized. A Senator who gives notice of an intention to speak should rise to his feet and address the Chair and then obtain recognition and proceed. The precedents upon that subject are clear.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Chair takes that position against the custom that has obtained for 150 years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That custom has not obtained for 150 years. In every case the Senator who was recognized rose and addressed the Chair. The ruling under Rule XXI has been to the effect that an announcement that a speech would be made does not exempt the Senator from the necessity of first addressing the Chair.

Mr. HEFLIN. The custom to which I refer has never been previously violated, so far as I know; Senators old in the service tell me it has never before been violated; I have a right to my views on the subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. So the Senator from Maryland had a right to insist upon recognition. Under the precedents and rule that has been the custom if insistence be made.

Mr. HEFLIN. That does not in any way alter my opinion about the conduct of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that it has been a custom in this body ever since I have been here when a Senator gave notice that he would speak on a particular day at a particular time to permit him to have the floor at that time unless he voluntarily surrendered it to some one else. It is, of course, merely a matter of courtesy, however, Mr. President, but it is a courtesy that has always been observed in this body until to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator to be correct, that it is a matter of courtesy.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is what I have insisted on.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield for a moment, but I want to go on with my speech.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not let the statement which has been made pass by without calling the attention of the Senate to what I believe to be its incorrectness. I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina that, while I think that has been the custom observed, yet it is not for the Chair to remind a Senator who has given notice. If some other Senator addresses the Chair first I do not see how the Chair can avoid following the rule of the Senate which says that it is his duty to recognize the first Senator who addresses the chair.

Mr. HEFLIN. I understand, Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to call attention to the fact that there have been precedents to the contrary, which show that what the Senator says has never occurred has occurred; at least, it has happened to me, for when I have given notice I have been deprived of the right to deliver an address according to my notice.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, the Chair has to recognize the Senator who addresses him first under the rule, but when attention has been called to the fact that another Senator has given notice that he would proceed at that time I have never known the Senator gaining recognition by reason of his alertness to insist upon holding the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, there seems to be some division of opinion on this question. So far as I am concerned, so long as I shall be a Member of this body, I shall observe that custom. If I should arise and secure recognition and any other Senator should then tell me that he had given notice that it was his time to speak and he was to follow another Senator, as I did in this instance—when I said that I was to follow the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]—I would say, "Very well; I yield to the Senator"; but that was not done by the Senator from Maryland. I merely wish the RECORD to show and I want those who are here to know just what sort of efforts are being made in this body to keep me from getting the truth into this RECORD. That effort is not going to succeed; there is not enough power in the hands of the opposition to prevent me from getting the truth to the American people if I live. I try to be fair to all Senators, and I never offend a Senator unless he has done something to offend me. No Senator can cite an instance in my service in either branch of Congress where I have ever done that; but I know my rights and I know the rights of the people and I know what is vital to the welfare of this Government. I have my own opinions as to what is the highest and best interest of this country, and I am going to continue to do my duty as I see it. The Senator from Maryland can not keep me from addressing this body. He may offend me and annoy me by such a performance as he carried on here to-day.

What was his speech worth, after all, breaking into the able speech of the Senator from Virginia and drawing that Senator's colleague [Mr. GLASS] into a running debate? Then the Senator from Idaho had to rise up and rebuke him. All that while he was holding the floor when I had given notice that I was going to speak following the Senator from Virginia and had word from the Chair that he would recognize me when Senator SWANSON had finished his speech. I thought that when the Senator from Maryland rose the Chair would rap and look around and say, "The Senator from Alabama is recognized." He could have done that. Presiding officers do it frequently. But as quick as a lightning flash he recognized the Senator from Maryland. The Senator from Maryland said "Mr. President" just ahead of me, but the Chair could have said, "The Senator from Alabama." I think the present occupant of the chair would have recognized me under the exact circumstances that existed. [Laughter.] I got up when the Senator from Maryland arose, but he said "Mr. President" a little before I did. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time and he does not know what occurred. I am trying to say that he would be fair about it; I believe he would have recognized me. He is just passing on what they have told him. I think he is a fair man and a courageous man.

Mr. President, the subsidized press is becoming a serious problem in this country. It has misrepresented what occurred here the other day, lied deliberately about my speech and what occurred in the Senate. They took a few words out of a speech which lasted probably three hours, a running debate between the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and myself part of the time. At one point the Senator from Arkansas was interrupted by me, and I said: "Well, the Senator would not make that speech down in Arkansas." He said, "Yes; I will make it in Arkansas and in Alabama"; and I said, figuratively and in fun, "The Senator would be tarred and feathered if he did." I laughed; the Senator from Arkansas laughed; the whole Senate laughed; and the occupants of the galleries laughed; and yet these little subsidized bucks in the press galleries who shape their creed for their cravings and swallow their convictions and honor for coin, carried the statement all over the country that I had solemnly told the Senator from Arkansas that the people would seize him and spread tar over him and put feathers on him if he went down in Arkansas and in Alabama and made that speech.

I am satisfied that the Senator from Arkansas does not believe that I believed that they would do that; and I intended to strike that from the speech. A lot of things are said here in running debate that sound all right and amuse those who hear it, but Senators strike them out when it is over and they come to look over the notes of their speeches, because in cold print the meaning might be misinterpreted. The Senator from Arkansas would be as safe in my State, speaking on any subject, as I would be in his; but these little villains, hired to do dirty work, picked that out above everything else and said that Senator HEFLIN said that Senator ROBINSON would be tarred and feathered. Oh, what a terrible thing they tried to make out of that. They sent it down in a hurry to subsidized newspapers in my State, and the money to buy one and maybe two was furnished by the breweries; and I am going to have an investigation made of them. One was conducted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] in 1918, when the war was on, and the German-American Alliance and the breweries were operating in the United States. They furnished money to buy the Montgomery Advertiser, of Montgomery, Ala., one of the villainous sheets that picked out this expression from a speech of three hours and seriously insisted that I really meant that the Senator from Arkansas would be tarred and feathered.

BREWERS BUY MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER

Mr. President, one of my ancient newspaper enemies in Alabama—the Montgomery Advertiser—is mad because I have assailed its candidate for President, Al Smith. It is seeking to make some people believe, in Alabama and elsewhere, that it has just now decided to support Al Smith, all because of my speech in the Senate against Smith and the Roman Catholic political machine. Miserable old hypocrite! It kept its candidate in the background while I was speaking in Alabama in October and November last, but I told the people that it would come out for Smith when a sufficient amount of Smith financial oil has been poured into the Advertiser machinery.

Homer tells us that the people could always tell when the goddess came to Thebes. So the announcement that the Montgomery Advertiser has declared for Al Smith shows that the Roman Catholic whisky brewer interests have been to Montgomery.

Listen to this:

[Senate Document No. 61, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session]

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN AND BOLSHEVIK PROPAGANDA

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,

Chairman Subcommittee, Judiciary Committee,

Acting under Resolution No. 307, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: * * * The second "whereas" in the preamble to the resolution relates to an entirely distinct line of inquiry of even greater importance. It deals with charges that there is evidence in the Department of Justice and in the offices of United States district attorneys showing the political activities of the United States Brewers Association and individual brewers, and their connection with the German-American Alliance. * * *

That the United States Brewers' Association and individual brewers and liquor organizations have by indirect methods attempted to subsidize certain newspapers, magazines, periodicals, and publications, many of the articles being first censored in the office of the United States Brewers' Association before being printed. * * *

Senator WOLCOTT. That collateral note is not the same collateral note that you read in the first connection?

Major HUMES. No, sir; this is the collateral note that is attached to the note of Mr. Sheehan. The former collateral note I read was attached to the note of Mr. Allen.

Senator WOLCOTT. I gather from you that there were two notes totaling $100,000.

Major HUMES. Yes. * * *

Senator KING. The point I had in mind is whether there is any controversy as to the ownership of the newspaper at present, and the contention which I understand you make, namely, that it was acquired by brewers or the brewery interests.

Major HUMES. I know of no dispute. The records of the other departments of the Government show that the ownership is as indicated by these securities. * * *

Senator OVERMAN. I suppose there will be notice of it in the newspapers. The claim, as I understand it, Major, is that the brewers paid for the Montgomery Advertiser $100,000?

Major HUMES. That they financed the purchase. * * *

We have purchased from Mr. Frank P. Glass his entire interest in the Advertiser which is 50 per cent of the total capital stock. We will operate and control the paper with the aid and cooperation of the family of the late Maj. W. W. Screws which owns the other 50 per cent of the stock. * * *

F. P. GLASS SELLS HIS INTEREST IN THE ADVERTISER TO SHEEHAN AND ALLEN

* * * Frank P. Glass, who has been for 30 years owner of 50 per cent of the stock of the Advertiser has disposed of his entire holdings to W. T. Sheehan, editor of the paper, and Charles H. Allen, the paper's advertising manager. * * *

TESTIMONY OF MR. CHRISTIAN W. FEIGENSPAN

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. What is your name?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Christian W. Feigenspan.

Senator WOLCOTT. And your residence?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. 53 Lincoln Park, Newark, N. J.

Major HUMES. Mr. Feigenspan, you were present while the collateral was being presented and the names read a few moments ago?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. Yes, sir.

Major HUMES. Will you state in what business the individuals and concerns whose names were signed to that collateral are engaged?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I think they are all brewers.

Major HUMES. I believe you are one of the signers?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I am.

Major HUMES. Are you in the brewing business?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I am.

Major HUMES. Will you state whether or not all of those persons are members of the United States Brewers' Association?

Mr. FEIGENSPAN. I believe they are. * * *

My information is that Allen and Sheehan were nothing more than dummies in that transaction, and that as soon as Glass got the brewers' money he proceeded to turn most of it, if not all of it, over to Victor H. Hanson.

This is the paper that went out of its way to misrepresent and malign me for a remark made in fun in running debate. Of course, I did not mean it literally. The Senator from Arkansas did not, I am sure, regard it as such, or he would have said something about it at the time. All the Senators took it in the spirit in which it was meant. No Senator has told me that I ought not to have said it. They laughed and said, "Why, we knew it was said in fun, that you did not mean it." Of course, they knew that I did not mean for it to be taken seriously.

But, now, look what you have got up here in this press gallery! [Laughter.] You have got some very clever boys up there. I repeat, I reserve the right to talk about them when they need to be talked about. They write about me as they please. [Laughter.] There are two classes of them. One of them is a clever, clean, courageous, honest class; the other is an unclean, dishonest, and a cowardly class. There are two classes of them; and those who took this expression out of my speech and insisted on it as a serious statement are cowardly puppets, every one of them. They could not take what I said here about other matters that were serious. They lost sight entirely of letters that I read from many States in the Union, saying how I had been "framed" in this Mexican matter.

You know, I sometimes think they conspired together, some of them, to ignore the speech that I made about conduct that vitally affects the American people, and will in the near future, unless something is done to stop it, affect them more and more; so they decided to pick that up, and give publicity to that, and emphasis to that, and ignore the other things I said to keep the people from knowing the truth.

Why did they not tell the people that I was receiving telegrams and letters from all over the country saying that I was entirely right in the position I had taken, and that Knights of Columbus money was furnished to have this conspiracy carried out, and to drag my name into disrepute? That is a serious charge; and I made the statement, as I had a right to make it, that I believed that they were back of this attack on me. I have never ceased to believe it. Who else could be more interested in "framing" me and seeking to destroy me than the Knights of Columbus and the Roman Catholic political machine, which I exposed in the Senate when they were ready to get us into war with Mexico. I received thousands of letters saying that I did more to prevent war with Mexico than anybody else.

Who, in the whole country, was more offended at me than they? Who else could want to destroy me in this body, and destroy me politically in my State quite so much as they? Nobody that I know anything about. This Al Smith wet bunch and the Roman Catholic political machine are very anxious to injure me in every way possible.

Mr. President, the mayor of Montgomery, Ala., wired the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] inviting him to come down there and speak. The Senator is receiving some messages and letters from my State, and I am receiving a great big bunch of them from his State [Arkansas]. He has his enemies in Arkansas, and I have mine in Alabama; but no friend of mine and no man who has ever sincerely been for me has gone off on this tar-and-feather makeshift that these little pen-pushing fellows framed up and sent over the wires as the leader of a story, out of a speech that lasted nearly three hours, in which I showed that the Premier of France in 1925, Mr. Herriot, said that the Pope congratulated the Catholics of France for organizing themselves into a Roman Catholic political party; and Mr. Herriot charged that the Roman Catholics were forming political parties in every country.

I had stated that on this floor, and I stated that Mr. Herriot said that "the Pope should keep his hands out of our business; we will not take orders from the Vatican."

That is a big proposition. It is a big question. Mr. Herriot said they are trying to form Roman Catholic parties in every country. That is what I contended on this floor; and not an important line of it was printed. That was my speech in part. When Senator ROBINSON said, "I will make that speech in Arkansas and Alabama," I said, "If you do, they will tar and feather you." He laughed; I laughed; all of us laughed; the crowds in the gallery laughed; and that is all there was to it—I said Arkansas and Alabama—and now they have left out Arkansas, these little squirrel heads in the press gallery. [Laughter.] I wonder why they left out Arkansas? They just put Alabama in it. You read the RECORD—I said Arkansas and Alabama. Well, of course, I know they are not going to tar and feather the Senator from Arkansas in either one of those places.

I intended, as I said before, to strike that out; but I was pretty tired when we adjourned. I had to go over a long speech made before I was drawn into a second speech by Senator ROBINSON, and the time soon came to send them in to get them in the RECORD, and I had to leave out of that day's RECORD part of my first speech, and I simply overlooked the "tar and feather" remark. That is all there is to that.

The mayor of Montgomery wired the Senator from Arkansas and invited him to come down there and speak. I should be glad to have him go. I probably will go with him, and we could both speak at Montgomery, Ala., and Little Rock, Ark., on the same occasion. We might arrange a joint debate where both of our constituents could hear the issues discussed, and I can assure him that he will not be "tarred and feathered," and I know I would not be in the least danger in Arkansas. But the mayor of Montgomery said:

I speak not only for the city of Montgomery but for the majority of the people of the State.

Well, he has covered entirely too much territory in that statement.

I got a letter from a member of the legislature of Senator ROBINSON'S State telling me that 2,000,000 people in Arkansas were with me; so it looks like they are covering a heap of territory in both of these States. The mayor of Montgomery claims a bare majority of my State, which would be about a million and a half, and according to this legislator's letter from Arkansas I have got Senator ROBINSON bested by a half a million people on that proposition; but the mayor of Montgomery, though he claims to speak for the people of the State, can not do that, and never will. He is mayor of Montgomery. His father is a very distinguished, fine old southern gentleman. This man is classed as a "wet," and of course the "wet" group down there combined with the Roman Catholic vote and elected him mayor.

Now he has allowed his imagination to run away with him and he has covered too much territory when he arrogantly asserts the right to speak for the people of the State—a mayor of one city saying that he speaks for the whole State is covering a lot of territory. There are over 3,000,000 people in my State, and I am satisfied that 2,800,000 of them never heard of him, and yet he is going to speak for the State! He covered, I repeat, entirely too much territory.

This little mayor down there reminds me of a story Bob Taylor used to tell about, a tall, Ichabod Crane looking fellow who went into a saloon with a long floor running back to the fireplace, sanded and the walls whitewashed all around. A bunch of mountaineers were standing back there by the fireplace warming their hands, and this fellow slapped his hand on the counter and frightened the bartender, who had his back to him, and said, "Stir me up a toddy, quick!" The bartender stirred it up and gave it to this fellow, and he gulped it down in a second, and turned and looked toward the men at the fireplace, and said "I can whip any man in Memphis." Nobody spoke. He said, "Gimme another one of them things," and the bartender gave him another one. He turned around again and said, "I can whip any man in the county of Shelby"; and nobody spoke. He said, "Gimme another one, and make it strong!" The bartender gave him the third one, and he took that, and then he turned and said louder than before, "I can whip any man in the State of Tennessee." A tall mountaineer with a fist like a yearling's head came out, struck this fellow under the jaw, and sent him sprawling on the sanded floor; and after he had raised himself from the floor he said, "Gentlemen, I am of the opinion that I covered a leetle too much territory in that last statement." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, that is the way it is with this mayor of Montgomery. He has covered a little too much territory when he boasts that he speaks for the State; and I am going to call on the people of Montgomery to pass on his uncalled-for and insulting telegram—the part that referred to me. I mean the one he sent to Senator ROBINSON. Now, let me give you his Catholic connections. As soon as I got a copy of the telegram he sent to Senator ROBINSON I said, "There is something strange about this man's conduct. I wonder if he has any Catholic connections." I commenced thinking about it, and I said, "I believe one of his sisters married a Semple—Darry Semple, a Roman Catholic"; and I wired to a distinguished citizen of Montgomery and asked him to give me the facts. Gunter's sister married Darry Semple, a Roman Catholic. Semple, Gunter's brother-in-law's sister was Mother Superior Semple, who was in Mexico for years. She came here in 1926 and testified in support of the Boylan resolution; and the Boylan resolution declared that we should sever diplomatic relations with Mexico immediately, and Mr. BOYLAN is a Roman Catholic. Severing diplomatic relations with Mexico meant war.

Mother Superior Semple testified. She is the woman I quoted on this floor last January and February, the woman who stated that Mr. Sheffield intimated to her that he could not say much, but for her to go back to the United States and talk long and loud about conditions over there. I am just giving the facts. These are good people in Alabama, and I am saying nothing against them. A brother of Mayor Gunter's brother-in-law is a Roman Catholic priest. So you get the environment of Mayor Gunter, who sends a telegram up here saying that I reflected on the State and maligned the State. So when anything like this happens I always look for the Roman Catholic connecting link.

I am going to show in a few minutes what I did to the daily papers there that have opposed, misrepresented, and slandered me for 25 years. I have whipped them in every battle I have fought with them, and I will whip them again.

I want to show what happened right at Montgomery, the capital of the State, where Mr. Gunter is mayor. The Montgomery Advertiser, the Birmingham News, and the Age-Herald are all tarred with the same stick—and that is not said in fun, that is said in earnest; they are all tarred with the same stick, and I believe the testimony that I intend to take will prove that the same infamous whisky and beer and Roman Catholic interests control them all. I am going to seek an investigation that, I believe, will straighten that matter all out.

There is a mortgage on the Birmingham News, recorded in the courthouse at Birmingham, Jefferson County; I think the amount is for $2,000,000. They have tied it up somehow, I am informed, with the First National Bank of Birmingham. I think they are undertaking to cover their tracks, just as they did in the brewery deal for the Advertiser investigation conducted by the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], when he was chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

These Al Smith inspired papers assailed me for my position here last winter when I helped to defeat the Roman Catholic program for war with Mexico. They denounced me over the State, and when I got home, on September 4, I received invitations to speak all over the State—to come and speak and answer those papers. I went to thirty-odd places, and at every place I spoke I denounced those papers and named them in resolutions, and the audiences stood up en masse like receiving the benediction at church, passing the resolutions condemning those papers. And they passed resolutions indorsing me. Does that look as though Mayor Gunter speaks for a majority of the State?

Now I am going to tell you what happened in Montgomery. About two months ago I spoke in the city auditorium. Old men there told me it was the largest crowd that had ever assembled in the auditorium since it was built—3,500 people. I suppose five or six hundred of them stood. During my speech I paid my respects to this Al Smith bunch. Of course, they had been doing things under cover and in a roundabout way supporting Smith, saying nice things, but coming out and saying every now and then, practically saying, "We have not declared ourselves." Now, the Advertiser—miserable old hypocrite—comes out and says that in answer to my speech here they "hereby declare for Smith." Since I came out with the speech I made they come out for Smith. Before I made the speech I delivered somebody had already come out and touched them with whisky coin. Somebody had poured financial oil on the machinery of that old paper before they ever came out.

Mr. President, I made a speech at Abbeville, Ala., on the 17th of August. I spoke to 6,000 people at a barbecue. The able Representative from the third district, Congressman STEAGALL, whom I see in the rear of this Chamber, was there and also spoke. Six thousand or more people were present. After that speech the Montgomery Advertiser contained a most villainous, cowardly, and lying editorial about me. I came on back to Washington, as I had some other speaking engagements and could not answer them at the time, but I went back down there and had them repudiated by resolution all over the State. Then I went to Montgomery and spoke to 3,500 people in the city auditorium, and I hold in my hand the two resolutions that were passed there, which I send to the clerk's desk; and I ask Mr. Crockett, the Chief Clerk, to read them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the Birmingham News, Age-Herald, and Montgomery Advertiser have been so pronounced, partial, and persistent in their publication of Roman Catholic political propaganda in Alabama; and

"Whereas the Birmingham News, Age-Herald, and Montgomery Advertiser, in their efforts to serve their Roman Catholic financial benefactors and to injure and bring into disrepute Senator HEFLIN for telling the truth about the efforts of the Roman Catholic hierarchy and the Knights of Columbus to get the United States into war with Mexico in behalf of the Catholic Church, have resorted to unfair, indecent, and dishonest methods; and

"Whereas the Birmingham News, Age-Herald, and Montgomery Advertiser in their efforts to hide the truth and to minimize and belittle the services of Senator HEFLIN to prevent war with Mexico, have not only been unfair and unjust to him, but unfair and unjust to the people of the State: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the people of Montgomery County here assembled, That we do most earnestly congratulate and commend Senator HEFLIN for the work he did in the Senate to prevent war with Mexico.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now read the next one.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas on August 19, 1927, an editorial attacking Senator HEFLIN appeared in the Montgomery Advertiser; and

"Whereas said Montgomery Advertiser editorial was not only based upon false premises, but the unwarranted and insulting language used showed that it was inspired by a desire to misrepresent, injure, and slander Senator HEFLIN; and

"Whereas said Advertiser editorial was not only offensive and insulting to Senator HEFLIN, but shocking, offensive, and insulting to the fair-minded, patriotic people of Alabama: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the people of Montgomery County assembled here in the capital of the State of Alabama, That we do most earnestly and emphatically resent, condemn, and repudiate said Advertiser editorial and express our indignation at the employment of such unfair and dishonorable newspaper tactics against Senator HEFLIN, who has been twice honored by election to the United States Senate by the people of the State of Alabama: Be it further

"Resolved, That we feel that we owe it to ourselves, the people of the State, and to Senator HEFLIN to express our bitter condemnation of the methods employed in that editorial to insult, vilify, and slander the senior Senator from the State of Alabama."

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the people of my State have already answered the attacks of my enemies. Those who took advantage of this facetious remark I made to the Senator from Arkansas have been my political enemies. It is much ado about nothing. They have never been able to make a dent on my political shield, not one; and if Mr. Gunter wants to try his popularity, I challenge him to run for governor in 1930 in Alabama. If he should be elected to that office, he would have some right to speak for the people of that State, but he has no right to speak for the people of the State now, and in the telegram he sent to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] he does not speak for a majority of the people of Montgomery city, the capital of my State. He speaks for some of them. So far as the invitation to the Senator from Arkansas is concerned, I bid him welcome to speak in my State at any time that he feels like doing so on any question he wants to discuss. Those enemies of mine who have seized upon this statement that I made the other day in running debate, a retort to the Senator from Arkansas, do not speak for the intelligent, fair-minded, patriotic, honorable people of my State.

If any one of them wants to challenge that statement, when I go down there I will debate this matter with him in his own town, and at the conclusion of the debate I will move that Mayor Gunter went out of his way to insult me when he sent a part of that telegram to the Senator from Arkansas, and that he knew when he sent it that the remark was made in a facetious way, and I will ask the people to pass on the subject as to whether they repudiate me or Mayor Gunter. One of those speeches I am going to make at Montgomery.

What else? One other telegram, I understand, was sent to the Senator from the fine old city of Anniston. Montgomery is one of the finest cities in the country. Mayor Gunter does represent some people who live there, and some good people who do not agree with me, but he does not speak in his attack on me for a majority of the people of Montgomery, nothing like it. So a telegram has come from Anniston, another fine city in my State, to the Senator from Arkansas, I understand, signed by several citizens, probably a hundred. Among those in that list is Mr. Willett, the attorney for Priest O'Connor.

Priest O'Connor, a Roman Catholic, committed a felony in my State at Anniston. He is guilty of one of the most heinous crimes in the catalogue of crimes. He played the part of a physician, and he is not a physician, performing an operation upon a woman. He destroyed life that was his own offspring, and in doing so almost took the life of the woman. He fled the State and went into Canada. The State of Alabama sought to bring him back, as they would any other criminal, Jew, Protestant, or Catholic. What do you suppose happened? The grand jury at Anniston, Calhoun County, indicted him for that felony. The affidavits of the woman and of her husband were taken, both of those people being Catholics. You know it had to be a mighty heinous offense for them to go into court with it. They swore about this foul performance of which this priest was guilty. Priest O'Connor fled into Canada, on his way back to Ireland, where one of their friends at Birmingham, I have been told, said he could go back into the ministry if he got out of the country, with that all left behind him. He defied the sovereign power of my State. He defied the courts of the land. He fled the country, and the governor of my State wired me to ask for extradition papers.

Did I do wrong in asking for the return of a Roman Catholic priest? I would have asked for the return of a Protestant or a Jew just as quickly, but I did ask for the extradition papers, and we got them. They apprehended him up in Canada, and the courts commenced passing on his case. He fought return to the State, and two or three courts have passed on it and have held that we had a right to bring him back. I have been criticized for my efforts to help bring that man back, when I was here at the Capital, and the governor of my State wired me to take the matter up with the Department of Justice and bring this man back and let him be tried by the courts of my State. Did I do wrong in that? Have we jurisdiction over that?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I do not yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. It is well that the Senator does not. I can contradict those statements in my own time.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not yield to the Senator. He can not contradict anything in my time. He can contradict all he pleases when I am through; and then I will contradict him if his statements run counter to the facts that I have stated.

Did I do right to insist on bringing this man O'Connor back? "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none," was what Thomas Jefferson said. He has been quoted frequently about intolerance and other things. He said another thing: "Without a single exception, every priest-ridden country has lost its liberty." Now, here was a priest hiding in Canada, apprehended by officers there.

We seek to bring him back to answer for the murder of his own offspring, and he had almost taken the life of its mother. He fled and when the instrumentalities of my State were invoked, I, a Senator at the National Capital, was requested by the governor to do something, and I was criticized and taken to task by the priests of Mobile for having anything to say about it, when I had been requested by the governor of my State to do so.

Senators will be astounded to hear what they did, not two or three Catholics, but the whole Catholic Church in my State. They fought the return of this priest, and young Willett, of Anniston, Ala., whose name is on that telegram to the Senator from Arkansas and who is opposing me and expressing his opinion when I am trying to get this priest back whom he is defending and out of whom he is getting a fat fee. What do you suppose happened? The Roman Catholic Church! Priest Eaton stated in a three-column article, published in the Montgomery Advertiser and the Birmingham News and Age-Herald, that the Catholic Church of Alabama would fight the return of this man to be tried in the courts of Alabama, where he committed the crime.

Think of the Catholic Church doing that. My! Whither are we drifting in America? Suppose a Protestant Church had made such a statement. Suppose a Protestant minister had committed that crime and had gone out of the country and the Protestant Churches should announce that they would fight the return of the Protestant preacher; what sort of howl would have gone up over the country? But here is a Roman Catholic priest—Eaton, of Mobile, where another one of these telegrams attacking me comes from—making such a statement in the press of Alabama. This priest, named Eaton, said in his article that they would fight the return of Patrick O'Connor to answer these charges in the State of Alabama.

What else do you suppose he said? He said, "We have a Catholic Church court in which we investigate all crimes, and we can punish Catholics by sending them off into some place of confinement for many years." Have I not been telling you that they have a government separate from and above this Government? Do you need any more proof than this? I, a United States Senator in the American Government, am told that a Roman Catholic priest who fled the country ought not to be brought back to answer in an American court, and a Roman Catholic priest in my State tells the State that the Catholic Church of Alabama will not permit his return if they can help it, and will not turn him over to the civil courts of my State, but they insist in that article that they will try him in a Roman Catholic Church court.

Can you get some idea about the environment in that situation of those who are sending these statements or wiring insulting things here about me? Mr. Willett, one of them, is the attorney for O'Connor. They wanted to let O'Connor stay up there. They made another move recently to keep him there, and every court that has passed on the question says he must come back.

My colleague and I went to the State Department and had a long talk with one of the officers about it. We told him we understood they were trying to let the matter drop and O'Connor remain there and that we did not intend to let them do it; that it was right for this man to come and answer to the courts of the State, and, if guilty, to be punished like any other criminal, and if not guilty, to be acquitted; but he must come back to Alabama and answer like any other citizen when charged with the commission of a felony.

A little infant lies dead in the soil of Calhoun County, a woman prostrate and almost dead at the time of the commission of the crime, and the doctor told her husband what the matter was. A Catholic priest committed that heinous crime and fled to Canada, and he is still there; and the Roman Catholic priest, Eaton, of Mobile, Ala., announces over his signature in the Montgomery Advertiser, the Birmingham News and Age Herald, that they will not permit him to return and be tried in the courts if it is within their power to keep him away. Mob spirit! What do you call that? Suppose it had been a Protestant Church? We never would have heard the last of it.

So much for a few gentlemen who reside in Mobile and Priest Eaton!

Do not ever be deceived when you see attacks made upon me by villainous sheets that seek to have you think that the people in Alabama are not with me in the fight I am making here. They are swamping me with letters and telegrams indorsing my position. They come, not only from my State, but from all over the country.

I have an invitation to speak to the Democratic Club of Harvard University, another one to speak in Philadelphia, one from over in Maryland, and another one at Syracuse, N. Y. They are coming in every day. Do not let anybody deceive you. The people of this Nation are waking up.

We have already reached the point in the United States where we can not get such truths as I have uttered here to-day in the newspapers. Do you know what happened in Alabama? The Age-Herald, the News, and the Advertiser scandalized my State with their lies about how the Ku-Klux Klan was mobbing people down there. They had people of other States believing that Alabama was composed of outlaws and mobs, and that they were whipping people and killing them right and left. I said at the time that that was a part of their program to distract the attention of the people from themselves and to get something started to fight on for an Al Smith delegation. Did not I hit the nail on the head? Here is the old Advertiser, hoary in wrongdoing and sin, coming out and saying that because I made my speech, "We declare for Al Smith."

That was not the cause. Oh, no. The cause is coin which clinks when dropped on the counter. My speech was not the cause. They have been preparing for this by slandering the State. The authorities in Alabama indicted 75 or 100 people at Luverne, Crenshaw County, and the jury met and tried some of them, and the facts came out in the open court, where both sides could be heard, and the jury acquitted them one after the other. The whole thing has proven so far to be a farce, but they have hurt the name of my State; they have given it a bad name by what they have done.

What did they say about Priest O'Connor? Not a word. I challenged them in my speeches over the State to condemn his crime, to treat all alike. Not one editorial hinted at condemning Priest O'Connor. Even the Age-Herald had a suggestion in one of its stories that "it was to be settled in a church court when Senator HEFLIN butted in." What do you think of that? Acquiescing in the doctrine of the priest, holding that we ought to yield and let them settle it in a church court if a Catholic man was involved.

Two governments were fighting for his possession, the American Government and the Roman Government. They said the Roman Government should have him and try him. I said the American Government should have him. Which flag—the American flag, the Stars and Stripes, or the flag of the Roman Government? Why is it they would not print anything about O'Connor? There was no dispute about the facts. Two Roman Catholic citizens swore that he had committed the crime. We could not get the daily papers there to say anything about him. They would talk about Protestant members of the Ku-Klux Klan or anything else, but not a word about a Roman Catholic. Why? I told you last Wednesday. If you attack them, they come up and say, "If you ever do that again, we will stop taking your paper; we will boycott you."

The result is that they have scared a lot of newspaper men half to death and have scared a lot of public men so that they shake like an aspen leaf and are afraid to open their mouths on the subject. Somebody ought to tell the church something. I do not know how long I will live to do it. I have received threatening letters and have been warned that they would get me, and they may; that they would put something in my food. I have had people, men and women, to warn me to watch about my food and where I eat, and to be very careful, that it would happen when I least suspected it. I do not know. I do not know how they will dispose of me if they do; but if they do, I want the Senate to hear me and the people here assembled to hear me: I have written a letter to 37 men in the United States, and I have told them in detail about these threats and what I think about them. I have named some people, and I have said in case I should be taken off in this fashion that I want them to make public my statement and I want them to carry out my suggestions and execute my will to the letter. I am not afraid of them. They are not going to frighten me.

I resent their infamous and brazen conduct in trying to intimidate me in this body; their cowardly, sneaking conduct in writing letters to me and warning me what they will do if I continue this fight.

Listen, Senators: They have mighty near shut the press to the Protestant people of America who love religious freedom. Go and try to put something in a paper that even touches on their activities, affecting religious liberty, civil liberty, political liberty, and see what happens. Go to one of these papers and ask them to put a piece in their paper which criticizes them in the least, and see what answer they will give you.

I told you that when I went around the country speaking in the spring and summer, every place I went I was told by men and women that the priests and the Knights of Columbus had done their best to keep them from having a hall in which to have me speak, when a Knight of Columbus had lectured on Mexico in the same hall just a night or two before. My friends, is that Americanism? No; that is Romanism. Talk about intolerance! That is it, the distilled essence of it.

At one place a young man told me, "They are going to come here and speak, and I think I will keep them from getting the school hall. I can do it." I said, "Do not do that. That is not the American spirit. Let them speak. Let them have their say. Let them publish their notices or statements in the papers. Do not do that. They are doing that kind of thing. That is not Americanism. That is Romanism." Yet they talk about me being intolerant when I undertake to tell the truth on them, and there is not one of them living that can dispute my statements. I am quoting from the written word. Let them dispute what Premier Herriot said.

He charged that the Pope was trying to build up a political party in every country; he charged that he was interfering with politics in France. Now, what is he doing in the United States? I told the Senate the other day that on September 10, 1924, the Pope said that it was not only his right but his duty to advise Catholics how to vote. If that were going on with Protestants there would be a howl that would go up in this country, but somehow they have got some people hypnotized and they will not come out and speak the truth against them. Their last effort is to suppress free speech in this body. Listen to the first amendment to the Constitution, which reads:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.

I read the other day from the Church and State Book, written by a Roman Catholic, president of a university, in which it was set out that as soon as they are strong enough they would establish a Catholic state. Then they said, "We will cause the Protestants"—that is the substance of it—"to cease their propaganda, and we can use proscriptive measures upon them." Then it asked, "What can they—the Protestants—do against a Catholic state?" Yet the Constitution provides that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion. So they are violating that. The Constitution further forbids the making of any law prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

We are not trying to interfere with them; we want them to exercise their religion and to worship as they please; but I am fighting their political activities. Take Priest Eaton, of my State, writing this article showing that the Catholic Church is meddling in Government affairs in my State to "prevent this man's return." So they are violating that provision.

The Constitution forbids us to abridge free speech. They tried to do that in my tour of some of the States last spring and summer. Now they are setting up a howl here to prevent free speech in this body. It is also forbidden to abridge the right of people peaceably to assemble. They tried to do that at a few places; and at three or four places they told the people that if I spoke in a public hall in the city they would disturb the meeting and not permit me to speak. So they are violating that provision of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

What else? The Washington News had a very nice article in some respects written about me by a very clever young man the other day, but he got his facts mixed up. He said, among other things, that I had been twice elected to the Senate on the Catholic issue. He is entirely mistaken and he misunderstood the facts. I told him that in 1920 one of the candidates against me for the Senate attacked me. I said, "That was not the first time that gentleman and I have disagreed." I said, "They had a bill before the legislature requiring inspection of all schools in the State, and I had stated that the bill ought to pass; treat them all alike; inspect Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant schools," and I said, "What do you suppose happened? They made a fight that the Catholic schools be exempt and not subject to the law providing for State inspection." There is another instance of putting Rome above the civil government of this country. I said, "What excuse is there for exempting a Roman Catholic school? Treat them all alike. Is there anything unfair in that?" Well, what do you suppose happened to me? Every Roman Catholic in the State voted against me for taking that stand.

What were they punishing me for—some political offense? No; but because I dared to say we ought to inspect their schools just as we inspect Protestant schools and Jewish schools. They voted against me in 1920, but I carried 55 counties out of 67.

Then in 1924 I had no opposition at all; the question was never mentioned, and played but a very small part in the first campaign. So, Mr. President, the people of my State know that when I take a position in this body I am right on it; they at least know that I think I am right, and that I am willing to take the consequences whatever they may be for me in this body or back in the State. I do not ask any of my enemies to do differently. Those who oppose me here have got a right to take their stand, and I have got a right to take mine.

Here is what the Birmingham Age-Herald and News say. I knew if they found an opportunity to tell a falsehood they would tell it. Talking about the conference the Democrats held, those papers stated:

> The Alabamian gained the floor of the Senate Thursday afternoon and threw a charge of cowardice against those who he said had passed on the question during his absence.

I never did anything of the sort. I criticized the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] for having the matter come up in my absence; but as to the other Senators, I said they could not do anything else when the question was put up to indorse his past leadership than to do it; that I indorsed it myself in the main. Now, that newspaper has twisted out of that the statement that I denounced my friends who voted to express confidence in the Senator from Arkansas and in his leadership in the past as cowards and scoundrels. Nothing of that kind ever happened.

Here is another extract from the Montgomery Advertiser:

> Finally, and not the least in importance, the Advertiser regards this as an especially happy moment to announce its choice of Governor Smith. Speaking for itself, the Advertiser is glad to present this declaration as its conception of an appropriate answer on the part of Alabama Democrats to Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN'S fanatical outburst in the United States Senate two days ago.

Mr. President, I am willing for that miserable old hoary-headed hypocrite to state its position; but when it claims the right to speak for Democrats I draw the line. That old sheet sold out in 1896, bolted the Democratic Party, and supported Palmer and Buckner, two old graveyard candidates for President and Vice President. I know the record of these poltroons. It is my business to know it. They are on one side and I am on the other; and regarding them I follow the Scripture, which says:

> Come ye out from among them and be ye separate from them.

And when I am that way with them I know that I am on the Lord's side [laughter], because He has not got any use for that bunch, and whenever they shall come to final judgment I know what will be said to them: "Depart from me you workers of iniquity; I never knew you." [Laughter.] That is just what is going to happen.

Let me remind the Senate that Senator John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, made one of the most insulting speeches ever made in this body. He insulted not only the Senate itself but the people of the States who selected the Senators when he stood in this body and said:

> I had rather be a dog and bay the moon than to be a Senator in this present day.

Do you think any of these squirrel heads in the press gallery made any reference to that? [Laughter.] Why, they thought it was the funniest thing in the world. He reflected on every Senator here when he said it—able strong men. He reflected on the States who sent them here when he said he would rather change his form from a human being to a dog and bark at the moon in the night time than to occupy a place in the greatest law-making body in the world. They never said anything about that; they just laughed and said it was funny, a very nice piece of wit and humor. But when I, figuratively speaking and in fun, said to the Senator from Arkansas that they would tar and feather him in Arkansas and Alabama one of them overjoyed at an opportunity to misrepresent and injure me exclaimed: "There it is; Jesus Christ! Let's dig him on that." And they jumped on it, and it floated down into my State, and there sat the owners and editors of these newspapers with their mouths open like a hungry dog ready to catch a bone. So they seized on it and put it across the front page; and Victor Hanson, the editor of the Birmingham News—poor knock-kneed, pudding-headed Victor—commenced to send telegrams over the State, I am told, to various people asking, "If Senator ROBINSON should speak in your town, would he be tarred and feathered?"

What do you think of that, Senators? That is the bunch that is for Al Smith in my State. I do not think Hanson has come out as yet; he has been trying to stay behind the screen for the present making out he is for Owen D. Young. They do not know yet exactly what to do, but when I get down there I will bring them into the open and the Democrats of the State will attend to them. I will expose them. I have done it before and the people have stood by me. We passed a resolution denouncing Victor Hanson's newspapers at Birmingham in the city auditorium. There were 7,000 people there, and everyone but 5 stood up in favor of the resolution denouncing it as dishonest, cowardly, and contemptible. That is the bunch, headed by a poor, miserable wretch, wiring to various persons in Alabama to know if Senator ROBINSON should come and speak would they tar and feather him, and many of the persons to whom the telegram had been sent perhaps had never seen the newspaper in which I was charged with that statement.

They are carrying on a deceptive and villainous campaign such as that about a remark of mine made figuratively and in fun. I am accumulating the facts, and when I get down there I will have some fun out of these gentlemen. I am looking up some things now about their record and connections that I think I will give you an opportunity to understand more clearly later on.

Mr. President, what I said was a mild-mannered utterance, a May morning zephyr compared to a colloquy between John J. Ingalls and Senator Voorhees, of Indiana. Let me read it to you:

> Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to ask him whether the soldiers of Indiana did not threaten to hang him with a bell rope on a train between Newcastle and Terre Haute after he made that Lincoln dog speech. [Laughter.]
> Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the Senator is a great liar when he intimates such a thing—a great liar and a dirty dog.

The Presiding Officer said "Order! Order!" But that is all he did.

> Such a thing never occurred in the world. That is all the answer I have to make.

Mr. President, there are some stirring incidents here in which Senator Morgan, of Alabama, had a part; and he used some pretty bitter language to Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, and other Senators. Senators have misunderstandings. One day the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and I were having a debate here about the Federal reserve system, and the Senator did not understand one of my statements, and rose and said that I had made a false statement, and I said that the Senator himself had made the false statement—using an uglier word. We both violated the rules. The Senator from Georgia, Mr. Watson, suggested that we both be seated and asked to strike out of the RECORD what both of us said; and Senator GLASS said he did not know that I had said exactly what I had, and if he had he would not have said what he did; and then I said if he had not said what he did I would not have said what I did [laughter], and the thing was dropped.

Those things happen often here and in the House; but these miserable, contemptible curs who sent out statements like that, that I seriously said that the Senator from Arkansas would be tarred and feathered, knew they were falsifying the situation, and they were telling something that was not true.

I repeat what I said, that I laughed, the Senator from Arkansas laughed, Senators all around laughed, and the occupants of the galleries laughed. They showed that they took it as a facetious remark, made in retort, in running debate; and yet these people took that up to seize an opportunity to give the Montgomery Advertiser—hoary-headed old sinner—and other papers a chance to come out for Al Smith.

Well, I am glad I got them to break the ice thus early. It will give me a longer time to operate on them. They are not going to carry Alabama. Alabama is not going for Al Smith; neither is any other Southern State, unless it be Louisiana. This country is not going to vote for a Tammanyite, a "wet" candidate from New York, who has nullified the Constitution of his country by approving an act which left New York aside and withdrew support of the eighteenth amendment.

Think about the great moral forces of this Nation getting behind that candidate with the record he has. No! I would be against him if he only came from Tammany and was a "wet" and a nullifier, without his being a Roman Catholic; but, speaking for myself, knowing the program they have for the present and their history of the past, with Mexico on the program for war and annexation, and Nicaragua Catholic-ruled by the force of American bayonets, I would vote against him because he is a Roman Catholic, on top of those other things.

I am speaking for myself. Tammany, denounced by Cleveland and Wilson; a wringing "wet," condemned by the moral forces of the Nation; a nullifier, condemned by patriotic people the country over; and a Roman Catholic, with war threatening in Mexico, war already in progress in Nicaragua, where we are fighting to hold a Roman Catholic in the office of president who never has been elected to it—I oppose him on all those grounds.

That is my position. There is no quibbling about that.

What else?

Let me tell you something of the political history of this man. I saw his group at the convention in New York in 1924, when my party had made a good fight in the months preceding it. I had done the best I could here. We were united, better than we have been in a long time. We presented almost a solid front. We marched over to that convention when it looked like Democratic victory was in sight. I spoke to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] before I left, out yonder in front of the Senate Office Building, and the contest between the two parties seemed so close that both of them remarked, "It is going to be a horse race this time." They knew the situation. They knew, with the Harding administration reeking with scandal, with Cabinet officers dragged out of their places, three or four of them, exposed and lashed by the Democratic Party in the Senate, the country was ready to indorse and take advantage of our leadership and ready to put us in office to clean house at the Capital; and Alfred Smith and his group appeared on the scene, and they struck down that party hope and destroyed it on the floor of the convention—about what? About a religious question.

The Roman Catholics raised the issue that the Ku-Klux Klan, a secret Protestant organization, had to be denounced by the Democratic National Convention. Just think of it. Good men and women on every hand said, "It has no place in this convention." The Al Smith bunch wanted something to fight on. They hung on to it. McAdoo, a Protestant, was the choice of a majority of the convention. The Smith crowd hung on to his flanks until they finally dragged him down. They held that convention so long that McAdoo's friends advised him to get out of the way. They had done their dirty work. They had killed the political chances of my party; and when the convention refused to denounce the Klan, Al Smith's Roman Catholic political machine gathered about John W. Davis and got him to repudiate it, in spite of the action of the National Democratic Convention. Four States were lost by that act, without considering the losses already caused by their performance in the convention. Al Smith was the candidate they flung in there to kill off McAdoo. They succeeded, and killed the hope of the Democratic Party. Then talk to me about remaining silent, with this product of Tammany coming out to be the leader of the National Democracy, with this wringing-wet candidate to lead us as a candidate for President, with this nullifier, with the Roman Catholic machine defying the army of Democracy and saying, "You have got to nominate him because he is a Catholic"—it is without a parallel in history and ought to be rebuked.

The Methodist Church does not say that. The Baptist Church does not say it. The Presbyterian Church does not say that. The Christian Science Church does not say that. The Lutheran Church, none of the great Protestant branches, say that. The Roman Catholic Church is the only church that says it: "You have got to nominate him because he is a Catholic. If you do not nominate him, it will be because he is a Catholic."

Well, there are enough things to defeat his nomination without him being a Catholic; but, being a Catholic, when they are still seeking to involve us in war, and with war still threatening, it is enough to cause us to say, "Not at this time, Mr. Smith, if you please."

Now, let me show you what is going on.

I hold here an editorial from the Irish Catholic World. Here it is. Listen to it! An editorial:

Will the Democratic Party commit suicide?

And then they set out, in a column and a half, that we are about to reject Al Smith because he is a Catholic, and if we do they threaten to destroy the party. Listen:

What answer will be returned to the un-American and un-Democratic demand should the Democratic National Convention, unmindful of the Constitution of the United States or the teachings of Jefferson or the traditions of the Democratic Party, yield to the behest of the bigots? There will be such a thinning of the Democratic ranks that nothing will be left of the Democratic Party but a mere skeleton.

There is your threat. If we do not nominate him they are going to vote for some other ticket and beat whoever we nominate. Is there anything new in that? What did they do in 1916? One of the greatest men who ever graced the White House, Woodrow Wilson, was a candidate for reelection, living up there in New Jersey, with New York, his sister State, just across the river right alongside of him. What did this Tammany bunch do? What did this Al Smith group do? They sought to destroy him politically. They did not support him. They opposed him. They beat him in New York. They beat him in New Jersey, his own home State. That is the kind of Democrats they are; but they could not defeat him. He was elected by the people of the South and the West uniting. That is what we can do this time if this side will wake up to its opportunity and get out from that eastern bunch that betrayed the party in 1916.

And in 1924 they voted against John W. Davis after he had complied with every request they made of him. He went out by himself, all alone, after the convention had adjourned, and he had no authority under the sun to do it, and denounced the Ku-Klux Klan because that crowd wanted him to do it. They insisted on having it done in the convention. The convention refused. Therefore the action of the convention was binding on them if they were Democrats. They violated the action of the convention, and got the nominee to do it by himself, and then turned their backs on him, shoved him in the stream, and went back and voted for Coolidge.

Then some people wonder why so many Democrats all over the country are crying out against the nomination of Al Smith and saying they can not vote for him if he is nominated. I am getting letters from the best Democrats in the country, men and women, saying they will not vote for him if he is nominated. It would be the hardest political fight the South ever had to carry such a burden in the face of this man's record.

Now, I want to make another criticism of Al Smith. He is not a national figure. I heard him speak in that convention at New York. Before that time I had the impression that he was a big, strong man. He speaks like a ward heeler. He has not and, I think, can not visualize and grasp the broad national situation. He has a kind of aggressiveness; he knows how to pat people on the back and shake hands, but he is in no sense a big, broad-minded statesman. He does not measure up to the stature of a man that should be President of the United States; but certain whisky interests and brewery interests and the Roman Catholic political machine, who call themselves Democrats when it suits their purpose, with Tammany back of it all, have decided that they are going to come out now and say, "You are against him because he is a Roman Catholic; and if you do not nominate him we are going to bolt the party."

Well, some say if he is nominated half the Democrats will decline to support him. We ought not to permit anybody's candidacy to destroy the Democratic Party. You ask any southern Senator here how the people at home talked about this matter before they came on to Washington, and they will tell you that on the streets in groups, everywhere, they said: "If Smith is nominated we will vote the Republican ticket." And, Mr. President, when a southern Democrat says that, it means a heap. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, I have in my hand a newspaper article that I want to read. It appears as an advertisement in the Washington Post. The crooks are paying to have their attacks reprinted here at the Capital. This one is signed by Paul Block, of Pittsburgh, the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, the Newark Star-Eagle, and the Toledo Blade. He has an advertisement in the Post in which he said:

The action of the Democratic conference meant the utter repudiation of Heflin.

I will tell you who he is in a minute. You know, I know a good many of these crooks. I have to keep up with them in a way to keep them from stealing the Capitol. Here is what the New York Evening World said to-day:

Rebuke to HEFLIN regarded as spineless.

Here is what Robert Barry, the author of this article, a Roman Catholic, said:

Democratic Senators having the most bitter resentment against HEFLIN declared to-day they were obliged to admit he was correct in that contention, to wit, that the Democratic conference had acted cravenly and cowardly in side-stepping the real issue raised by the Robinson-Heflin controversy.

I did not say anything of the kind, I did not say they acted cowardly and cravenly. He is saying that himself. On the contrary, I did say they could not do otherwise on the resolution that was adopted. It made no reference to me. But I said then, and I assert now, that it was understood in that conference—and I was not present—when the resolution was passed that this resolution "in no way reflected on Senator HEFLIN, and in no way referred to the colloquy between the Senator from Arkansas" and myself; it just expressed confidence in his leadership in the past. They left our debate in the Senate out of it, set it aside, and it has in no way been acted on by the Democratic Senators. Democratic Senators present have assured me that it was distinctly understood before the resolution was adopted that the action of the conference was in no way to be construed as a criticism or reflection on me. At the conclusion of the conference Senator SIMMONS asked Senator ROBINSON about remaining on the committee investigating the Hearst scandal, if he and the committee intended to make a thorough investigation and go after the scoundrels who perpetrated this thing, and properly denounce them, and the Senator said he would. So the New York Evening World's statement is untrue in saying that I abused the Senate conference of Democrats.

Mr. President, I do not intend, if I can help it, to permit these papers to mislead and deceive the people. My enemies are undertaking to make it appear that my Democratic colleagues rebuked me for my speech, when I denounced the Hearst-Catholic-Mexican scandal, and defending myself against the most slanderous charges ever brought against a United States Senator in the history of this body. They took the position that I had a right to speak in my own way about the matter, and that the Senator from Arkansas had a right to speak about what he pleased, and there is no disagreement between us on that, so far as I know. I am willing for him to do that, and I will continue to do the same thing, regardless of what any Senator's opinion here may be. But I do not intend that these newspapers shall spread the impression over the country that the Democrats of this body have rebuked me and criticized me in their action for my position on this floor the other day. It is not so. I have a right, as a Senator from Alabama, to speak about what I please without asking any particular Senator in this body. I have not asked before, and I will not do it now or hereafter. I will continue to pursue the course which I think is right and proper.

Now, I will tell you about this man Block, who advertised his attack in the Washington Post. As soon as I saw it I said, "They have got him somehow." And I remembered that when I was in Pittsburgh speaking, some Protestant preachers told me that the Roman Catholics, bishops and priests, attacked the Protestant churches generally, in the newspapers they printed a page in the Pittsburgh papers excoriating the Protestants, and then the Protestant preachers got together, various Protestant denominations, and prepared an answer, and went down to get the newspapers in Pittsburgh to print it. They said, "No; we are not going to engage in a religious controversy." We said, "You have started it. You printed the attack on us. We had not said anything, and now we are answering their attack. We have a right to answer. We have been assailed. Print our answer and then drop it. Both sides will have been heard." What do you suppose they said? They answered, "No; we will not do it." Then the Protestant ministers said, "All right, we will put it in as an advertisement." And these Pittsburgh papers refused to print it when the Protestant preachers offered to pay for it. Block is one of the scoundrels that owns one of those Pittsburgh papers, that group that printed an indictment by the Catholics against the Protestants, and refused the Protestant people the opportunity to reply when they offered to pay for it. That is the bunch that is after me.

Now I want to refer again to the editor of the Birmingham News, Victor Hanson, the same little fellow that I told you was sending telegrams out over Alabama to the mayors saying, "If Senator ROBINSON should speak in your town, would he be tarred and feathered?" How ridiculous! Of course they would wire back, "No, he would not be tarred and feathered." I said here that he would not be; that I said what I did in a figurative way. I am going to show you what this paper, in its better and brighter days, said about me. Before reading that, however, I want to refer to the New York World, whose Roman Catholic editors take so much pleasure in digging me nowadays. The New York World of September 26, 1917:

Having in mind nothing but the honor of the House of Representatives, most Americans will wonder why Mr. HEFLIN of Alabama had no support when he was making a plain case against the Kaiser's apologists in that body.

Selah! Some of you Bible readers know what that means. This is from the Birmingham News of September 28, 1917:

That canard—

Papers were attacking me then as they are now—whether published through studied design to misrepresent the President, or through carelessness of some reporter, is answered by the Chief Executive himself, Woodrow Wilson.

God bless his memory!

From the outset Mr. HEFLIN has earned the friendship and esteem of the President by reason of his intense Americanism and unfaltering support of every American measure.

I put that up against the attacks of the venal and corrupt newspapers that are attacking me to-day.

This statement from the President—

Listen! This is from the Birmingham News—will be gratifying to the friends of Congressman HEFLIN—

I was in the House at that time—

whose worst fault, if it may be called a fault, is that he is candid to the point of fearlessness. All through those months antedating the war, and even after that declaration, there were congressional speeches attacking the methods of the administration, speeches with double meaning, delicate turning and twisting of sentences, that might have been attributed to Germanic influence. Through all that mêlée of strange tongues TOM HEFLIN, of Alabama, was at the forefront of the fighting in defense of clean, outspoken, thoroughgoing Americanism.

If that specter still lingers in the corridors of the Capitol, if there are any lurkers back of curtains trying to influence Members of Congress, if there is any secret propaganda not revealed to the clear light of day, let us not, like Hamlet, run the curtains through with a sword, but let the hideous thing be drawn out from its hiding, where the American people may see its visage.

And, Mr. President, I am doing some of that drawing out from behind the curtain here to-day. Continuing the Birmingham News said:

If all our Congressmen were as thoroughgoing and true blue as HEFLIN, there would be no suspicions, there would not have been any delay in perfecting the Army and Navy machine.

They abuse me now, but they complimented me then.

Mr. President, I appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober. Yes; they criticize and condemn me now, under the influence of the Al Smith régime, but they complimented me when I was fighting an important battle by myself and had the approval of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy Woodrow Wilson.

When the House was drifting, just before the war program got well under way there were speeches being made that annoyed the President, when some Members seemed to be trying to delay the passage of the war measures. Our boys were speeding on to France, I got up and said the time had come to close ranks, and I said that anybody who attacked the program after we had become an ally with England and France and Belgium was giving aid and comfort to the enemy. I had a personal difficulty with one of the Members of the House. I was doing what I thought was right. The President of the United States approved my position, and this paper in Alabama approved it. I succeeded in silencing the opposition to the program to supply our boys with food and arms. Here is one from the Brooklyn Daily Eagle. They also have been digging me recently:

HEFLIN is always regular in his Democracy, and the same can be said of his Americanism.

Here is one from the Baltimore Sun. The editor of that paper was hired to write a mean article in some magazine attacking me last fall. He said that I was sick. That was a suggestion from his Jesuit friends. They will have letters written to you and about you saying you are sick. They want to plant the thought in your mind that you are a sick man. This is a part of their Jesuitical mental process program. So they fell upon an easy mark and got the editor of the Baltimore Sun to write an article in one of the magazines, and paid him well for it. It was a villainous thing. Such as you would expect from a hired villain. But here is what the editorial page of the Baltimore Sun said about me in 1917:

Mr. HEFLIN is the only man in either branch of Congress who had the courage to say what the country in general has been thinking. Is he to be rebuked because he has had the manhood to indict the men who have been hindering and harassing their country, who have been practically aiding and abetting the insidious efforts of German spies, conspirators, to embarrass the administration and create a reactionary antiwar sentiment?

Such a verdict against Americanism and in favor of the lukewarm and the disaffected would add fresh fuel to the infamous sedition which we have been trying to stamp out in various parts of the United States. If anybody is to be censured it surely is not Mr. HEFLIN.

Senators, you must pardon me for reading these eulogistic things about myself, but it is the only way that you would ever know anything about them, because you would not get them in the newspapers. Many of the newspapers would not publish what I am saying here to-day. Little by little and bit by bit they are shutting out the things that give the truth to the people about the activities of the Roman Catholic political machine. Mark my prediction, if this thing continues and progresses as it has for the last five years, the time will come inside of 10 years when you can not even get a Protestant paper to print an advertisement that you would pay for which contains an attack on the dangerous activities of the Roman Catholic machine in the United States.

That political machine worms itself into business. That political machine is always on guard when a Catholic is put up for office. It is one of the principles of the Catholic Church that when a Catholic is a candidate, Catholics should vote for him regardless of what he stands for. I quoted that in my speeches here last winter in January or February. They have another provision that "no law denounced by the Pope has any binding effect upon Catholics." I am giving you the facts. Instead of these papers misrepresenting me and lying about me, let them tell the truth and answer my arguments. I am an American. If I know my own heart, I am trying to serve my country and I intend to do it.

I do not know what certain Senators had in mind the other day, but it did not work, and it will not work. I do not charge any conniving, but the day the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] made his speech assailing me, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] had asked the Presiding Officer to recognize him immediately after Senator ROBINSON had finished.

I was being assailed by Senator ROBINSON and certainly under all the rules of fair play and justice I had the right to rise and reply. The Senator from Montana had gotten an agreement to be recognized and therefore I would have been shut off and would not have had a chance to reply.

This morning when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] got the floor under the conditions which he did, it looked shady and exceedingly bad. I had given notice and he was told about it that I would speak at that time. Let him say what he wants to say in his own way. I will not object to that. I want to say for myself that if a Senator makes the announcement that he is going to speak and I happen to get the floor ahead of him I will yield to him. No one will ever catch me violating that custom. I respect it. This is the first time I have ever seen the custom broken, and it was broken by the Senator from Maryland, who has no sympathy at all with the position I take against the dangerous activities of the Roman Catholic political machine. We had some sharp words in debate here last winter about it and will probable have some more.

His conduct looks strange to me, Senators. The truth about these things is going in the RECORD. They are going into Maryland, they are going into Alabama, they are going into all the States, and after a while somebody is going to write to their Senators, and ask them where they were when they were trying to keep Senator HEFLIN from speaking on this matter and telling truths that nobody could dispute. Somebody will be doing that somewhere along the way.

I wanted to read a statement from the Delaware Express. Listen to this. This paper is all right now. But they will attack it. I am going to make inquiry a year from now, if I am living, as to how it stands then. This is from the Delaware Express of January 6, 1928:

Premature. The American people may and they may not some time modify or repeal the eighteenth amendment to their Constitution, but whatever action they may or may not take in this regard will be of their own volition and wholly independent of the orders of the Vatican. Most Americans will resent the advice given them by the Osservatore Romano, the official organ and mouthpiece of the Roman heirarchy at the Vatican, which on New Year's Day had the impudence to say that the attempts to enforce prohibition in America "have become so useless, not to say dangerous, that it would be better to abolish it." The Express is not among those who quarrel with any religion, but it believes that such a statement as comes from Rome by its official organ deserves prompt and stern rebuke. Neither the President nor yet the Congress is yet subservient to the college of cardinals. We take our political inspiration in this country from within, not from without. There are but three American members of the Holy See. They may serve their country by advising the Italian majority that the White House and the Congress govern without the advice of the Church of Rome.

Yet Senators get up here and tell how I have injected the religious issue. When I assail the political activities of the Roman Catholic Church I am lectured! As Premier Herriot, of France, said, "They are forming a Catholic party in France, and the Pope has congratulated them." The Premier announced that France would not take orders from the Pope, that France is a free country independent of the Vatican. They are meddling with affairs over here, and the Pope claims that they have a right to advise Catholics how to vote, and here they are getting into American politics and saying that we ought to repeal the eighteenth amendment. That is a suggestion to the Roman Catholic crowd. Why can not this thing be talked about without them becoming so sensitive? Religious freedom is a dear thing in this country.

I believe in it with all my heart. I would not prevent the Catholic from worshiping as he pleases. I want every one to worship as he pleases, but I am going to continue to fight the Roman political activities of the Roman Catholic political machine hiding behind the screen of that church. Let them fight in politics like other people fight. When we say, "John Jones is a candidate; Billy Johnson is a candidate; Henry White is a candidate," they get up and say "So-and-so is a candidate and he is a Roman Catholic, so we are for him." Find one that is not. Now they stand up and tell us if we do not nominate Al Smith we are failing to do it because he is a Catholic and they, as Catholics, because of that, will bolt the Democratic Party. Then they will say that my speeches may drive them out of the Democratic Party. They are already out. They have a Roman Catholic party and there is also a Democratic Party and a Republican Party. Why not tell the truth about it? Were they Democrats when they were trying to beat Wilson in 1916 because he would not go to war with Mexico for the Catholic Church? Were they Democrats when they turned against John W. Davis and violated the express choice of the convention, and then turned and voted for Coolidge? Were they Democrats in that corrupt old Tammany machine when they helped to beat a Democrat? Then they come here and say "Here is our candidate. Take him or we will bolt the party and the party will commit suicide if it does not nominate the Roman Catholic candidate."

Mr. President, another word and I have finished—for to-day. [Laughter.]

I have probably three or four hundred telegrams over in my office commending my course. Here are a few that came in this morning, and my secretary has just brought them over to me. I am going to read just a few. Here is one from Dothan, Ala.:

Heartily indorse your movements. We as a party are back of you to a man. Enjoyed your speech you gave in our tent at Anniston—

I spoke up there last September.

We will stump the State for your reelection whenever it becomes necessary to do it. We are boosting for you. Having great meeting here.

EVANGELIST E. J. DAILY AND PARTY.

Mr. President, he is one of the greatest evangelists in the country. He is a close second to Billy Sunday.

Here is one from Lineville, Ala.:

Give them all you have. Our people are with you heart and soul.

J. W. JONES,
Mayor.
O. W. YATES,
President Chamber of Commerce.

That is one of the answers that Hanson got when he wanted to know if anybody would be tarred and feathered. They knew that what I said was in fun.

Hearty congratulations on brave stand taken against alcohol and company. Thank God the South has one 100 per cent Senator who has the backbone to tell alcohol and his Catholic bunch where to head in.

P. M. LADD.

Here is one from Foley, Ala.:

Regardless of the comments and threats of the Roman-controlled liquor-ruled press of Alabama or the Rome and rum soaked mayors or corkscrew politicians, rest assured that every clean, Christian American citizen in Alabama loves you for your brave stand for America and her institutions, and our hearts are beating in one grand harmonious union, in the words of that great hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

Here is another one from Ashland, Ky.:

We, the members of the Tri-State Civic Association of Ohio, Kentucky, and West Virginia, commend you for your stand in the year past on the American question and give to you and your associates much credit for maintaining a peaceful condition between the Government of the United States and the Government of Mexico. We most heartily indorse your stand as that of being against the candidacy of Al Smith for President of the United States on the Democratic or any other ticket, and hereby extend to you our most hearty support in prevention of the same.

W. G. BECK.

Here is another one from Houston, Tex.:

Congratulations on your great fight to keep out of office those men who would tear down some of our good laws. Be not disturbed by hostile press. Unflinchingly fight for what is right. You shall have our prayers and hearty support. Keep up this great, glorious, commendable fight. We are with you.

TABERNACLE BAPTIST CHURCH,
Houston, Tex.

Here is another one from Birmingham, Ala.:

I have in my possession a letter received from the home State of Senator ROBINSON expressing the hope that Senator HEFLIN, of Alabama, should be nominated for President of the United States—and we believe there are enough voters who feel the same way to-day to elect you.

Mr. President, I would accept the nomination! [Laughter.]

Yours truly,

SALLIE O. COOPER.

She must be a very intelligent woman. [Laughter.]

Here is one from my home town, where I went to read law in 1892. Before I had been in that town a year the people elected me mayor. I appreciate that almost as much as any office I ever held. I was just a young lawyer starting into the practice, but they elected me twice mayor of that town. I have lived there ever since:

The Women's Missionary Society of the Lafayette Methodist Church stand behind you in your policy against a wet candidate for President and indorse your fight to preserve peace for our country. Our prayers are with you.

Mrs. LEE GRIFFIN,
President.
Miss BETTY MCNAMORE,
Corresponding Secretary.

Here is one from Pritchard, Ala.:

DEAR SIR: We, the First Baptist Church, at Pritchard, cordially indorse your stand on the floor of the Senate of recent date and want you to know that the sentiments of Mayor Gunter and Harry Hartwell are not the sentiments of the entire State.

S. B. HARRINGTON.
E. L. CLARK,
——— JONES,
Committee.

Here is one from Marion, Ala.:

Stand pat. We are with you.

J. HENDRICK.

And others.

Here is one from Tuscaloosa—the University of Alabama is there:

Go to it. We are with you regardless of the whisky-soaked subsidized press and Roman Catholic political machine. You are making votes by the thousands. A fine, courageous representative. God bless you.

Your friend,

J. S. YERBY.

And scores of others.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

SIR: We, ex-soldiers of the World War, are grateful to you for your great speech and position and your great debate. We herewith indorse your policy and extend you our favor and cooperation. Forward, march! Keep up the good work! Alabama is with you.

W. J. B. SMOTHERS.
H. Y. YERBY.

GREAT NORTHERN HOTEL.

My heartfelt gratitude for your courageous, God-inspired defense of Americanism in the Senate to-day. Dare to be a Daniel. God is on the field when most invisible, keeping watch above His own.

KITTY C. CHEATHAM.

Mr. President, I have received probably 1,500 letters from various States in the Union, as well as many telegrams, commending my course. I have not had time to go through them all—not one-fifth of them, even. I shall want to use portions of them from time to time in showing how the people of the country stand upon this question. I am going to continue my fight in behalf of religious freedom, in behalf of freedom of speech, in behalf of a free press untrammeled, in behalf of the right of peaceful assembly all over the country, in behalf of political freedom, fair and just to all, in the United States. I am not going to permit any political group, if I can help it, under the cloak of religion, to hamstring my party, to "hog-tie" my party, and say that my party has got to nominate a man because he is a Roman Catholic. It is not going to be done.

We have got to face this issue. I thank Senators on this side for their support of free speech in this body. Their people back home will indorse them. There are but few Democrats here, not over six or seven, that would indorse the action of any Democratic Senator if he had tried to reprove or to rebuke me in a resolution in the conference for my stand on this floor and for making any sort of a speech that I wanted to make about questions that affected my honor, my reputation, and my integrity as a public man and the good of my country. I had a right to make the speech I made, and Democratic Senators said I had a right to make it. They separated the clash between the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and myself from the other matter—left it out entirely. That is the truth, and every newspaper hereafter that states that I was rebuked by a Democratic conference states that which it knows is absolutely false.

I know all sorts of pressure that is going to be brought on Senators.

The New York World had an editorial stating that the action of the Democratic conference did not amount to anything; that you Democrats ought to have condemned me. That is what they want done. I challenge them to have a Democratic conference rebuke me by resolution for asserting my rights as a Senator and defending free speech. I would demand a roll call of the Senators who voted on such a resolution, so that the position of every Senator would be known. The New York World and the Catholic editor who wrote that editorial can not run the Democratic Party. Whenever a Tammany man, a wet Roman Catholic Constitution nullifier gets control and dictates its policies I will be ready to quit the Democratic Party and millions of other Democrats will quit with me. They are not going to make a tail to the Roman Catholic kite of the Democratic Party. I am against anything that leads in that direction. They are intolerant; they are not satisfied. I am the one they are after. They wanted me rebuked because I helped to break up their war program with Mexico. If they had had their way they would have had our troops baptizing the soil of Mexico with the blood of brave American boys in an effort to restore the Catholic Church to power in Mexico and the Pope's $18,000,000 income formerly dragged out of Mexico every year would have been restored.

That income has departed; it has been cut off. American boys would have been sent there to get that back if the Roman Catholic war advocates had had their way. So, I am the man above all men that they despise. So much did they despise me that they framed me in order to try to destroy me and then to intimidate me and frighten me into silence whenever the Roman Catholic political machine made its program known. They have not intimidated me. I will continue to fight for my country, for the right, and for the truth. Mr. President, I am fighting for religious freedom in its broadest and profoundest sense. I am fighting for the continued existence of the public-school system of America—fighting for free speech and the right of peaceful assembly—fighting to hold this Government true to the purpose of its creation; I am fighting for the birthright of every true American, be he Gentile or Jew, Protestant or Catholic. I am against an influx of unfit foreigners—the criminal refuse of foreign countries coming into this country.

Let us stand by yonder flag and what it represents. As long as I am a member of this body, by the help of God that flag shall never be used in battle where American boys are to be killed fighting to restore the Roman Catholic Church to power in Mexico.

Mr. JONES obtained the floor.

Mr. BRUCE. Will the Senator yield to me for just about two minutes for the purpose of making a brief statement?

Mr. JONES. I will yield to the Senator when I have made the request which I am about to make.

Mr. BRUCE. I was not permitted to make the statement a while ago.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, all I wish to say is simply this: I happen to have some information in regard to the case of the Catholic priest in Alabama mentioned by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] who was charged with a heinous offense and fled from the State of Alabama. The information that comes to me is that it is quite generally believed that that priest is innocent and that he fled from the State of Alabama because, dominated as that State is by the Ku-Klux Klan influence, he did not believe that he could get a fair trial there.

Mr. HEFLIN. The State is not dominated by any such influence.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator from Alabama stated only a few days ago that he himself, except in some minor respects, was entirely in sympathy with the principles of the Klan.

Mr. HEFLIN. I indorse many of their principles.

Mr. BRUCE. The Governor of Alabama, of course, is a klansman, and even the attorney general was a klansman until he became so disgusted with the general state of lawlessness that existed in the State that he got out of the order. At any rate, it is my information that there is good reason to think—of course, I have no personal knowledge of the matter—that this priest is innocent, and that he fled from the State of Alabama because he believed that he could not possibly under existing conditions get a fair trial there. So much for that.

I am also informed that before application was made to the State court for the indictment of this priest and for extradition process with which to bring him back to the United States, an application was made to the United States district attorney for the State of Alabama, an application based on the same accusation, and that the United States district attorney, after considering the case, refused to give his support in any form whatsoever to an effort to get the Secretary of State of the United States to issue extradition process to Canada to bring the priest back.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield, of course, but I had thought that the Senator could hardly have the face to ask me to yield after having refused positively only a few moments ago to permit an interruption by me. However, I yield to him.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator consumed a half a day of my time before that.

Mr. BRUCE. No; the Vice President said it was not the time of the Senator from Alabama, but mine.

Mr. HEFLIN. The district attorney to whom the Senator refers was a law partner of the national Republican committeeman from Alabama, and the national Republican committeeman was the lawyer in the case to keep O'Connor from coming back. He was in the case with Willett. He recommended the district attorney for his appointment and got the place for him as district attorney. The district attorney under his influence declined, after steps had been taken to bring this man back, to pursue it any further, but he now states that he is willing for the State courts to take him over and try him. The grand jury had indicted him.

Mr. BRUCE. I would not like to think that even a Ku-Klux Klan United States district attorney in the State of Alabama would be so absolutely lost to a proper sense of official duty as to be influenced by his brother-in-law.

Mr. HEFLIN. It was not his brother-in-law but his former law partner and the national committeeman who recommended him for his position and got it for him.

Mr. BRUCE. Even if that be so, no man would be fit, of course, to be United States district attorney or fit for any office who would allow himself to be influenced in the discharge of his duty in such a criminal case as this is supposed to be simply because some individual had given him active support for his appointment.

Those are the facts, Senators. Those are the facts, as brought to my attention.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, who gave the Senator those facts?

Mr. BRUCE. Those facts were given to me by two or three different individuals.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator mind stating them?

Mr. BRUCE. I do not; of course, I do not; among others, Father Eaton, who I have no reason to believe is any but a high-minded, honorable, upright servant of God.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator mind stating the others?

Mr. BRUCE. Bishop Toolen was another. Naturally enough, of course, this poor priest, whether he is guilty or not, had to look to his ecclesiastical superiors to see that he got some sort of fair treatment, and I would have had a poor opinion of them if they had not done everything in their power to secure him a fair trial.

The extradition process was issued on the application of the State authorities to Canada, and there, as I am informed, it has been in controversy for some time; and it still remains to be determined whether Canada, as I understand the matter, will under all the circumstances of the case, honor that extradition process and return the priest to this country. So you see the case, so far as my information goes—and, after all, it is of a comparatively limited character—is a very different one from that presented to you by the Senator from Alabama; and the idea of any such man as Father Eaton or Bishop Loolen being capable of deliberately attempting to shield a man guilty of a flagitious offense from the penalties of the law is one that my mind, at any rate, rejects instinctively, and rejects with disdain.

No! If that priest is truly guilty, so far as his ecclesiastical superiors are concerned he will not only be subjected to the penalties of the municipal law, but, in addition to those, he will be subjected to spiritual penalties almost, if not fully, as drastic. That is to say, there is, in addition to the penalties of municipal law, a process of excommunication to which a recreant or criminal priest is subjected by his own church.

Nothing, I say, could be absolutely more indefensible than the suggestion that even if this man's church had known him to be guilty of such an atrocious offense he would have continued in the discharge of his sacred functions as a priest.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, just one minute.

Mr. JONES. I withhold the motion.

Mr. HEFLIN. I just want to say that I have in my possession two affidavits, one from the husband and one from the wife. They are both Catholics. They state under oath that they will swear, if given an opportunity, that this priest committed this crime. I do not know what they have told the Senator from Maryland, but these are the facts.

Mr. BRUCE. I am informed that after making those affidavits, when the matter came up before the United States district attorney, both husband and wife backed water.

Mr. HEFLIN. No.

Mr. BRUCE. Well, that is my information, that they both backwatered; in other words, they acted in such a manner as to throw distrust over the entire accusation.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; these affidavits were made after that Federal court transaction.

Mr. BRUCE. Oh, well, it may be; under Klan pressure doubtless they have changed their minds some two or three different times as to whether the man was or was not guilty.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. Now, I could answer all that the Senator from Alabama has said by having inserted in the RECORD—though I will not do it—two recent articles, one under date of January 7, and the other under date of January 14, published in Collier's Weekly, showing the fearful conditions, so far as social order and administration of the law are concerned, that prevail in the State of Alabama at the present time. Among other things, in the last three years there have been no less than 700 lawless floggings in that State, in some instances of old men, women, and children.

Mr. HEFLIN. I challenge the statement. It is not so.

Mr. BRUCE. The statement is made by a man who went down to the State of Alabama and accumulated his facts there.

Mr. HEFLIN. He accumulated some falsehoods. I say it is not so. The Senator does not know.

Mr. BRUCE. It may be. Recently one State's attorney under the influence of the klan has withdrawn no less than 100 indictments against some 34 men. I am not casting any aspersions on the good people of Alabama. There are noble men and women in that State, and they are fully alive to the significance of the bigoted crusade of the Klan as has been brought to our attention through the columns of the Alabama press within the last few days; but no voice has ever been lifted——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair regrets to do so, but he will have to remind Senators that a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business has been made.

Mr. BRUCE. I do not see why a speech should necessarily yield to the abuses of Republican patronage.

Mr. WATSON. It is pretty important, Mr. President.

Mr. BRUCE. No doubt; but still more important is the question as to whether an innocent man is to be railroaded into jail or to the gallows.

Mr. HEFLIN. Somebody has badly imposed on the Senator from Maryland about Alabama.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. JONES. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate, in accordance with the order heretofore made, take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 24, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, January 23, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Out of the bosom of our Heavenly Father has come this radiant day, and we praise Thee. We thank Thee for the noontide in the midst of life and labor; we thank Thee for the sunset glory; we thank Thee for the light in the depths of the stars as we wait for the morning dawn. Send out Thy light, O God, to those who sit in darkness; give courage and strength to those who falter and broaden the vision of all. With brave hearts and stout hands may we grip heroically the problems of our Republic. The ones who need us have a valid claim against us. Direct us always to discriminate between the good and the bad, the false and the true. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 20, 1928, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 8269. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 1425), an act to remove a cloud on title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

THE LATE MAJ. GEN. GEORGE W. GOETHALS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is well for us to pause in the midst of our labors to pay a word of tribute to a great American who has fallen. On Saturday last, January 21, 1928, Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals passed from the scene of his earthly labors to his great reward. The word "Panama" alone, coupled as it must always be with his name, is sufficient to enroll it on the roster of the immortals. It was his brain and great executive ability that at last brought to pass the dream of the centuries of finding a passage to Asia. His work at Panama entitles him to a place high on the roll of the Nation's great builders.

General Goethals was honored in many ways by our country and by foreign countries. Congress thanked him for his work in connection with building the Panama Canal. He was made a major general. He received the distinguished-service medal for meritorious service in reorganization of the Quartermaster General's Department during the World War. France decorated him with the Legion of Honor, Order of Commander; the British Crown conferred upon him the Order of Knight Commander of St. Michael and St. George; and the Chinese Government made him a member of the Grand Cordon of the Order of Wen Hu (Striped Tiger).

Above all the honors that governments or earthly rulers could confer or offer stands the fact that General Goethals was in himself a great American, made great by an incomparable service rendered to mankind. The conditions under which he did his work at Panama gave him almost autocratic powers. How effective he used these great powers was shown by the results attained in the accomplishment of his task, but only those who worked under him or visited the Isthmus during his stay there will ever be able to fully realize how just and fair he was even to the humblest employee in his administration of affairs. In the midst of his great task, as a just judge, he sat as a court on the Sabbath day and heard patiently those who had just grievance; nor did anyone have reason to go away from his presence without having justice done him. Thus in a most practical way did he demonstrate that truth, justice, and fair-dealing are ever the distinguishing characteristics of true greatness.

As long as the commerce of the world continues to flow from ocean to ocean through the canal made possible by their combined genius, so long will the names of George W. Goethals and his great colaborer, William C. Gorgas, be remembered and repeated around the globe.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] may proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, last Saturday there passed away in New York City one of America's greatest men, Gen. George W. Goethals. The world has recognized the genius and the splendid achievement of General Goethals. Some day, I hope, our country will give him the recognition to which he is entitled. For the present I think we might well pause from our labors for a moment to note his passing and bear brief testimony to the loss which I am sure every American must feel in the death of General Goethals.

General Goethals was a typical product of the West Point Military Academy. He graduated from that institution as a second lieutenant in the Engineering Corps in 1880. He was not unlike many hundreds of other young American boys who go through the United States Military and Naval Academies. Modest, studious, devoted to his career, patriotic, a man of vision who looked ahead unselfishly to his country's future. He served creditably in the Engineer Corps during the war with Spain, and in the later years of his life, after he had retired from active duty, he was again called into active service and performed valuable services in connection with the Emergency Fleet Corporation and as Quartermaster General during the World War, for which he received the distinguished-service medal from Congress for especially meritorious and conspicuous service in reorganizing the quartermaster department.

But the fame of General Goethals will rest with his signal achievement in constructing the Panama Canal. The construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama had been the dream of students and of statesmen for more than 300 years. Spain, England, Germany, and France all contemplated undertaking the task. But all abandoned it save France who, after two disastrous attempts, failed to accomplish it.

The United States made this wonderful dream come true, and it was the splendid ability and unselfish services of General Goethals more than all else that enabled us to do so.

He had shown unusual ability as engineer in charge of the improvements of the Ohio River and the construction of the locks and dams on that river, and at Muscle Shoals and elsewhere; and when the difficulties encountered in the early days of our efforts on the Isthmus of Panama made it appear doubtful whether this country could successfully unite the two oceans, General Goethals was called into service and placed in charge of the work at Panama; and in 1914 the greatest project ever undertaken by any government in the world was completed under his guiding mind and hand.

His life will long be an inspiration to the youth of our country, and an illustration of the thought that the young men who graduate from our Military and Naval Academies can serve the country well and achieve fame by peaceful achievements as well as on the field of battle. The uninformed and the unthinking too often criticize the Army engineers who are charged with various activities of our Government. But the fact is, that there is not a finer or better qualified body of engineers in the world than the Army and Navy engineers of this country. And when crises have arisen, the Government has often turned to them for leadership. And it will do so again.

We are now confronted with a problem as great and perhaps as difficult as the construction of the Panama Canal. A million and a half people and billions of dollars worth of property are threatened every few years from the inundation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. The country is looking for men of the genius and the ability and the leadership of General Goethals to find a solution in this great problem. I am sure the Members of this House share with me in the belief that another General Goethals can be found among the Army engineers who can add to the achievement of General Goethals on the Isthmus of Panama another splendid achievement in the Mississippi Valley by the execution and completion of some suitable plan to end the terror and the losses from the floods of that river and bring peace and prosperity to so many of our people who live along its fertile valleys.

It would be well if every Member of Congress, and as many American citizens as possible, could visit the Isthmus of Panama and see the great canal, completed and in successful operation, a monument for all time, not only to the genius and splendid achievement of General Goethals, under whose management the project was completed, but as well to the sacrifice and the splendid ability of General Gorgas, and of Colonels Seibert, Gaillard, and Hodges, and others whose assistance made the work of General Goethals possible. A commendable effort is now being made to erect a suitable memorial to General Gorgas near the scene of his labors on the Isthmus of Panama. Let us hope that our Government will not long delay the erection of a suitable memorial to commemorate the genius and the achievement of General Goethals, by whom more than all others that great project was made possible. [Applause.]

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter addressed to me by the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission of the State of Tennessee, reciting certain objections which, on the behalf of the State, that commission is urging to the so-called Madden bill, designed to carry into effect the cyanamid offer on Muscle Shoals. Inasmuch as this communication deals with a very live matter of legislation, which must be passed upon by this House, and in view of the fact that this commission is officially asserting its objections on behalf of the State of Tennessee, I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission of the State of Tennessee. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this letter deals entirely with that one question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It deals entirely with certain phases of the so-called Madden bill.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I notice that the gentleman said that this Congress must deal with this legislation. Does the gentleman have any hope that the Congress will deal with the Muscle Shoals proposition at this session?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope so.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I am very glad to hear the leader of the minority say that. I remember the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] at the last session giving notice to this House that unless some arrangement was made soon to settle the Muscle Shoals question, he was in favor of the Government taking it over and completing it and doing the work. And everybody applauded him.

Mr. SNELL. I will say that my position is just exactly what it was then.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I would like to see the gentleman get busy.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me? I would like to get into this colloquy for just a minute.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have reintroduced the bill which was pending last year for the adjustment of Muscle Shoals. I have sent to the Military Affairs Committee a complete, detailed statement of what the bill contains. I have urged in that letter immediate consideration on the part of the committee and have asked them for further hearings, if further hearings be necessary. As the author of the bill, earnestly interested in adjudicating a problem which ought to have been adjudicated long ago, in my judgment, I am anxious to see the legislation enacted. I want to see it enacted not only because it proposes to utilize the vast expenditure made by the Government for the manufacture of nitrates during war times by this utility, and fertilizers in time of peace, the purpose for which the original investment was made, but also because it proposes to prevent what I think is to-day a useless waste of money already invested. In fact, I want to see whether the water-power companies of the United States have more power to pass legislation in this House than the House itself has.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that all who have knowledge of this Muscle Shoals question in and out of the House of Representatives I think fully appreciate the zeal which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has displayed in prior Congresses and in this, in an effort to have this question disposed of. There is a realization that his activity has been wholly unselfish and that all that he has done has been in a sincere effort to promote the public interests. His efforts have been appreciated, I am sure, throughout the country, and particularly in that section of the country in which this great project is located. It is desirable, I think, that certain legal questions having been raised by the constituted authorities of Tennessee, the matter should be placed in a position where it can receive the attention of the committee and of the Congress, in the hope that there may be an adjustment so that we can legislate and dispose of this project.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman a question, making a reservation for that purpose. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this document speaks the position of the State of Tennessee?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It speaks the position of the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission of Tennessee.

Mr. BLANTON. But have the people of Tennessee authorized this commission to speak for them on Muscle Shoals?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They have had no way to authorize them.

Mr. BLANTON. When I ask that question I mean no reflection on that commission of the State of Tennessee, but I am afraid that a certain board of water engineers in the State of Texas is under the influence of the great power companies of the country. Is this commission in Tennessee outside the influence of the great Power Trust of the United States, so far as the gentleman knows?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no reason to believe that the commission is under the domination in any way of what the gentleman from Texas calls the Power Trust, either locally or generally. If the gentleman wants to know the purport of this communication he can learn of it by reading it, and I trust he will do so, for it is interesting and important. I think it was, perhaps, on or about the 7th of December or somewhere in the early part of December that the House gave its consent and I placed in the RECORD the order issued by the Public Utilities Commission of the State of Tennessee. No; it is in the RECORD of December 8, 1927, asserting the authority of the State over the control of hydroelectric power. It is a legal proposition. The questions that are raised in this communication which I ask to put into the RECORD now are purely legal.

Mr. BLANTON. The reason why I asked the question is that I was convinced this past summer that the Power Trust have their tentacles around a majority of our board of water engineers in the State of Texas, so that a stockman can not put in a dam across a draw on his own ranch to conserve the water that falls on his own property, because the Power Trust claims control of all the waterfall of the entire western half of the State of Texas.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas to make the allegation that the railroad commission, which is presided over by as fine a man as——

Mr. BLANTON. No; I was not referring in any way to the railroad commission. I had reference only to the board of water engineers of our State, to which you have to go when you want to build a dam over any stream in Texas. I have the highest respect for the Railroad Commission in Texas, but I am afraid I have lost confidence in two members of our board of water engineers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter received by me from the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission of Tennessee relating to the control of the water-power resources of the State and Muscle Shoals:

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF TENNESSEE,
Nashville, January 18, 1928.

Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 10th instant, addressed to Mr. Dunlap, a member of the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission of Tennessee, requesting the commission to make a statement of its views in regard to such portions of the Madden bill (H. R. 8305) as may affect the State of Tennessee, has been received and carefully considered by the commission. Your suggestion that it is best to have a clear-cut understanding on this subject now, rather than later, seems timely and proper.

In response to your request the commission begs leave to state that it has given the most thoughtful consideration to the Madden bill, and has reached the conclusion that the passage of this bill in its present form would constitute a clear invasion and subversion of the rights of the State of Tennessee in and to its water-power resources on the Tennessee River and its tributaries above Muscle Shoals.

The commission is advised by thoroughly capable engineers that the water-power resources of that part of the Tennessee River and its tributaries above Muscle Shoals and within the State of Tennessee would probably exceed 20,000,000,000 kilowatt hours per annum. This constitutes a resource that is so vast and so valuable that it is difficult to visualize the possibilities of development along all industrial lines to which the State of Tennessee and its people are entitled. That the State has a very definite right and vital interest in the development of these resources can not be gainsaid.

The Madden bill contains a provision in the last paragraph of section 1 that the "United States covenants and agrees that it will not itself, or by permit or license, authorize or empower any third party to construct, operate, or maintain any dam or dams on the Tennessee River and/or its tributaries in such form or manner as will materially impair or detract from the full use and enjoyment by the lessee of the properties (at Muscle Shoals), or any of them, demised to the lessee by this lease."

As the commission understands the above provision, the lessee of Muscle Shoals, under the Madden bill, would be able to prevent the development of any of the water-power resources on the Tennessee River above Muscle Shoals merely by showing that such development would materially impair or detract from the full use and enjoyment of the property at Muscle Shoals by Air Nitrates Corporation and American Cyanamid Co.

The commission respectfully submits that the State of Tennessee is as much entitled as a matter of right to the maximum benefits which would result from the proper development and utilization of the water-power resources of the Tennessee River and its tributaries within the boundaries of this State as the Federal Government or any lessee is entitled to the maximum benefits from the operation of Muscle Shoals, and the Federal Government has no legal or equitable right to subordinate the water-power resources on the Tennessee River and its tributaries within the boundaries of this State to Muscle Shoals and thus impair the value of such resources to the State of Tennessee and its people.

The above general provision is followed by certain specific provisions contained in paragraphs T and U of the Madden bill. By paragraph T the United States "covenants and agrees to acquire and construct with reasonable promptness Cove Creek Dam, to be constructed upon the Cove Creek site on the Clinch River, located approximately 8 miles in a direct line north of Clinton, Tenn."

The manifest purpose of this provision of the Madden bill is to dispose of this great property, which is perhaps worth as much as Muscle Shoals, without the United States ever having expended 1 cent in its development at the time of the execution of the lease, and in total disregard of the sovereign and proprietary rights of the State of Tennessee.

Under section U of the Madden bill it is provided that the lessee—that is, the Air Nitrates Corporation and the American Cyanamid Co.—will, within 90 days after the date of the lease, cause to be organized a subsidiary corporation "empowered to engage in the business of developing, generating, transmitting, and distributing electric power, and will cause said subsidiary corporation to file, within 90 days after its organization, with the Federal Power Commission, an application for a preliminary permit to enable said subsidiary corporation to secure the data and perform the acts required by section 9 of the Federal water power act, with a view to acquiring and obtaining a license to construct, operate, and maintain, in accordance with the terms and provisions of said act, except as herein otherwise provided, the following dams, to wit:

(1) Senator dam, to be constructed upon the Senator site on the Clinch River above the mouth of the Emery River.

(2) Melton Hill dam, to be constructed upon the Melton Hill site on the Clinch River, in Anderson and Knox Counties.

(3) Clinton dam, to be constructed upon the Clinton site on the Clinch River, near Clinton, and thereupon the said commission shall issue such a preliminary permit forthwith.

It is then provided that the subsidiary corporation shall have three years thereafter within which to make examinations and surveys, etc. During the three-year period the subsidiary corporation shall have and enjoy priority in applying for a license under the terms of said act to acquire, construct, operate, and maintain any one or more of said dams. If within said period of three years the subsidiary corporation shall elect to acquire and construct any one or more of said dams, it shall promptly apply for a license to do so.

It is then provided that, "Thereupon, in accordance with plans and specifications approved by the Secretary of War, and which shall be well adapted to develop, conserve, and utilize in the public interest the navigation and the water-power development of such region, the said commission (Federal Water Power Commission) shall issue to the said subsidiary corporation a license to acquire, construct, operate, and maintain the dam or dams specified in said application, which shall confer upon said subsidiary corporation all the rights and privileges of said act."

It will be noted that this bill does not require the subsidiary corporation to construct any one or more of these dams at any time; neither does it limit the time within which any one or more of said dams shall be constructed. The practical result from the operation of these provisions of the Madden bill would simply be that the Cyanamid Co.

and the Air Nitrates Corporation would have three years and a half during which time they could determine whether or not they would make the proposed development of any one of the dam sites named, which would be nothing less than an exclusive option in favor of these companies for that period of time. At the expiration of the three and a half years they would then make application to the Federal Power Commission for a license, and would have such additional time to make the development as might be given them by the Federal Power Commission. The nature, character, and extent of the improvement at each dam would likewise be left to these companies, subject, of course, to the approval of the Federal Power Commission.

Another highly important consideration is that the lessee making these developments, when made, if made at all, would be under no obligation to the State of Tennessee in so far as the distribution of power might be concerned; that is, the citizens of this State could not have any preferential right; neither would the State have any assurance that the entirety of this power would not be carried beyond the limits of the State to supply cities and manufacturing plants located in other neighboring States. In this way it is not only possible, but highly probable, that neither the State of Tennessee nor its people would derive anything more than a mere negligible advantage from the development of these valuable power sites located in Tennessee. The State of Tennessee would probably get nothing more than a small property tax on the money invested in the plants.

Of course, in the case of Cove Creek, if that dam should be constructed by the United States Government and the title be held by it, it would not be subject to direct taxation in the State of Tennessee, and thus the State might lose every possible benefit from that source.

The State of Tennessee and its people have certain rights with respect to the Tennessee River within its borders which would be wholly lost to the State and its people should the Madden bill become a law. In the recent case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, styled Fox River Paper Co. et al. v. Railroad Commission of Wisconsin, on May 31, 1927, the rights of the State of Wisconsin are clearly recognized.

The railroad commission had assumed the power and jurisdiction under the statutes of that State to determine whether or not a permit should be granted to the applicants to raise their dams which had been constructed years ago. The law of Wisconsin provides that every applicant for a permit is required to file with its application proposals in writing, consenting, among other things, to the granting of a permit subject to the condition that the State of Wisconsin, if it shall have the constitutional power, or any municipality, on not less than one year's notice, at any time after the expiration of 30 years after the permit becomes effective, may acquire all of the property of the grantee, used and useful, under the permit, by paying therefor the cost of reproduction in their then existing condition of all dams, locks, buildings or other structures or equipment, used and useful, under the permit, as determined by the commission, and by paying in addition thereto the value of the dam site and of flowage rights and other property as determined by the commission prior to the time the permit was granted, plus the amounts paid out for additional flowage rights, if any, acquired after the valuation made by the commission, and that the applicant waives all rights to any further compensation. The question was made and pressed upon the courts of Wisconsin and upon the Supreme Court of the United States that the compensation thus provided for by statute was wholly inadequate and that the State was without authority to make such exaction.

In the course of the opinion the following language appears:

"If the legislature may wholly refuse permission to erect a dam or other structure in the navigable waters of the State, it follows that it may grant such permission upon such terms as it shall determine will best protect the interests of the public. The legislature could impose the condition that the dam should be removed when it obstructed navigation, or that it should be removed at the end of a definite period of time; for example, 30 years."

Omitting the cases cited by the Supreme Court in support of the position, which are numerous, the court used the following language:

"Although presumptively title to the soil under navigable waters within the State is in the State, the nature and extent of the rights of the State and of riparian owners in navigable waters within the State and to the soil beneath are matters of State law to be determined by the statutes and judicial decisions of the State."

It is also said in the course of this opinion, omitting citations:

"The State's consent is necessary for the construction of a bridge or dam in a navigable river, subject to the superior power of the United States over navigation, and plaintiffs concede that the maintenance of such a dam without such permission constitutes a public nuisance."

Further on in the opinion the following language appears:

"We are not concerned with the correctness of the rule adopted by the State court, its conformity to authority, or its consistency with related legal doctrines. It is for the State court in cases such as this to define rights in land located within the State, and the fourteenth amendment, in the absence of an attempt to forestall our review of the constitutional question, affords no protection to supposed rights of property which the State courts determine to be nonexistent.

"We accept as conclusive the State court's view of the nature of the rights of riparian owners. We therefore find in the refusal of the commission to grant the permit no denial of the property rights of plaintiffs, and hence no violation of the fourteenth amendment. Compliance with section 31.09 is the price which plaintiffs must pay to secure the right to maintain their dam."

In other words, the Supreme Court said that the State of Wisconsin, acting through its railroad commission, had the power to impose a condition upon an applicant who sought a permit to build or raise its dam, that it should agree in writing that the State or any municipality at the end of 30 years might take over the property and pay for same upon a certain basis, and that its consent was the price it had to pay for the permit.

Turning now to the laws of Tennessee, permit us to call your attention to the case of Elder v. Burrus, opinion by Judge Turley, 6 Humphrey 357, in which it is distinctly stated that the waters of our navigable rivers belong to the public.

In the case of Stewart v. Clark (2 Swan 9) it is held that the soil covered by the waters of a navigable stream, as well as the use of the stream, belongs to the public. In that case the court had under consideration the question whether or not the Nolachcuky River is a navigable river in the legal sense of the term. It is said in the course of the opinion that—

"If the river be a public navigable stream, in the legal sense, the soil covered by the water, as well as the use of the stream, belongs to the public. But if it be not navigable in the legal meaning of the term—as is the case in England as to all streams above the flow of the tide—the ownership of the bed of the stream is in the riparian proprietors, but the public has an easement therein for the purposes of transportation and commercial intercourse."

The court defines the word "easement" in the same opinion by saying, "And this easement or servitude of public interest, in the phrase of the Roman law, is as absolute and unlimited in the public, in reference to this class of rivers, as to rivers navigable in the technical meaning of the term." The court was speaking of streams which were valuable for floatage as for rafts, etc., in the language last above quoted.

In the case of Miller v. State (16 Cates 293), in which Chief Justice Shields prepared an elaborate opinion for the Supreme Court of Tennessee, the court discussed the rights of the State and reviews the decisions of this State and of other States, and reaffirms the doctrine announced in the old cases, two of which are cited above.

In view of the declaration so recently made by the Supreme Court of the United States that the laws of the particular State must govern, we respectfully call your attention to the fact that in the State of Tennessee, by an unbroken line of decisions, it has been held, and is now the law, that the State of Tennessee owns not only the soil under all navigable streams within its borders, but it also owns, as a valuable property right, the use of the waters flowing therein. The State also holds an easement in all that class of nonnavigable streams which rise to the dignity of watercourses which would be considered as being of sufficient volume to generate electricity; that is, that class of streams which are used for the floatage of rafts, flat boats, or other small craft. These streams are highways in the same sense that public roads and navigable streams are highways.

There is another consideration to which we would respectfully direct your attention, and that is that, under the police power of the State, the impounding of large bodies of water by the erection of dams may be regulated by the State not only because they may constitute a menace to the safety of the people in the valley below the impounded water but also because the health of the people may be thereby affected.

Summarizing the objection to provisions hereinbefore outlined of the Madden bill, in so far as they affect the rights of the State of Tennessee and the welfare of its people, we submit the following:

First. The Madden bill in its present form utterly ignores the proprietary rights of the State of Tennessee and its people in and to the water-power resources within the boundaries of the State.

Second. It totally disregards the political or sovereign rights of the State of Tennessee and its jurisdiction and authority to supervise, regulate, and control the development and utilization of its water-power resources.

Third. It denies Tennessee the right to select the applicant or applicants who shall be permitted to develop these resources within the State and the use to be made of the electric energy thus generated—that is, whether same is to be consumed chiefly within the State of Tennessee or exported to other States, and whether the same shall be consumed at the point of generation or widely distributed over the State for the general service and benefit of all the people. It denies to this State the right to say whether capital and individuals in Tennessee, or in the South or in any particular section of the country, shall enjoy the right to make such development and the benefits accruing therefrom to those who may be permitted to make use of these resources.

Fourth. It subordinates the water-power resources of the Tennessee River and its tributaries above Muscle Shoals and within the boundaries of Tennessee to Muscle Shoals, and proposes to direct such development and make such use of these resources within Tennessee as primarily benefit the operations at Muscle Shoals, regardless of the effect thereof on the value of the water resources within Tennessee.

Fifth. The Madden bill by one single act of Congress proposes to divest Tennessee of all of its right, title, and interest in and to water resources within the boundary of the State equivalent in potential hydroelectric energy to two-thirds of that being generated at present in the whole of the United States, and equivalent to one-half or more of the entire water-power sources within Tennessee.

Sixth. If the Federal Government can thus legally, through the Madden bill, make disposition of one-half of the water-power resources of this State without the consent or permission of the State, it can, by the same logic, assert and exercise the unqualified right to dispose of all the water-power resources in Tennessee.

It seems to us that the Madden bill, in the particulars above mentioned, undertakes to assert powers which the Federal Government does not possess under the navigation clause of the Federal Constitution, and which have never been recognized by the supreme court of this State or by the Supreme Court of the United States as belonging to the Federal Government.

The foregoing is intended as a criticism only of those provisions of the Madden bill which would assert the jurisdiction of the Federal Government over and its right to dispose of the water-power resources of the State of Tennessee without the consent of this State. The commission expresses no opinion as to the merits or demerits of the bill in question, so far as it proposes to dispose or provide for the operation of Muscle Shoals as a separate and distinct property. That is a matter which you and other Members of the Tennessee delegation and of the Congress will determine as national representatives of all the people.

Very respectfully,

HARRY H. HANNAH, Chairman.
PORTER DUNLAP, Commissioner.
E. D. HILL, Commissioner.

Mr. HUGHES. I want to say for the information of the House that if the Members of the House knew of the zeal with which the Committee on Military Affairs is working on the Muscle Shoals proposition they would feel satisfied with what is being done in the committee. That committee hopes to make a full report some time this week, and in a way that we hope will be satisfactory to all and for the best interests of all.

PERMISSION OF A COMMITTEE TO SIT DURING THE SESSION OF THE HOUSE

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent that that committee may hold meetings this afternoon during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. By direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that that committee may sit this afternoon during the session of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GEN. NATHAN BEDFORD FORREST

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, under a special order made last week Major STEDMAN, of North Carolina, was given time on which to address the House on Saturday last on the life and character of General Forrest. The House adjourned over on that day. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina be permitted to extend his remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, Saturday, January 21, was the birthday of Nathan Bedford Forrest, and my heart prompts me to express my admiration for his character, which I have had for many years.

One who reads the history of the unfortunate struggle between the States of our great Republic will find upon its pages the record of his life. His splendid qualities won for him the esteem and unchanging love of his countrymen and attracted the admiration of thousands whose homes were in foreign lands.

Nathan Bedford Forrest was born in Bedford County, Tenn., on the 21st of January, 1821. His father, William Forrest, was a man of influence with the people of the section of the country in which he lived. His mother, whose maiden name was Mariam Beck before her marriage, was a woman of rare ability.

He inherited from his ancestry those splendid qualities which distinguished his life.

He loved the truth and ever followed its dictates. He was the embodiment of physical and moral courage of the highest type. The emotion of fear found no resting place in his breast. He loved little children, and during his campaigns often stopped at houses where they were and would take one of them with him for several miles and return the child to its home by some trusted soldier. When the Civil War was over he went to Memphis, Tenn., and became a model and consistent member of the church. He died in the triumph of the Christian religion and left a name without blemish or stain. Fortunate is the nation which can furnish such a model for its young men.

The mighty river which winds its way through the territory which was the theater of his great achievements will ever sing his requiem.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9481, the independent offices appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9481, the independent offices appropriation bill, with Mr. DOWELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9481, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDEPENDENT ESTABLISHMENTS

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN

All expenses of the office of the Alien Property Custodian authorized by the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, including compensation of the Alien Property Custodian at not to exceed $10,000 per annum; shall be paid from interest and collections on trust funds and other properties under the control of such custodian.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee about lines 8, 9, and 10, which provide that—the expenses of the office, including the salary, shall be paid from interest and collections on trust funds and other properties under the control of such custodian.

As I understand it, these trust funds and other property aggregate $250,000,000. All this is under the control of the custodian, and he has deposited the funds, here, there, and everywhere in banks, at his discretion. The Comptroller General in his elaborate report in November, 1926, after he had investigated the custodian's office, said that there was very little accuracy about the accounts in the office; that it was difficult to tell what had been paid out here and what had been paid out there and when it had been paid out; that the accounts were not at all as they should be. Now, how much interest, how much of profit, does this custodian get out of the $250,000,000?

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the present Alien Property Custodian is trying to carry out literally the provisions of the Winslow Act. That act, section 24, provides that—

The Alien Property Custodian is authorized to pay all taxes (including special assessments) heretofore or hereafter lawfully assessed by any body politic against any money or other property held by him or by the Treasurer of the United States under this act, and to pay the necessary expenses incurred by him or by any depository for him in securing the possession, collection, or control of any such money or other property, or in protecting or administering the same. Such taxes and expenses shall be paid out of the money or other property against which such taxes are assessed or in respect of which such expenses are incurred, or (if such money or other property is insufficient) out of any other money or property held for the same person, notwithstanding the fact that a claim may have been filed or suit instituted under this act.

Mr. Sutherland has more nearly carried out the law with reference to the administration of the Office of the Alien Property Custodian than anybody who has preceded him, and the hearings, on page 7, set forth the whole business, the investments, the amount of interest, and everything.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman will remember that the alien property bill has been passed by this House and is now pending in the Senate. We had a hearing on that bill about a year ago. I will say for myself—and I think I speak for a goodly portion of the Committee on Ways and Means—that the present custodian impressed us as trying to administer that office according to law and according to the ethics which the gentleman from Wisconsin thinks ought to control public business. That, I think, can be said about the present head of that office, but I doubt whether it could be said about some of the officials who are still in that office and were in the office at that time. I think that is where the trouble comes. Some of the subofficials he has about him seem to have more knowledge about the affairs of that office than he seems to have, and it was the idea of the committee that in the future he would familiarize himself with its affairs and run them as he should.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In December, 1926—a year ago last December—the alien property bill came up. A year before that time the President had directed Comptroller General McCarl to make an investigation of the Office of the Alien Property Custodian and submit a report. That report, a voluminous document, was made by the Comptroller General on November 15, 1926—a year ago last November—about three weeks before the House took up the bill, and yet the House knew nothing about the report until after it had passed the alien property bill and adjourned for the holiday recess.

Then the report was made public, though even yet comparatively few have ever seen it. That report, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana—perhaps he is familiar with it—showed a condition of affairs in the Office of the Alien Property Custodian more disgraceful than has ever been known in any other bureau of the United States Government within my experience. There had been fraud, falsehood, and a reckless disregard of the rights of everybody or everything excepting only the pocketbooks of the grafters who were doing the business.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] said he has an idea that there are some people still in that office who ought not to be there and have this property turned over to their control. This statement of the gentleman from Texas reminds me that the Comptroller General reported as a minor incident the fact that three or four men employed in that bureau had gone over to Europe ostensibly to make some sort of an investigation. They came back and it was found that they had expended more than $27,000. The Comptroller General asked them for something in the way of vouchers. They could not produce any that he could use. He asked them for something to show that their statement of expenditures was proper, but they could produce nothing.

They still had more than $3,000 left and the comptroller says the money was kept by two of the men and the whole thing fixed up by the obliging Alien Property Custodian, who simply increased the amount of the salaries of these men to $1,000 a month, so as to cover the amount they had not accounted for. And the Comptroller General says also in his report that some of these very men were then still in the office of the Alien Property Custodian. And it is a fact that they were there when the House passed that alien property bill to turn these millions over to their keeping. These facts justify the surmise of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Is it not true and has not the gentleman discovered that the operations of this bureau from the very beginning have been more or less dubious?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. More, I should say.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. And, in fact, that much property was seized which never should have been seized?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is true. I wish to summarize my judgment by saying—and from the statement just made by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa it is evidently his judgment—that there has been nothing more disgraceful in the records of this Government from its foundation than the shameless things that have characterized the administration of the affairs of the Alien Property Custodian's Office. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE COMMISSION

For continuing the construction of the Arlington memorial bridge across the Potomac River at Washington, authorized in an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from a point near the Lincoln Memorial, in the city of Washington, to an appropriate point in the State of Virginia, and for other purposes," approved February 24, 1925, to be expended in accordance with the provisions and conditions of the said act, $2,300,000, including all necessary incidental and contingent expenses, the maintenance and repair of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, printing and binding, and traveling expenses, to remain available until expended.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I would like to ask the committee if the amount carried in this paragraph is all that the commission can economically expend on this project during the next fiscal year?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; that is all they feel they can expend, and in all probability they will not expend this much.

Mr. DALLINGER. May I ask the committee how soon this bridge will be finished?

Mr. WOOD. It is supposed to be completed in 1931, as far as the Government is concerned. Of course, the District of Columbia has a good deal yet to contribute toward this bridge.

Mr. DALLINGER. At the present rate, does the gentleman from Indiana think the bridge will be completed at the time of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; I think so. The work on this structure is going on fine. I do not believe in my experience I have ever seen any public construction going on as nicely or as rapidly as this work is going on.

Mr. DALLINGER. And the gentleman thinks that the construction work is going on as rapidly as it can?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; I think so.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all printing and binding for the Civil Service Commission, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services located in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $58,000.

Total, Civil Service Commission, $1,098,752.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If I were as well informed on this bill as I should be, I would move to strike out, at line 19, page 10, $26,000 for the examination of presidential postmasters.

I feel there is a lot of money being expended for this purpose that is a useless expenditure of money.

Recently in my home town there was a vacancy in the office of postmaster at Huntington. There were three applicants for this position who were satisfactory to the patrons of the office.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I submit a point of order. The paragraph which the gentleman is evidently directing his attention to has been passed.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not offered to strike out the language but has simply moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman can not discuss that particular item, but I do not care to interfere with him.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] desires to question the right of the gentleman to speak upon anything except the paragraph just read, the point of order will be sustained.

Mr. WOOD. Evidently that is what the gentleman wants to do, but I shall not press the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES. I was speaking of the paragraph in the bill which I thought affected me in my district, namely, the paragraph dealing with expenditures for the examination of first-class postmasters.

As I started to say, in a recent vacancy at Huntington there were three applicants for this post office who were satisfactory to the patrons. The Civil Service Commission refused to consider any one of the three and sent a representative from the Civil Service Commission to Huntington, who stayed there several days and solicited the people to make application for postmaster at Huntington. By going over the whole city they succeeded in getting 42 people to make application for postmaster at Huntington. [Laughter.] After this was done they then sent three representatives from Washington and they stayed there for 10 days or 2 weeks, visiting practically every business house, every factory, every bank, every minister, to look into the qualifications of these 42 applicants who would make a satisfactory postmaster for Huntington. They went into the details and took up the character of every one of these applicants, and after a long time selected from this list three men from whom former Congressman Woodyard had an opportunity to select a postmaster.

They had on this list of the first three applicants men who were well fitted and well qualified, but I think this is an absolutely useless expenditure of money. I think it creates a whole lot of discord in a community, and I think they have used as poor judgment in this matter as they have in selecting the men who are to work in the prohibition service.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman see any reason why an administrative office such as postmaster of a large city should have anything to do with the Civil Service Commission at all or why the Civil Service Commission should have anything to do with such appointments?

Mr. HUGHES. I do not. I fully agree with the gentleman.

Mr. McKEOWN. Would not the same results follow in the selection of postmasters as have happened since we turned over to the Civil Service Commission the selection of prohibition officers; that is, a man who could add a few figures and write a good sentence or two, but did not know anything about enforcing the law, is selected over a good officer of the law.

Mr. HUGHES. I just wish to say with reference to prohibition that there are men who have been in that service since prohibition began and who have given satisfactory service; but out of all such employees, I am reliably informed, there are only 5 per cent that were selected. In some States none. Now, I believe if this commission would use practical business methods, a much larger list of eligibles would be available and this department would not be embarrassed as they now are.

I think the Civil Service Commission should get some business qualifications into that bureau and see if they can not give the country something that is worth while instead of dealing with technicalities from which they now make up their examinations of applicants.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I will.

Mr. RANKIN. Under the schedule provided under the present administration for examination of postmasters——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Under the present schedule for the examination of applicants for postmasterships, under the present administration it is provided that their educational qualifications can not amount to more than 20 per cent.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Whereas their alleged business qualifications, which phrase is very indefinite, may be rated as high as 80 per cent.

Now, does not the gentleman think if we are going to get anything like a reasonably decent administration of these post offices that come under the civil service that that schedule ought to be rearranged in order that a man's education and other qualifications, his ability, may amount to something in this examination?

Mr. HUGHES. No; I do not agree with the gentleman; I think the business qualifications should count wholly without any educational qualifications.

Mr. RANKIN. All right; then, as I understand the gentleman, it makes no difference whether they have any educational qualifications at all.

Mr. HUGHES. No; it does not make any difference, if they have acquired an ability to give a good business administration. I think that is all that is necessary.

Mr. RANKIN. All right, the gentleman has qualified as a postmaster under present administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I have heard the statements made by gentlemen on the floor of the House with reference to examinations that were held for prohibition officers by the Civil Service Commission. I went down to the Civil Service Commission and looked at the questions. I want to tell the House that an average eighth-grade school boy could read those questions and answer them correctly.

The examination consisted of three papers, two questions on each paper, six questions, and those questions gave the man in office an advantage, because they referred generally to the duties of an agent. The other paper consisted of 40 questions, I believe, and each question had 5 answers, 1 right and 4 wrong, each numbered just as you see questions in many of the daily papers to-day.

All the applicant had to do was to put the number to the right answer. Surely that could not be considered a difficult test or requiring great educational attainments.

For instance, here is one question, and it is typical of the set of questions on that paper.

The next question is based on the following statement:

23. Prohibition work is not easy; it often means enduring conditions that are anything but pleasant. Prohibition agents must be prepared to carry on their work at all times, regardless of weather, hours of work, surroundings, or necessity for traveling. They must often encounter and tactfully manage a public quite unsympathetic and uncooperative.

In connection with prohibition work, which of the following is emphasized in the statement? (1) Importance to the Nation, (2) hardships, (3) attitude of violators of law, (4) need of cooperation, (5) variety—

Surely it would require no college education to pick "No. 2"—hardships—as the correct answer.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the Civil Service Commission proceed upon the ground that they did many years ago when they propounded three questions, and if you answered two-thirds you were eligible for appointment? If an applicant answered one question wrong and two that he did not know, he was answering two-thirds and was eligible?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. These applicants were not required to answer the questions. All they were required to do was to pick the correct answer by number and so indicate it on the question blank.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does the gentleman justify putting the prohibition officers under the civil service?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I voted for it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does the gentleman know that under that examination nobody except a Republican can get office?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I do not believe that anyone in the State or the United States, whether you take them from the pulpit or the bar or the bench, or from the Army or Navy, can enforce that law. It is not possible of enforcement.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does the gentleman have any idea that under the present civil service anybody but a Republican can be appointed?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I am not an authority on that.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does not the gentleman know that nobody but a Republican can get in through the civil service?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That is not true. The Internal Revenue Bureau is full of Democrats and so are many other departments of the Government.

Mr. ABERNETHY. They were there originally.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Covered into the civil service? I think the gentleman from North Carolina is in error. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all other authorized expenditures of the Federal Trade Commission in performing the duties imposed by law or in pursuance of law, including secretary to the commission and other personal services, contract stenographic reporting services to be obtained on and after the approval of this act by the commission, in its discretion, through the civil service or by contract, or renewal of existing contract, or otherwise, supplies and equipment, law books, books of reference, periodicals, garage rental, traveling expenses, not to exceed $225 for newspapers, foreign postage, and witness fees and mileage in accordance with section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission act, $895,000, of which amount not to exceed $771,030 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, including witness fees: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for investigations, including economic investigations, requested by either House of Congress except those requested by concurrent resolution of Congress, but this limitation shall not apply to investigations and reports in connection with alleged violations of the antitrust acts by any corporation.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to that portion of the paragraph beginning on line 21, page 17, reading as follows:

Provided: That no part of this sum shall be expended for investigations, including economic investigations, requested by either House of Congress except those requested by concurrent resolution of Congress, but this limitation shall not apply to investigations and reports in connection with alleged violations of the antitrust acts by any corporation.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that that proviso is a change in existing law. It is new legislation. It undertakes to impose new duties upon the administrative officers, none of which can be done on an appropriation bill in the guise of a limitation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with the exception of the power contained in section 5, which was placed in the Federal Trade Commission act by the Senate after it passed the House, the only power and authority that the Federal Trade Commission has under the act is derived from section 6.

Those powers are set forth under various subsections or subheads. For instance, first, subsection (a) gives to this commission the right to gather and compile information, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks and common carriers, subject to the act to regulate commerce, and its relation to other corporations, and to individuals, associations, and partnerships.

That gives to the Federal Trade Commission the authority to initiate investigations and may, of course, include economic and all other kinds of investigation if necessary to carry out the requirements of the act.

Subsection (b) provides for general or special orders, and so forth, relating to the investigations initiated by the trade commission.

Subsection (c) relates to any final decree which is entered against any defendant corporation in any suit of the United States to prevent violation of the antitrust act.

I call the Chair's particular attention to subsection (d):

upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress to investigate and report the facts relating to any alleged violation of the antitrust act by any corporation.

Then follows subsection (e)— providing for the application of the Attorney General to investigate and make recommendations for the readjustment of business.

Subsection (f) applies to making public the findings.

Subsection (g) is the authority to classify corporations and make certain rules and regulations, and subsection (h) to investigate from time to time trade conditions in and with foreign countries.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the power of this Federal Trade Commission and its authority is derived from those various subsections of section 6. There is no authority in that act giving either House of Congress nor the Congress as a whole the right to request the Federal Trade Commission to make any investigation save as to alleged violations of the antitrust act by any corporation. That is the only authority that Congress has under this act, and that authority is given to either House of Congress. What does this proviso seek to do? I read:

That no part of this sum shall be expended for investigations, including economic investigations, requested by either House of Congress except those requested by concurrent resolution of Congress—

Then there is the exception in the attempt to bring it within the express provisions of the act—

but this limitation shall not apply to investigations and reports in connection with alleged violations of the antitrust acts by a corporation.

In other words, under this limitation it is proposed to require the Federal Trade Commission when Congress passes a concurrent resolution to make other investigations, save those investigations that are specifically provided for in the act.

That is clearly changing the existing law. It is imposing an additional duty upon the members of the Federal Trade Commission, because as the law is written they are not required to observe a concurrent resolution on the part of Congress. Of course, we know, Mr. Chairman, that a concurrent resolution has not the force and effect of law. It is simply a resolution passed by the two Houses, and not signed by the President. If it were a joint resolution it would not be necessary to go into this bill, because this Congress has the right at any time, by actual law, either by act amendatory or by joint resolution signed by the President, to direct the Federal Trade Commission or any other commission of this Government to perform certain duties and services.

The Chair is an experienced parliamentarian and is very familiar with the rules and precedents. I shall not, therefore, take up the time of the Chair for the purpose of citing any number of precedents which could be cited to sustain the proposition I make, that a limitation on an appropriation bill can not impose new duties on administrative officers, or change existing law, resulting in new legislation. This matter was very fully discussed by Mr. Frederick C. Hicks on January 8, 1923, as appears on page 523 of the Manual and Digest. Mr. Hicks held that a limitation must not give affirmative directions, must not impose new duties, and must not be accompanied by language not properly limiting the appropriation; and he made a very exhaustive review of all of the precedents, covering several pages of the Manual and Digest, to sustain his holding.

There is another reason why this point of order is well taken. Under section 3984 of Hinds' Precedents it is held that where a proposition might be construed by the administrative officer as a modification of a statute, it may not be held as such a limitation on an appropriation as is permissible on a general appropriation bill.

I am going to cite the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] himself to show that, according to his view, and which was indorsed by the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, this limitation does restrict the Federal Trade Commission to an investigation solely of antitrust violations. The Chair very well knows that that was not the primary purpose of this act, because we have antitrust acts and have had them for a number of years. The primary purpose of this act was to enable the Federal Trade Commission to make investigations as to unfair practices and methods in competition for the protection of legitimate business, both large and small. This limitation plainly broadens the scope of the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, and I have no objection to that, because I am very earnestly in favor of this Federal Trade Commission and think that with the proper kind of a chairman at its head it could be made a very effective instrumentality in the protection of legitimate business. But I speak now of the purposes for which this limitation is placed in this bill and the object of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] in putting it into the bill, because he has not attempted to conceal his hostility to this Federal Trade Commission. In fact, he declared in the hearings that he felt it ought to be abolished. What does he say? Speaking of the limitation, he said, during the hearings on this pending bill:

Now, I do not think you have the right under that limitation to make any investigation unless it is one that involves a violation of the antitrust law.

That is the construction of the limitation by the gentleman from Indiana. It is true that Attorney General Sargent very properly held that it did not restrict the Federal Trade Commission. For the life of me I can not see how anybody except my distinguished and able friend from Indiana and possibly the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission can arrive at any other conclusion. But that is the conclusion of the gentleman from Indiana. Further, on page 557, he says this:

I will say here, without desiring to interrupt your statement, that I drew this limitation; and that I drew it with the fixed idea that the commission itself has no right to make any investigation unless there is some question of the violation of the antitrust law.

Now, if the gentleman from Indiana is correct in his conclusion, then, of course, it is subject to a point of order, because it plainly changes the law. In addition to that he said:

I do not think that that act is susceptible to any other construction.

Now, here we have this proposition, Mr. Chairman: The act itself gives to either House of Congress the right to request the Federal Trade Commission to investigate. What? Simply antitrust violations. There is not a syllable in this act which gives either House of Congress or Congress by concurrent resolution the right to require or request the Federal Trade Commission to investigate or make any other sort of investigation saving investigations of violations of the antitrust act. But under this limitation the Federal Trade Commission is directed, where a concurrent resolution is passed, to make all investigations, including economic investigations.

I say, therefore, that it certainly imposes new duties on the Federal Trade Commission. It is a change of existing law. It is new legislation. Therefore plainly, it seems to me, it is subject to a point of order, and not in order on an appropriation bill in the guise of a limitation.

In addition to that is the other objection I again call the attention of the Chair to, and that is that a limitation which may result in a ministerial officer understanding or receiving the idea that there is a modification of the statute is subject to a point of order.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, there is a change in this limitation from the limitation that has been upon this bill for a number of years by in the insertion of the words "including economic investigations," on line 22 of page 17. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] insists in his point of order that by the insertion of this word we are adding new duties to this commission. The very converse is true. Instead of adding new duties we are taking duties from this commission. They have been making economic investigations that are not warranted by the organic act and upon mere resolutions passed by the commission itself. In any event this is a limitation upon the expenditure of money. This is limiting the expenditure of this appropriation against economic investigations. We were endeavoring to show the other day during the general debate that this commission had gone far afield in making investigations that are not of violations of the antitrust law or of the laws of the United States. Those are the only things they can do. We are providing against economic investigations, because economic investigations are not violations of the interstate commerce act. The Supreme Court of the United States has held in the child labor act that production, while economic, is not interstate commerce.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. Is there anything in this act or any reference in this act to economic investigations? Yet the gentleman in this limitation places upon the Federal Trade Commission the duty of making economic investigations.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman is just as far wrong as he possibly can be. The hearings show that they have been making economic investigations, and we are prohibiting them from doing that again.

Mr. BYRNS. That may be true, but we are talking about the act, not what the Federal Trade Commission is doing.

Mr. WOOD. They have no power under the organic act to make economic investigations, but they have been doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman's position is that now the law does not admit of economic investigations.

Mr. WOOD. That is right, and they have been doing that thing. There have been four resolutions that were adopted by the commission last July, every one of which was economic, and without authority of law, in my opinion, either under the opinion of the United States Supreme Court or under the organic act, so that we are limiting the expenditure of public money by saying that they can no longer do this thing; that is, make economic investigations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. On this question it appears that the committee contend that under the law as it now stands the commission has not the power to make economic investigations. As the Chair understands the position of the committee, if Congress passed a concurrent resolution then the commission would have that power. If that be correct, this paragraph would be legislation extending beyond the authority now granted in the law, and the Chair will sustain the point of order; that is, the point of order on the proviso.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, line 13, I make a point of order to the following language:

Or renewal of existing contract, or otherwise.

I reserve a point of order on that particular language in order to ask a question of the gentleman from Indiana. I notice that in providing for contract stenographic service for the Federal Trade Commission, and also I believe for the Board of Tax Appeals, and also I believe the Interstate Commerce Commission, the paragraph provides not only for contracts for stenographic service, which, of course, the committee may do, and I understand that if contract service is provided for, it means competitive contract services, and that the contract would be let to the lowest bidder. Now, the committee has seen fit to go further than that and to permit a renewal of an existing contract or otherwise without competitive bidding. Now, it seems to me that authorizes the commission to renew the existing contract, even though the cost thereof would be more than to let it under competitive bids. I would like to have some information from the gentleman from Indiana as to that. Why should the committee recommend a provision of that kind?

Mr. WOOD. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Texas, they have let these contracts on competitive bids, time and time again, and the contracts have been abandoned and not carried out. That has been especially true with reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The clause to which the gentleman has called my attention has been inserted with reference to very nearly all of these activities. The clause is inserted for the purpose of effecting a saving rather than to cause the expenditure of money for the reason that these competitive contracts have not turned out to be satisfactory in every instance. Very frequently, in the midst of one of these hearings, the man who has had the competitive contract has defaulted, which made it necessary for the commission to go out and hire somebody at so much a page, and that has proven to be more expensive than to let the commission have discretion in making these contracts.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in view of the explanation of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: On page 17, line 20, after the word "fees," insert: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for investigations requested by either House of Congress except those requested by concurrent resolution of Congress, but this limitation shall not apply to investigations and reports in connection with alleged violations of the antitrust acts by any corporation."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the proposed amendment is a change of existing law, is new legislation, and imposes additional duties upon executive officers. I make the further point of order that under the precedent I cited a while ago it may be calculated to make executive officers believe or feel that it is intended as a modification of the statute.

It is the same proposition that was presented a while ago, except that the gentleman from Indiana has left out the words "including economic investigations," and that is included in the word "investigations," because, of course, the word "investigations" includes all kinds of investigations, economic and otherwise.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the amendment I have offered is a verbatim copy of the law as it now is and has been for the last three or four sessions of this Congress. It has been held against a point of order to be in order.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not understand that a point of order was ever made against this particular language. Will the Chair hear me just for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS. In addition to what I have just said with reference to investigations, this amendment seeks to make it the duty of the Federal Trade Commission to make investigations, which includes all kinds of investigations, economic or otherwise, upon a concurrent resolution by Congress, which, of course, has not the effect of law. The act itself only gives to either House of Congress the right to request investigations by the Federal Trade Commission of antitrust violations. This would make it the duty of the commission to act on a concurrent resolution by Congress upon any sort of an investigation, something the act does not contemplate. Therefore, it imposes new duties on executive officers and is clearly a change of existing law.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. I do not see how the gentleman comes to that conclusion at all. The proviso is:

That no part of this sum shall be expended for investigations.

That includes all investigations except those pertaining to antitrust laws. In the limitation that is placed upon the appropriation the committee has merely reported an exception to the limitation. It is not a direction to investigate upon a concurrent resolution of Congress, but it is a limitation upon the limitation, namely, that this proviso shall not apply to investigations requested by concurrent resolutions of Congress. There is no direction about it at all. It is merely a saving clause, so that this limitation would not apply to concurrent resolutions requesting investigations.

Mr. BYRNS. But if the gentleman will examine the statutes he will find there is no authority in the act giving to Congress the right to request or direct investigations by concurrent resolutions.

Mr. NEWTON. I do not dispute the gentleman in that fact at all.

Mr. BYRNS. Here is a proposition upon the part of the gentleman from Indiana by his amendment to make it the duty of the Federal Trade Commission to investigate whenever Congress by a concurrent resolution requests any sort of an investigation. That is clearly a change of law.

Mr. NEWTON. No; the gentleman is clearly wrong in that, as he will see if he will only read what is stated here:

That no part of this sum shall be expended for investigations requested by either House of Congress.

Mr. BYRNS. Read on. The gentleman is reading from the proviso which has been stricken out.

Mr. NEWTON. No; "the gentleman" is not. The "gentleman from Minnesota" is reading from the amendment which has just been submitted, and the purpose of the amendment is to except from the limitation any limitation upon the power of the commission to investigate when there has been a concurrent resolution of Congress requesting it. But it does not order the commission to do so; it does not authorize them to do so and it does not direct them to do so. It merely takes that out from the limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, if I heard it correctly read, is exactly the same limitation that was proposed in the bill as presented with the words "including economic investigations" eliminated. Is not that correct?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. That being so, the word "investigations," of course, includes economic investigations, and in accordance with the opinion of the Chair, just delivered, this is as much subject to a point of order as the original proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment submitted is in almost the identical language of the part that the Chair just held was out of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: Page 17, line 20, after the word "fees," insert: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for investigations, including economic investigations, requested by either House of Congress; but this limitation shall not apply to investigations and reports in connection with alleged violations of the antitrust acts by any corporation."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order. It is a change of existing law, and imposes new and additional duties upon executive or administrative officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, suppose this does change existing law. Under the Holman rule a limitation upon an expenditure of public money may change existing law and that may be the only excuse for it. If we would deny any appropriation whatever to this commission it would be a change of existing law, but it would also be a curtailment of the expenditure of public money. If my premise is right with reference to that proposition, it is equally right with reference to the limitation that we are proposing in this amendment. We are limiting the amount of money that may be expended and describing the character of investigation that may be made. This is a clear demonstration of the exception provided by the Holman rule.

We have some gentlemen here who have simply gone wild in expending public moneys for making investigations that were never contemplated under the organic act. This may be aside from the point of order, but it shows the reason this limitation should be imposed. We have wild-eyed dreamers in this Government of ours, and two of them, members of this commission from the State of Iowa, are asking that all corporations be licensed or that no corporation shall be permitted to do business unless it has a license. We may subscribe to that doctrine sometime, but I hope it is a long way in the future.

This is a limitation based upon that character of activity that seeks to develop the idealism that these gentlemen are exponents of, and it is for that reason this limitation is asked. As I said a moment ago, we have the right to wipe out the entire appropriation for this purpose in the bill. If we have the right to do that, we have the right to cut it in two or we have the right to restrict the manner in which it shall be expended.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been ruled on.

Mr. BYRNS. I understood the Chair to sustain the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

There can not be any question in the mind of any Member of the House that if Congress desires to do so it can refuse any appropriation whatsoever to the Federal Trade Commission.

The fact that there is a law providing for a commission or an activity of the Government does not impose any duty, or, rather, does not make it necessary for Congress to make an appropriation; and if the gentleman whose hostility to this Federal Trade Commission is so well recognized and was so well demonstrated in the hearings, and also in his speech of last week, and also here to-day by these repeated amendments, wishes to offer an amendment denying all appropriations to the Federal Trade Commission, of course, it would be entirely in order. It would then be up to a majority of the House to decide whether they want this great constructive statute to continue in existence, and have this commission carry out the purposes for which it was created, or whether they want to do away with it by indirection.

I do not know what the purpose of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is in offering so many amendments, but clearly it is not, and has not been, with any idea of friendship toward the Federal Trade Commission.

My own idea is that if the President—and, by the way, the gentleman refers to a couple of Members down there whom he states favor Federal licensing of corporations. I do not know anything about that. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe that corporations of this country ought to be required to have a Federal license; but be that as it may, it has nothing to do with the conduct of these gentlemen upon the Federal Trade Commission; and, as I started to say a moment ago, after reading these hearings, if the President of the United States wants to see the Federal Trade Commission function as it was intended to function, and as it did function under a Democratic administration and in friendly hands, he ought to request the resignation of the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, who did not hesitate to say in the hearings that he believed it ought to be limited and confined solely to antitrust investigations and of whom I think it can be fairly said that he either does not understand or is hostile to the purposes of the act, which was to protect legitimate business from unfair methods and unfair competition.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

As a member of the subcommittee that framed this bill I feel that after all the discussion that has been had here I would like to add my word in regard to it.

When this matter came up two or three years ago in the subcommittee, it was very well agreed that investigations requested of the Federal Trade Commission by one or the other branch of Congress were not advisable. It was thought that sometimes these resolutions were not well considered, yet they diverted the Federal Trade Commission from the work which it was doing under the authority of the organic act, taking them off on investigations requested by such resolution.

With this in mind, the amendment was agreed to, providing that investigations should only be conducted by the commission when requested by a concurrent resolution of Congress. The effectiveness of the limitation all hinged on the word "concurrent."

So the amendment was prepared for that purpose. This seems to be very well understood by the commission and by the Attorney General and by at least a part of the members of the subcommittee.

However, our honorable chairman entertains different views. I am sure we are all as anxious to save money for the Federal Treasury as he. But I believe the Federal Trade Commission was created as an instrumentality in behalf of the public and that is its real purpose. So I for one was surprised when I read the report on the bill as prepared by our chairman. Other members of the committee did not see the report until it was printed. This was regular procedure, but on a controversial matter as this was known to be, I was surprised to find this language:

The testimony given before the committee indicated that many of the investigations directed by the Federal Trade Commission had no relation to matters involved in interstate commerce, merely being economic investigations, and the attention of the Congress is called to this misdirected energy of the commission. The attention of the Comptroller General has also been called to these matters, and it is hoped that further expenditures of Federal funds for unlawful investigations may be prohibited.

It was not my understanding as one humble member of the committee that they were proceeding in violation of law and were unlawfully expending Federal funds.

I have not the honor to be an attorney, but it so happens that the majority of the commission, the Attorney General of the United States, and I believe the majority of the subcommittee agree with my position. We do not wish in any way to hamstring the Federal Trade Commission in any proper investigation under the organic act or under any concurrent resolution passed by Congress.

I presume that the Pittsburgh plus investigation would be justified because that case involved interstate commerce, but nevertheless the investigation of the case was an economic investigation, and if you shut out all economic investigations you would shut out such an investigation as the Pittsburgh plus, which Commissioner Van Fleet estimates is saving $30,000,000 annually to the users of iron and steel.

The Iron Trade Review of September 29, 1927, says:

CHEAPER STEEL IS ONE RESULT

Three years have now elapsed since the effective date of the Federal Trade Commission's order that sheets, wire, and pipe produced in the Chicago district were to be quoted on a Chicago and not a Pittsburgh plus basis. Inferentially, all steel products were to be similarly priced, but plates, shapes, and bars were already on a Chicago base.

Those who attacked the Pittsburgh-plus method have thus far been victorious. Their prime motive was cheaper steel, and they have obtained it. Sheets, wire, and pipe have uniformly been quoted at a $2 differential over Pittsburgh, where previously the spread was $6.80. From the strictly economic standpoint, no method of pricing can be put to the full test in so short a period as three years.

It is significant that the three products specifically mentioned in the Trade Commission's order have adhered more closely to the arbitrary $2 Chicago differential than plates, shapes, and bars. Within the past few weeks the influence of Pittsburgh has been sufficient to reduce these products $2 a ton; while $2, Chicago, was inherently strong, it could not withstand the competition of $1.80, Pittsburgh, and less.

As with the eight-hour day in the mills, what is roundly scored to-day as revolutionary is the accepted practice of to-morrow. The current method of quoting has become commonplace, and there is no agitation for revision from either producers or consumers.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I will.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman agrees that these investigations made at the instance of one branch of Congress, many of which have cost a great deal of money, ought to be curtailed?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That was the purpose of the limitation. We are all agreed on that except as they pertain to violations of antitrust act, and it now seems possible that by making some reference to the antitrust act, a resolution passed by either branch of Congress could evade the limitation. So, after all, our limitation did not prove effective if resolutions were adroitly drawn.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. For one, I can not allow the appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission to go by in a perfunctory way without expressing my position on the Federal Trade Commission. I have done it on the floor before, but I do not want to vote for the appropriation and have it appear that as far as I am concerned I approve of the Federal Trade Commission, because I do not.

The whole conception of the Federal Trade Commission was an attack on business. It was formed on the presumption that anybody who did business in the form of a corporation was a detriment to the welfare of the people. That is about the foundation of the Federal Trade Commission.

The original act was framed for that purpose alone. The activities of the commission have been attacked on the floor ever since the organization first started and they deserved to be, and I hope for one that the day is not far distant when some one will come forward with a proposition for its abandonment.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Is it not a fact that the Federal Trade Commission was the legitimate successor of a commission established as far back as 1890, and that was succeeded by another, and this did not begin in 1913, as far as the principle involved is concerned?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the Federal Trade Commission began at the beginning of the Wilson administration and was one of the attacks by the Democratic Party on the methods of doing business in this country. It has not resulted in benefiting business, as on paper it was supposed to do, but it has taken the attitude from the start that anybody doing business in the form of a corporation was a breaker of the law to begin with. That may be exaggeration, and, of course, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will deny its accuracy, because he is the defender of this particular favorite board of former President Wilson.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Federal Trade Commission bill as originally introduced in this House did not carry any administrative powers. It followed in the footsteps and was possessed of the power of the Bureau of Corporations, which was set up in the Department of Commerce and Labor under President Roosevelt in 1903.

The very inquiries that are the object of the ire of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] are similar inquiries to those prosecuted by the Bureau of Corporations. The Bureau of Corporations was the right arm of President Roosevelt in his fight against monopoly, and so when the gentleman says that the Federal Trade Commission as it is at present constituted is a Democratic child, while there is no need for us to deny or to disavow paternity, I call the gentleman's attention to the history of its predecessor.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have not the details at hand and, of course, it is useless to talk on this subject at all. This is an appropriation bill merely and the appropriation is going through, but if the Bureau of Corporations was of such great value to the administration of President Roosevelt and others why was it not left alone? If then it was good, why did we not keep it as it was, instead of spreading it out and giving these added powers to the Federal Trade Commission, now exercised, I repeat, to the detriment of the well-being of business in this country?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer the gentleman, if he will yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I shall be very glad to have the gentleman answer the question and I shall yield the floor to the gentleman for that purpose, because he knows my ideas of the merits of the Federal Trade Commission. The gentleman is a friend of the commission, and all I have to say in conclusion is that I hope the day is not far distant when this House will follow the example set by the Democrats in stopping appropriations for the former Tariff Commission, which also was of great benefit to other administrations. I hope the time is not far distant when some one will have the nerve to stand on this floor and stop appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission and thereby save a million dollars to the taxpayers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to enlighten my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] with reference to the reasons which influenced the establishment of the Federal Trade Commission. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] is clearly correct in his statement as to the history of the legislation. It carries those powers and duties which were vested in the Bureau of Corporations, but that bureau was a subordinate bureau. Congress established the Federal Trade Commission as an independent establishment of this Government, directly under the President of the United States.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will yield, I will ask the question of him.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Has not the Federal Trade Commission been so independent that all of its life it has been attacked as overstepping and overriding its authority under the law? That is one question, and the other question is, has it not been a detriment to business from its very inception?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I shall answer the question by citing the gentleman one specific case.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, one!

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I can cite a dozen, but I call his attention to the Pittsburgh-plus case. The testimony before the committee was that in one year it had saved $30,000,000 to consumers of the Middle West and the West. I grant there is a certain philosophy of government in this country that would say that they overstepped their bounds when they rendered that opinion in 1924, but there are some of us who think that the Pittsburgh market and the seller of the steel throughout the country should not have the arbitrary right to compel the consumer to pay the Pittsburgh price plus the freight from Pittsburgh when the commodity is shipped from the point of sale.

I took the floor, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of presenting the history of the Federal Trade Commission, particularly in connection with the limitation which has been under discussion, and its power to initiate inquiries; and in that connection I ask that I may extend my remarks, including therein statements relative to each inquiry which it has instituted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The amendment which has been stricken out on a point of order sought to limit the functions of the Federal Trade Commission. This proviso stricken from the bill reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for investigations, including economic investigations, requested by either House of Congress except those requested by concurrent resolution of Congress, but this resolution shall not apply to investigations and reports of alleged violations of the antitrust acts by any corporation.

I respectfully submit to the House that this limitation upon the appropriation of this activity serves no purpose. It was placed in the appropriation bill approved March 3, 1925, by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], chairman of our subcommittee, for the purpose of preventing any investigation that might have been requested of the commission by either body of Congress. This it fails to do, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] to the contrary notwithstanding. The limitation did not have the legal significance that represented his purpose. The limitation, on its face as originally drawn and as now presented, applies only to investigations requested by either House of Congress. Not only is this apparent in its context, but it has been so declared by the Comptroller General, passing upon the direct question involved, July 19, 1925, in which certain Senate resolutions were involved.

The opinion of the Comptroller General upon this subject specifically states that the language of the resolution—

but this limitation shall not apply to investigations and reports in connection with alleged violations of the antitrust acts by any corporation—

has the effect of leaving undisturbed section 6 (d) of the act creating the Federal Trade Commission.

There is further authority that the proviso does not have the power intended, and such authority is no less than the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, the Hon. John G. Sargent, in a letter to the President, dated October 24, 1925—pages 541 to 546, hearings before our committee—in which there is a very elaborate dissertation relative to the powers and legislative purpose of this activity. And even though this splendid agency proceeds under the distinguished authority above quoted, we are permitted to see the ire of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], as evidenced in the hearings before the committee.

At this point, in order that the discussion may be considered logical, we will consider section 5 and section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission act. These sections read as follows:

(SEC. 5.) Power to prohibit: The commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations, except banks and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

We quote subsections a, b, c, d, and e, section 6, Federal Trade Commission act:

Additional powers of commission: The commission shall also have power—

Investigation of corporations: (a) To gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks and common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, and its relations to other corporations and partnerships.

Reports by corporations: (b) To require, by general or special orders, corporations engaged in commerce, excepting banks, and common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, or any class of them, or any of them, respectively, to file with the commission in such form as the commission may prescribe annual or special, or both annual and special, reports or answers in writing to specific questions, furnishing to the commission such information as it may require as to the organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations, partnerships, and individuals of the respective corporations filing such reports or answers in writing. Such reports and answers shall be made under oath, or otherwise, as the commission may prescribe, and shall be filed with the commission within such reasonable period as the commission may prescribe, unless additional time be granted in any case by the commission.

Investigation of compliance with antitrust decrees: (c) Whenever a final decree has been entered against any defendent corporation in any suit brought by the United States to prevent and restrain any violation of the antitrust acts, to make investigation, upon its own initiative, of the manner in which the decree has been or is being carried out, and upon the application of the Attorney General it shall be its duty to make such investigation. It shall transmit to the Attorney General a report embodying its findings and recommendations as a result of any such investigation, and the report shall be made public in the discretion of the commission.

Investigations of violations of antitrust statutes: (d) Upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress to investigate and report the facts relating to any alleged violation of the antitrust acts by any corporation.

Readjustment of business of corporations violating antitrust statutes: (e) Upon the application of the Attorney General to investigate and make recommendations for the readjustment of the business of any corporation alleged to be violating the antitrust acts in order that the corporation may thereafter maintain its organization, management, and conduct of business in accordance with law.

We assert that under section 5 and subsection A of section 6 of the creative act unquestioned authority is found for the initiating of inquiries by the commission, but we have the history of the legislation to substantiate our conclusion that such power is contained in the statutes referred to. In the debates throughout the years I find that this commission is often referred to as a child of the Democratic Party. If it were so, there is no cause to deny its paternity. This statement, placing a Democratic brand upon it, can be made for no other purpose than to arouse a spirit of partisanship where this question is raised. The creative act was approved September 26, 1914, as a part of a program to protect people against monopolies.

However, it was not, as originally proposed, a novel machine. It had as its ancestor the Bureau of Corporations of the Department of Commerce and Labor. This bureau was established in 1903 under the administration of Theodore Roosevelt, and it had played a most prominent part in the work of that great man in his fight to throttle monopolistic combinations of his day.

The original House bill organizing the Federal Trade Commission was merely continuing this Bureau of Corporations in a somewhat broader aspect, but when it came up in the Senate the grant of administrative authority to the commission to prevent unfair methods of competition by an order to cease and desist, after due inquiry and hearings of the party. Without these inquiries the commission would be helpless.

Complaint is made of the commission investigating in the realm of industry, yet I find under Roosevelt the parent of this commission, the Bureau of Corporations, investigated the petroleum industry, which work contributed largely to the dissolution of the Standard Oil Trust. Inquiries were made into the Tobacco Trust, the Harvester Trust, and the Steel Corporation. I submit the inquiries pursued by the Bureau of Corporations and likewise the inquiries made pursuant to a congressional resolution, and yet our good friends on the other side of the aisle would endeavor to make it appear that these inquiries, contended by them to be of a disturbing nature, is of Democratic origin.

At this point I will insert the investigations pursued by the Bureau of Corporations under the act creating that bureau, out of which act grew section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission act:

INVESTIGATIONS BY THE BUREAU OF CORPORATIONS, THE PREDECESSOR OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, UNDER THE ACT CREATING THAT BUREAU, OUT OF WHICH ACT GREW SECTION 6 OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Inquiries by commissioner of corporations: Under said act of Congress the commissioner of corporations made a total of 21 economic investigations, 10 on his own initiative (or pursuant to the direction of the Secretary of Commerce) and 11 pursuant to congressional resolutions, as follows:

To show conclusively the fact that such inquiries were to be undertaken by the commission, we quote excerpts from committee and conference reports concerning the power of the committee under section 6, subsections a, b, and f:

[H. Rept. No. 533, 63d Cong., 2d sess., to accompany H. R. 15613]

Therefore the bill removes entirely from the control of the President and the Secretary of Commerce the investigations conducted and the information acquired by the commission under the authority heretofore exercised by the Bureau of Corporations or the Commissioner of Corporations. All such investigations may hereafter be made upon the initiative of the commission, and the information obtained may be made public entirely at the discretion of the commission. (P. 3.)

* * * * * * *

There has been no attempt to deal with the question of maintenance of fixed prices. The commission has been given no power to pass orders in any way regulating production. It has not been clothed with authority to make a declaration as to the innocuousness of any particular corporation or agreement, even if coupled with the right to revoke such order in the future. All those problems are interwoven with the industrial business of the country in such a way as to be effectively legislated upon, if at all, only after the most exhaustive investigation by trained experts.

* * * * * * *

It must be remembered that this commission enters a new field of governmental activity. The history of the Interstate Commerce Commission is conclusive evidence that the best legislation regarding many of the problems to come before the interstate-trade commission will be produced from time to time as the result of the reports of the commission after exhaustive inquiries and investigations. * * * It is largely the experience of the independent commission itself that will afford Congress the accurate information necessary to give to the country from time to time the additional legislation which may be needed.

* * * * * * *

Those facts which ought to be the common property and the common knowledge of American business men are for the first time to be gathered and controlled as to their publicity by an independent commission. Powers of investigation, safeguarded by proper constitutional limitations, are taken from a now subordinate department under the control of the Executive and given to this nonpartisan body. (Pp. 7–8.)

[S. Rept. No. 597, 63d Cong., 2d sess., to accompany H. R. 15613 (pp. 11–12)]

The commission has power to investigate the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation subject to the act which it may designate and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships, and in aid thereof to require the production of information, statements, and records and the examination of books, documents, correspondence, contracts, etc., affecting the commerce in which such corporation is engaged, and to require annual or special reports from such corporations or classes of corporations as the commission may designate. The commission may make public any information obtained by it except as to trade processes, names of customers, and other matters not deemed to be of public importance, and may also make annual and special reports to Congress, including recommendations for additional legislation.

It will be seen that while large powers of investigation are given, they are not greatly in excess of those possessed and for years exercised by the Bureau of Corporations. * * * The powers, of course, must be large, but the exercise of the powers will not be against law-abiding business but against lawless business. It will be persuasive and corrective rather than punitive, so far as well-intentioned business is concerned. Although the commission is given a wide discretion, experience has proved that governmental administrative bodies seldom abuse such authority. To attempt to make precise limits between what they may and what they may not do would often seriously hamper their successful administration. To almost every inquiry it might be possible to make specious objections, which, while lacking any real merit, might effectively clog the conduct of the inquiry.

As indicative of the proper construction of power by the commission, since its creation it has initiated some 36 inquiries on its own motion, only 9 of which have occurred since the year 1921, including the 4 inquiries which were initiated in 1927.

In the debate on this item during the consideration of this bill January 20, 1928, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] stated his real position in this colloquy:

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. As I understand, the gentleman is objecting to the commission instituting inquiries on their own motion?

Mr. WOOD. No; I am not.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I mean economic inquiries?

Mr. WOOD. I am objecting to instituting anything on their own motion unless they have a prima facie case that it is a violation of the antitrust law.

That statement paints the true picture of the view of the gentleman from Indiana; but, according to other statements that he has made on the floor of the House, on another day I respectfully submit that his current view is not that which he held on April 1, 1924 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 65, p. 5341), when this statement was made by him in the discussion of the limitation that was endeavoring to restrict the work of the commission. Upon that occasion he said:

Under the act creating the Federal Trade Commission it has the duty of making investigations upon its own motion whenever it finds there are practices that are not warranted by legitimate trade. Now, that is the primary function of the Federal Trade Commission. In addition to that, it shall, upon the request of either House of Congress or the President of the United States or Attorney General of the United States, make investigations where it is patent or believed that the antitrust laws have been violated. And yet many of the resolutions that have put the Federal Trade Commission into action and have involved the expenditure of thousands of dollars had nothing to do with the violation of any antitrust law.

What stronger answer is needed than his own language? We quote again:

Under the act creating the Federal Trade Commission it has the duty of making investigations upon its own motion whenever it finds there are practices that are not warranted by legitimate trade. Now that is the primary function of the Federal Trade Commission.

No doubt, on that occasion, his mind was clear in respect of the language of section 5 and subsection a of section 6. He was closer to the day when the Bureau of Corporations performed the function which he designates to be—the primary function of the Federal Trade Commission.

That was their primary function; that is their primary function, and whenever that power is restricted, then its powers of which monopoly is afraid will wither and die.

The learned gentleman from Indiana, upon another occasion, in debate on this floor, January 29, 1925 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 66, p. 2657), when the limitation carried in that bill, the subject matter of discussion in the Comptroller General's opinion and in the Attorney General's opinion, and substantially the same limitation which was included in the bill as reported to the House in the effort to secure support for this limitation after complaining of the abuse of power by one body of the Congress, said—investigations of this character frequently require the expenditure of considerable sums granted for the regularly prescribed work of the commission—

The gentleman from Indiana further said:

There is nothing in this restriction that would prevent the Trade Commission from complying with all the original provisions of the act.

In every instance, until to-day, the gentleman from Indiana has recognized the statutory powers of the commission. Now, he shows his true purpose, and that is to cut off the power of the commission in an amendment carried in the proviso supplemented by language carried in the report.

Referring to the language, and I will include herein the paragraph of the report complete:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Appropriations aggregating $963,000 are recommended for the Federal Trade Commission for the fiscal year 1929. A limitation has been carried upon the appropriation for salaries and general expenses of the commission, and attention is called to the fact that under this limitation no investigation that does not relate to alleged violations of the antitrust acts may be undertaken upon the request of either House of Congress unless directed by concurrent resolution. This limitation has been amended to include economic investigations. It was developed during the hearings that the Federal Trade Commission has been engaged in economic investigations, not a few of which were undertaken upon the motion of the commission. The act creating the Federal Trade Commission specifically sets forth the powers and duties of the commission, and it may upon its own motion undertake investigations relating to the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, and to gather and compile information and investigate any corporation engaged in commerce. The testimony given before the committee indicated that many of the investigations directed by the Federal Trade Commission had no relation to matters involved in interstate commerce, merely being economic investigations, and the attention of the Congress is called to this misdirected energy of the commission. The attention of the Comptroller General has also been called to these matters, and it is hoped that further expenditures of Federal funds for unlawful investigations may be prohibited.

The language of the present limitation, while including these words—"including economic investigations"—adds to and takes from the limitation which was construed by the Comptroller General and Attorney General not a whit, because undoubtedly the word "investigations" that is first observed in the proviso is inclusive of economic investigations.

We respectfully submit that the act creating the Federal control commission, a part of which we have set forth herein, is statutory authority for the inquiries complained of. This authority is not affected by the limitation on the appropriation bill. I do not subscribe to this language in the report:

The testimony given before the committee indicated that many of the investigations directed by the Federal Trade Commission had no relation to matters involved in interstate commerce, merely being economic investigations, and the attention of the Congress is called to this misdirected energy of the commission.

The following language is quoted from the report:

The attention of the Comptroller General has also been called to these matters, and it is hoped that further expenditures of Federal funds for unlawful investigations may be prohibited.

It may be that some one has performed the functions referred to in the quotation, but there was no affirmative action in the subcommittee or the whole committee with reference to this matter. Of course, no one would justify the expenditure of Federal funds for unlawful investigations. It should be stated that the investigations of the commission have been in accordance with law and, because some do not agree with the law as presented to the commission, it should not be stated, even inferentially, that their work had been in violation of law.

So I submit that under the organic law the commission has the power of initiating the inquiries; that under the authority of the Comptroller General and the Attorney General the limitation serves no real purpose.

The action of my friend from Indiana apparently is based upon the ire which certain inquiries, initiated in the summer of 1927, occasioned. These inquiries are four in number, to wit: First, resale-price-maintenance inquiry; second, price-bases inquiry; third, the du Pont inquiry; and fourth, the blue-sky-securities inquiry. I would discuss these inquiries, together with the authority for their making.

RESALE-PRICE-MAINTENANCE INQUIRY

The commission has many cases of this character coming before it. I do not agree with the attitude of at least one member of the commission relative to this inquiry as well as the results that might be obtained. This inquiry has to do with the conditions which obtain surrounding contracts for the resale price of commodities, and it is the purpose to determine its status in the various jurisdictions so that the commission may be better equipped to handle the case coming before it, and that Congress might have information upon which it could act if legislation was thought desirable.

So we are not inclined to agree with the desirability of legislation in this particular field. Under section 5 and under subsection a of section 6 of the creative act the commission had ample authority for its initiation.

PRICE-BASES INQUIRY

We are in hearty accord with this inquiry, both as to power to do it and its purpose. In 1924 the commission decided a case which is commonly called the Pittsburgh-plus case, which prevented a distributor from Chicago, for illustration, selling steel to the consumer at the mill price in Pittsburgh plus the freight from Pittsburgh.

In the hearings before the committee last year Mr. Van Fleet stated that more than $30,000,000 annually had been saved the consumers by this one case, and it was testified that if the Federal reserve bank in Chicago had been constructed subsequent to this ruling, there would have been a saving of $60,000 as a result thereof.

I am in hearty accord with the work of the commission in compelling the Bethlehem Steel Corporation to desist from observing the Pittsburgh-plus method in selling its steel; which was of material benefit to the consuming public. I think that the country will be well served by the inquiry into the freight-basing methods now in use. In my judgment, it will mean much to the consumers of the country.

The Pittsburgh-plus method may be designated as the basing-point method.

The factory-base method is the price f. o. b. factory, plus the freight from factory to locality of the purchaser.

The delivered-price method is one in which the seller delivers its products to customers in any part of the country without basing the price on the cost of transportation. This can only be done by making the customer close by pay a portion of the freight that it costs to deliver it to the distant customer. The adoption of this last-mentioned method by certain Eastern manufacturers has caused considerable apprehension in the West and South. It is regarded as a part of an effort to centralize all manufacturing in the so-called industrial States.

In May of last year a complaint was issued by the commission against certain manufacturers of range boilers, charging them with concurrently establishing and maintaining a delivered price policy with intent and purpose to destroy local producers and competitors in the Pacific-coast market. Upon this point, Mr. Myers, commissioner, says:

It is plain that the commission should not undertake to act with respect to the sales policy of any concern or industry without full knowledge of the prevalence and economic effect of the practice in question, having regard to the situation and necessities of all parties who might be affected by such action.

In our judgment, authority for this inquiry may be found in section 5 and subsection a of section 6 of the creative act, supra.

THE DU PONT INQUIRY

Published reports of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co. showed that in addition to its known holdings in the General Motors Co. it had acquired a large investment in the stock of the United States Steel Corporation.

This announcement gave rise to much agitation in the newspapers and elsewhere as to the purpose and effect of such acquisition, the suggestion being frequently made that it was in itself, or would result in, a violation of the antitrust laws.

We insert the resolution itself for your consideration:

Whereas it appears from published financial reports of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co. that it has a large investment in the stock of the General Motors Corporation; and

Whereas it is currently reported in the press that the said du Pont Co. has recently acquired a large holding in the capital stock of the United States Steel Corporation, that it expects to have a number of directors representing its interests elected to the board of the latter company and in other ways to develop close corporate connection among them; and

Whereas the establishment of a community of interest among these three corporations, which are reputed to be among the largest industrial corporations in this country, is a matter of public concern; and

Whereas the act creating this commission authorizes it to inquire into the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of the said corporations: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the chief economist of this commission be directed to cause an inquiry to be made into the relationships, direct or indirect, among the United States Steel Corporation, the General Motors Corporation, and the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co., tending to bring them or any other important industrial corporations under a common ownership, control, or management, with information as to the probable economic consequences of such community of interest, and to report to this commission.

In the hearings the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] was disturbed with reference to this inquiry, basing his objections, in part, to the detrimental effect it had upon the market value of the stock of these corporations. The chairman of the subcommittee and Commissioner Myers were at a variance as to the effect it had upon the market, and particularly the stocks involved, and in order to determine the matter to the satisfaction of ourselves and Members of the House I have caused to have inserted table showing these market values. There was an upward trend in the market and, seemingly, this inquiry had no effect upon it. The values continued to mount. We insist that section a of subsection 6 is ample authority for this investigation.

BLUE-SKY-SECURITIES INQUIRY

It seems that some years ago there was an attempt to bring down and correlate all of the legislation upon this particular subject, and it is in an unfinished state; and this merely brings the matter down to date. The violation of blue sky law oftimes involves interstate commerce, and I am of the opinion that they were within their statutory powers in doing this work.

Authority for this inquiry is contained in subsection a of section 6, as well as in the general power that it would have to facilitate and expedite proper decision in cases involving complaints in this sphere.

The gentleman from Indiana throughout the hearings and on the floor has been insistent that money has been wasted in these inquiries prosecuted upon the motion of the commission. We insert herewith a list of such inquiries:

MOTION OF THE COMMISSION

This list comprises only inquiries initiated by the commission and does not include those inherited from the Bureau of Corporations, nor does it indicate any of the very numerous inquiries into cost, prices, and profits made during the war under general orders from the President; but does include those subjects of wartime inquiry which, under special order of the commission, after the war were made a subject of further study and on which printed reports were issued.

These inquiries, with the dates of initiation, were as follows:

Since its organization, under subsection d, of section 6, the House has exercised its power under the statute to have investigations made by the commission in eight instances which we set forth herein, together with a short explanatory statement thereof:

INVESTIGATIONS BY THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION SINCE ITS ORGANIZATION IN 1915, AS CONDUCTED AT THE DIRECTION OF (A) HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, (B) SENATE, (C) THE PRESIDENT, (D) THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, AND (E) MOTION OF THE COMMISSION

(A) HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

(1) Bituminous coal: House Resolution No. 352, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

An investigation of the alleged depressed condition of the bituminous coal industry. The report suggested various measures for insuring a more adequate supply of bituminous coal at reasonable prices.

(2) Cotton yarn: House Resolution No. 451, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.

An investigation of the very high prices of combed cotton yarn, and the inquiry disclosed that there had been an extraordinary advance in prices, and that the profits in the industry had been extraordinarily large for several years.

(3) Petroleum prices: House Resolution No. 501, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.

An inquiry into high prices of petroleum products. The report pointed out that the standard companies practically made the prices in their several marketing territories and avoided competition among themselves. Various constructive proposals to conserve the oil supply were made by the commission.

(4) Sugar supply: House Resolution No. 150, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.

The extraordinary advance in the price of sugar in 1919 led to this inquiry, and the price advance was found to be due chiefly to speculation and hoarding in sugar. Recommendations were made for legislative action to cure these abuses.

(5) Shoe costs and prices: House Resolution No. 217, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.

The high prices of shoes after the war led to this inquiry, and the investigation attributed such high prices chiefly to supply and demand conditions. The economic waste, due to the excessive variety of styles and rapid changes therein, was emphasized.

(6) Tobacco prices: House Resolution No. 533, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.

An inquiry into the prices of leaf tobacco and the selling prices of tobacco products. The unfavorable relationship between them was reported to be due in part to the purchasing methods of the large tobacco companies. As a result of this inquiry, the commission recommended that the decree dissolving the old Tobacco Trust should be amended and alleged violations of the existing decree prosecuted. Better systems of grading tobacco were also recommended by the commission.

(7) Radio industry: House Resolution No. 548, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.

The patents in the radio industry which the commission was called upon to investigate by this resolution were found to be controlled by a combination of a few great companies, as also commercial communications by radio. The commission, since issuing the report, has instituted proceedings against these companies. The facts in the report were stated at the time to be of vital importance in considering what legislation should be provided for to regulate the radio industry.

(8) Cottonseed industry: House Resolution No. 439, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session.

This resolution directed the commission to make inquiry and report if there is a combination, agreement, or association to fix prices for cottonseed. This report is now in the course of preparation.

Since the creation of the commission the Senate has called upon this agency in 34 instances, list of which is insterted herein, together with a short statement relative thereto:

(B) SENATE

(1) Fertilizer: Senate Resolution No. 487, Sixty-second Congress, third session.

This industry disclosed the extensive use of bogus independent fertilizer companies used for purposes of competition, but through conferences with the principal manufacturers agreements were reached for the abolition of such unfair competition.

(2) Petroleum pipe lines: Senate Resolution No. 109, Sixty-third Congress, first session.

This report showed the dominating importance of the pipe lines in the great mid-continent oil fields and that the pipeline companies which were controlled by a few large oil companies not only charged excessive high rates for transporting petroleum but also evaded their duties as common carriers by insisting on unreasonably large shipments, to the detriment of the numerous small producers.

(3) Gasoline: Senate Resolution No. 457, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

This report was on the subject of gasoline prices in 1915, which disclosed the high prices of petroleum products and showed how the various Standard Oil companies had continued to maintain a division of marketing territory among themselves. The commission suggested various plans for restoring effective competition in the oil industry.

(4) Sisal hemp: Senate Resolution No. 170, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

In response to a resolution calling on the commission to assist the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry by advising how certain quantities of hemp promised by the Mexican Sisal Trust might be fairly distributed among American manufacturers of binder twine, the commission made an inquiry and submitted a plan of distribution, which was followed.

(5) Anthracite coal: Senate Resolution No. 217, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

The rapid advance in the prices of anthracite at the mines, compared with costs, and the extortionate overcharging of anthracite jobbers and dealers were disclosed in this inquiry, and a system of current reports called for regarding selling prices, which substantially checked further exploitation of the consumer.

(6) Newsprint paper: Senate Resolution No. 177, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

This inquiry resulted from an unexpected advance in prices. The report showed that these prices were very profitable and that they had been partly the result of certain newsprint association activities which were in restraint of trade. The Department of Justice instituted proceedings, in consequence of which the association was abolished and certain newsprint manufacturers indicted.

(7) Book paper: Senate Resolution No. 269, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

This inquiry, following shortly after the newsprint inquiry, had a similar origin and disclosed similar restraints of trade, resulting in proceedings by the commission against the manufacturers involved to prevent the enhancement of prices. The commission also recommended legislative action to repress restraints of trade by such associations.

(8) Flags: Senate Resolution No. 35, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session.

A sudden increase in the price of American flags led to this inquiry, which disclosed that while a trade association had been active to fix prices shortly before, the price advance had been so great on account of the war demand that further price fixing had been superfluous.

(9) Meat packing profit limitations: Senate Resolution No. 177, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.

This inquiry had as its object the study of the system of war-time control established by the Food Administration. Changes were recommended by the commission, including more complete control of the business and lower maximum profits.

(10) Farm implements: Senate Resolution No. 223, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session.

The high prices of farm implements led to this inquiry, which disclosed that there were numerous trade combinations to advance prices, and that the consent decree for the dissolution of the International Harvester Co. was absurdly inadequate. The commission recommended a revision of the decree and the Department of Justice proceeded against the company to that end.

(11) Milk industry: Senate Resolution No. 431, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session.

This inquiry was into the fairness of milk prices to producers and of canned milk to consumers, and whether they were affected by fraudulent or discriminatory practices. The report showed marked concentration of control and questionable practices in the buying and handling of cream by butter manufacturers, many of which have since been recognized as unfair by the trade itself.

(12) Pacific coast petroleum: Senate Resolution No. 138, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.

On the Pacific coast the great increase in the prices of gasoline, fuel oil, and other petroleum products led to this inquiry, which disclosed that several of the companies were fixing prices.

(13) Commercial feeds. Senate Resolution No. 140, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.

The inquiry into commercial feeds, which aimed to discover whether there were any combinations or restraints of trade in this business, was diligently pursued, and though it disclosed some association activities in restraint of trade it found no important violations of the antitrust laws. Certain minor abuses in the trade were eliminated.

(14) Southern livestock prices: Senate Resolution No. 133, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session.

The low prices of southern livestock, which gave rise to the belief that discrimination was being practiced, were investigated, but the alleged discrimination did not appear to exist.

(15) Tobacco prices: Senate Resolution No. 129, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session.

This inquiry was directed to the low prices of leaf tobacco and the high prices of tobacco products. It disclosed that in the sale of tobacco several of the largest companies were engaged in numerous conspiracies with their customers—the jobbers—to enhance the selling prices of tobacco. Proceedings against these unlawful acts were instituted by the commission.

(16) Export grain: Senate Resolution No. 133, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

The low prices of export wheat gave rise to this inquiry, which developed extensive and harmful speculative manipulation of prices on the grain exchanges and conspiracies among country grain buyers to agree on maximum prices for grain purchased. Legislation for a stricter supervision of grain exchanges was recommended, together with certain changes in their rules. The commission also recommended governmental action, looking to additional storage facilities for grain not controlled by grain dealers.

(17) House furnishings: Senate Resolution No. 127, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

The alleged failure of house-furnishing goods to decline in price since 1920 as much as most other commodities alleged to be due to restraint of trade was inquired into by the commission and two reports were issued. The first dealt with wooden household furniture and the second with household stoves. These reports showed that extensive conspiracy existed under the form of cost-accounting devices and meetings to inflate the prices of such goods.

(18) Flour milling: Senate Resolution No. 212, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

The report covered the cost of production of wheat flour and the profits of the flour-milling companies in recent years. It also discussed the disadvantages to the miller and consumer arising from an excessive and confusing variety in the sizes of flour packages.

(19) Cotton trade: Senate Resolution No. 262, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

Further discussion in the decline in cotton prices.

(20) Fertilizer industry: Senate Resolution No. 307, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

This inquiry developed that active competition generally prevailed in the industry in this country, though in foreign countries combinations controlled some of the most important raw materials. The commission recommended constructive legislation to improve agricultural credits and more extended cooperative action in the purchase of fertilizer by farmers.

(21) Foreign ownership in petroleum industry: Senate Resolution No. 311, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

The acquisition of extensive oil interests in this country by the Dutch-Shell concern, an international trust, and discrimination practiced against Americans in foreign countries provoked this inquiry, which developed the situation in a manner to promote greater reciprocity on the part of foreign governments.

(22) Cotton trade: Senate Resolution No. 429, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.

This report recommended that Congress enact legislation providing for some form of southern warehouse delivery on New York contracts, and as a part of such a delivery system the adoption of a future contract which would require that not more than three adjacent or contiguous grades should be delivered on any single contract.

(23) National wealth, debt, and income: Senate Resolution No. 451, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.

This inquiry was specially directed not only to national wealth, debt, and income, but for investigation of the problem of tax exemption and the increase in Federal and State taxes in recent years. Among other things, the report comprises an elaborate estimate of the amount and ownership of tax-exempt securities by different classes of corporations and persons.

(24) Calcium arsenate: Senate Resolution No. 417, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session.

The high prices of calcium arsenate, a poison used to destroy the cotton-boll weevil, led to this inquiry, from which it appeared that the cost was due to the sudden increase in demand rather than to any restraints of trade.

(25) Bread industry: Senate Resolution No. 163, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session.

This inquiry was into the production, distribution, transportation, and sale of flour and bread; to ascertain costs, profits, and prices at each stage of the process of production and distribution from the time the wheat leaves the farm until the broad is delivered to the consumer. Also to inquire into the development in the direction of monopoly and concentration of control in the milling and baking industries, together with evidence indicating violations of the antitrust laws.

(26) Cotton merchandising practices: Senate Resolution No. 252, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session.

Certain objectionable practices prevailed among cotton factors or shippers, a concrete illustration of which would be the delivery of consigned cotton by a factor or owner on his future contract where the consignees had not given permission to use it in that manner.

(27) Packers' consent decree: Senate Resolution No. 278, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session.

The commission was directed to submit all available information on the history and existing status of the consent decree entered February 27, 1920, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against the five principal meat-packing companies which had been charged with forming a combination in violation of the antitrust laws. The commission was also directed to submit an opinion on the effects to be expected if the decree were enforced, or modified, or annulled, together with the recommendations of the public policies involved.

(28) Empire Cotton Growing Corporation: Senate Resolution No. 317, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session.

The commission was directed to report regarding the development, methods, and activities of the Empire Cotton Growing Corporation, and as to the probable effect upon American cotton growers of the action of the British Government, as outlined in article 6 of an ultimatum to Egypt with respect to the increase of the area to be irrigated in certain portions of Egypt for the growing of cotton. The report concluded that if the Egyptian district in question were all put into cotton of American types, or types that compete with them, the resulting yield would not seriously impair the position of the American cotton grower.

(29) American and Imperial Tobacco Cos.: Senate Resolution No. 329, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session.

This resolution called for an investigation of the activities of the American Tobacco Co. and the Imperial Tobacco Co. (Ltd.). The inquiry covered (1) the present degree of concentration and relationship between the two companies involved and (2) the methods employed by these companies with respect to cooperative marketing associations.

(30) The electric power industry: Senate Resolution No. 329, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session.

This resolution alleged that the General Electric Co. has acquired a monopoly, or exercises a control in restraint of trade or commerce, in violation of law, of or over the production and distribution of electric energy and the manufacture, sale, and distribution of electrical equipment and apparatus. The commission was directed to report the means employed by the General Electric Co. in monopolizing electric energy or power, and also the means of the company to acquire or maintain such monopoly.

(31) Open price associations: Senate Resolution No. 28, Sixty-ninth Congress, special session.

This resolution called on the commission to report the number and nature of open price associations, their names, the number of their members, and importance of such associations in the industry; (2) to report to what extent, if any, the effect of such open price associations has been to maintain among members thereof uniform prices to wholesalers or retailers, or to secure uniform, or approximately uniform, increases in such prices; and (3) to report with respect to alleged violations of the antitrust laws, if any, engaged in by such open price associations.

(32) Petroleum prices: Senate Resolution No. 31, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session.

In this inquiry the commission was directed to report with respect to the very material advances recently made in the prices of crude oil, gasoline, kerosene, and many other petroleum products, and whether or not such price increases were arbitrarily made and unwarranted, whether or not there had been any understanding or agreement between various oil companies or manipulations thereby to raise or depress prices, or in conditions of ownership or control of oil properties, or of refining and marketing facilities in the industry, which would prevent effective competition, and also the profits of the principal companies engaged in these industries during the years 1922–1924, inclusive.

The commission was directed to make inquiry and report (a) into the growth and importance of cooperative associations, including particularly the cost of marketing and distribution of such cooperatives, as compared with corresponding costs of other types of distributors, and also to report any alleged violations of the antitrust laws, and to submit recommendations for legislation, if necessary.

(34) Stock dividends: Senate Resolution No. 304, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session.

The commission was directed to ascertain and report the names and capitalization of corporations that have issued stock dividends, together with the amount of said stock dividends, since the decision of the Supreme Court holding that stock dividends were not taxable, and to ascertain and report the same information as to the same corporations for the same period of time prior to such decision. A report was recently sent to the Senate on this subject.

Since the creation of the commission the President of the United States upon seven different occasions has used the power of this commission in its investigation work. The inquiries and short statement relative thereto is inserted herewith:

(C) THE PRESIDENT

(1) Food inquiry: Direction of the President, February 7, 1917.

The President's food inquiry, undertaken with a special appropriation of Congress, resulted in a very important series of reports on the meat-packing industry, which had as their immediate result the enactment of the packers and stockyards act for the control of this industry and the prosecution of the big packers for a conspiracy in restraint of trade by the Department of Justice. Another branch of the food inquiry developed important facts regarding the grain trade which were of assistance to Congress in regulating the grain exchanges and to the courts in interpreting the law. Reports were also issued on the flour-milling and food-canning industries.

(2) War-time cost finding: Direction of the President, July 25, 1917.

The numerous cost investigations—some 600 in all—made by the Federal Trade Commission during the war into the coal, steel, lumber, petroleum, cotton textiles, locomotive, leather, canned foods, and copper industries, not to mention scores of other important industries, on the basis of which prices were fixed by the Food Administration, the War Industries Board, and the purchasing departments, like the Army, Navy, Shipping Board, and Railroad Administration, were all done under the President's special direction, and it is estimated that these cost-finding activities of the commission helped to save the country many billions of dollars by checking unfavorable price advances. Subsequent to the war a number of reports dealing with costs and profits were published based on these war-time inquiries. Among these may be mentioned reports on coal, copper, lumber, and canned goods.

(3) Wheat prices: Direction of the President, October 12, 1920.

The extraordinary decline of wheat prices in the summer and autumn of 1920 led to a direction of the President to inquire into the reasons for the decline. The chief reasons were found in abnormal market conditions, including certain arbitrary methods pursued by the grain-purchasing departments of foreign governments.

(4) Price deflation of agricultural products: President's direction, March 21, 1921.

The President asked the commission to inquire into the decided and progressive deflation in the prices of most of the staple agricultural products and to inquire into the reasons why, in the face of a very great shrinkage in prices of agricultural products, the consuming public has failed to get the benefit of a corresponding reduction in the cost of foodstuffs; to inquire as to whether the shrinkage in the value of basic commodities has been adequately reflected into the price of the products which the public buys. Based upon the commission's response to this direction, the President dealt with the subject matter of price deflation in his subsequent annual message to Congress.

(5) Gasoline inquiry: President's direction, February 7, 1924.

This report was entitled "Increase of Gasoline Prices in 1924," and upon its submission to the President the report was referred to the Department of Justice for consideration in connection with his inquiry into related phases of the petroleum industry which was undertaken by that department. The report embraces data on production, stocks, investment and profits of producers, refiners, and marketers, and a study of competitive conditions in the industry as a whole, with particular reference to the position and activities of the so-called Standard group.

(6) War-time profits and costs of the steel industry: Direction of the President.

This report dealt with both profits and costs in the steel industry and related to the period of the World War, and showed the effect, first, of the World War, and then the entry into it of the United States. Profits are analyzed in various ways, and particularly as to the differences between large and small companies.

(7) Anthracite-coal price pyramiding: Direction of the President, September 15, 1923.

At the direction of the President the commission examined certain alleged practices of price manipulation in the anthracite-coal trade.

Since the creation of the commission the Attorney General of the United States has twice called into activity this agency. We set forth the list, together with a short statement relative thereto:

(D) ATTORNEY GENERAL

(1) Lumber industry: Request of Attorney General, September 4, 1919.

The commission examined certain alleged trade combinations in the lumber industry. Violations of the antitrust acts were disclosed with respect to the Southern Pine Association, West Coast Lumbermen's Association, Western Pine Manufacturers' Association, Northern Hemlock & Hardwood Manufacturers' Association, Western Red Cedar Association, Lifetime Post Association, and Western Red Cedarmen's Information Bureau. The Department of Justice has instituted proceedings in consequence of the commission's recommendations with respect to the Southern Pine Association and the Western Pine Manufacturers' Association.

(2) Raisin combinations: Request of Attorney General, September 30, 1919.

A combination of raisin growers in California was referred to the commission for examination by the Attorney General pursuant to the Federal Trade Commission act (sec. 6), and the commission found that it was only organized in restraint of trade but was being conducted in a manner that was threatening financial disaster to the growers. The commission recommended a change of organization to conform to law, which was adopted by the raisin growers.

We respectfully submit that the work of the commission should not be hampered or restricted by the limitations carried in this bill. Upon these arguments we submit that the work of the commission will not suffer by the loss of this proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

Salaries: Comptroller General, $10,000; Assistant Comptroller General, $7,500; and for other personal services in the District of Columbia, in accordance with the classification act of 1923, $3,557,500; in all, $3,575,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word simply to say a word about the Comptroller General and his office. I am led to do this because of a personal experience which demonstrated to me the vast importance to the Government and to the people of that position and the vast importance of having the right man in that position.

A certain bureau of the Government advertised for a machine which it wished to buy.

It printed certain specifications. Those specifications were so drawn, and deliberately so drawn, as to prevent—the bureau thought—a very reputable and competent manufacturer in my district from submitting a bid with any hope of having it accepted. The manufacturer wrote to me and also wrote to another Member of the House, a personal friend of his, Mr. LAMPERT, of Wisconsin. Together we went to this bureau. The officials, with much of what might be denominated earnestness overdone, insisted that they were within their rights, and that my constituent's bid was not within the specifications. My colleague from Wisconsin and I informed the gentlemen that in our opinion they had drawn the specifications in that way for no other purpose than to exclude anybody except the company to whom they wished to give the contract.

Our labor did no good. My constituent's bid was ignored. They reported in favor of a higher bidder, and the secretary of their department approved the contract which they had awarded.

Then we went to Comptroller General McCarl and laid the indisputable facts before him. After two or three weeks had passed, the Comptroller General communicated with those bureau chiefs and with the department head and said, "Your specifications are improperly drawn. They are drawn to exclude certain competent manufacturers and to favor others, and the contract must not be carried out."

My constituent had bid a little more than $10,000. The next low bid was more than $11,000. There were four other bids, all higher; six in all. One man in the Government service wrote to the bureau people who had drawn these specifications, and they read to Mr. LAMPERT and myself his letter. In it he said that he would ignore the first bids and give the contract to No. 6, and it was the highest in the lot by several thousand dollars. The author of that letter thus exhibited a moral obtuseness altogether too common in the matter of Government contracts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Comptroller General said, "You can not go on with that contract, although it has been awarded and some part of the machine may have been completed. Nevertheless you can not pay one dollar on that contract out of the funds in the United States Treasury."

Then what? My constituent, the lowest responsible bidder, secured the contract, made a fine machine, and it is doing most excellent service.

After we came back following the summer vacation a constituent called my attention to another Government bureau which had issued an advertisement asking for bids and containing specifications, and said, "Here is another job." Those were his words. And a manufacturer in Buffalo also wrote that it was a job, and that the specifications had been so drawn as to exclude everybody except the man or concern or corporation to whom they wished to award the contract. And McCarl got hold of that job and stopped it too.

I have heard Comptroller General McCarl criticized severely at times on this floor. No man is perfect. But there are three things which are absolutely necessary in a Comptroller General—knowledge of the law, integrity, and courage—and McCarl combines them all, and a government is indeed fortunate which has such a splendid man in its service. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSING CORPORATION

Salaries: For officers, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia necessary to collect and account for the receipts from the sale of properties and the receipts from the operation of unsold properties of the United States Housing Corporation, the Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation, property commandeered by the United States through the Secretary of Labor, and to collect the amounts advanced to transportation facilities and others, $40,300: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum, and only one person may be employed at that rate.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how long this unsold property is to be pending and what it consists of, and if there is a possibility, so many years after the close of the war, of having these matters closed up?

Mr. WOOD. It is one of the aftermaths of the war that will be a long time in conclusion. The Government purchased a great many things during its war activities. We have a lot of real estate, and street-car lines, and suburban roads, and undeveloped property in various sections of the country. But the hearings will disclose exactly what that property is and what will be done with reference to closing it out. I think they are making a pretty fair showing. Of course, the Government will lose in the disposition of this property because of the sacrifices it must make to get rid of it.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is this property located all over the country?

Mr. WOOD. Yes. It extends from San Francisco to Portland, Me., and from the Gulf to the Lakes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Has the committee any inventory of what the property is supposed to be worth?

Mr. WOOD. Yes. You will find in the hearings, beginning on page 259, a very complete résumé of that property and an estimate of its value. In a word, it is shown that they have 2,300 mortgages in force and they have 267 pieces of vacant property.

Mr. DALLINGER. These mortgages were taken as part payment?

Mr. WOOD. Yes. It is town lots and tenement houses and boarding houses and everything else that was built during the war to take care of these war activities.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is there included in that any camp sites?

Mr. WOOD. No; these were all industrial housing propositions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington, D. C., Government hotel for Government workers: For maintenance, operation, and management of the hotel and restaurants therein, including purchase and replacement of equipment and personal services and including not to exceed $300 for the repair and maintenance of an automobile for official use, $403,250, of which amount not to exceed $238,590 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia in addition to any meals and lodging allowed employees: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum, in addition to any meals and lodging, and only one person may be employed at that rate.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out lines 6 to 18, inclusive, on page 20, the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: On page 20, beginning in line 6, strike out the entire paragraph ending in line 18.

Mr. DALLINGER. The land between the Capitol and the Union Station some years before the outbreak of the European war was taken under authorization of Congress for park purposes, so there could be a beautiful approach to the Capitol from the Union Station. That territory was covered by buildings and most of the buildings were demolished. Then when the war came on these Government hotels, so called, were erected on that location. I never could understand why it was done. When they were entirely occupied they only provided accommodations for about 1,800 of the 30,000 or 40,000 female employees of the Government. When they were constructed it was said they were only temporary and that particular type of construction was supposed to be good for only three years. They have been there for 10 years. It is nine years since the armistice was signed, and every year we are told they are going to be torn down and the approach from the Union Station to the Capitol beautified. But every year in comes this appropriation. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, they will never be torn down until Congress stops appropriating for them. I do not know how many people are being housed there at the present time, but I do know the number is very small, because some of the buildings are not occupied at all, while some have been given over to the use of the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

It seems to me Congress ought to take some action to have those buildings torn down and the approach between the Union Station and the Capitol beautified. It is a disgrace to the District of Columbia and a disgrace to the Nation for people to come out of the beautiful Union Station and come up to the Capitol with the situation as it is now. I am wondering how long Congress is going to stand for it, and I trust this amendment will prevail.

Mr. HAMMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMER. Why tear them down and deprive the ladies who are employees of the Government of a home until we are ready to beautify the premises?

Mr. DALLINGER. Why are we not ready to beautify the premises?

Mr. HAMMER. If they were torn down, would it cause us to get ready any quicker?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly it would.

Mr. HAMMER. There is another thing I would like to ask the gentleman. Probably the gentleman can not answer it, but I imagine the chairman of the subcommittee can. They increased the price from $47.50 a month to $50 in order to cover rent charges. Now, why is it they continue to charge these ladies that additional $2.50 or $5 since they quit paying rent and when they made, as I understand it, $50,000 clear last year?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will say to the gentleman that I can not answer his question; but why were they put there in the first place? They ought never to have been erected in that location.

Mr. HAMMER. But they are there, and they are good buildings in which to house these lady employees.

Mr. DALLINGER. They were to be torn down at the end of three years, but they are still there, and they will remain there until Congress stops appropriating money for them.

Mr. HAMMER. Would not their destruction operate to increase rent in the District?

Mr. DALLINGER. No. The effect of it would be infinitesimal.

Mr. HAMMER. I can not see why the suggestion is made to tear them down until we are ready to tear them down.

Mr. DALLINGER. We are ready.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that there are some 918 young ladies still occupying these buildings. They were built in the first instance because the clerical force that was attracted to this city during the war was subjected to all sorts of profiteering. It is too long a story, but there are some here, perhaps, who remember what occurred then. Lessors were putting five or six of these girls in one room—a room that was only fit for the occupancy of one person—and they were charging each one of them the price they would have charged had they been occupying the room entirely alone. It was a matter of Government necessity at that time.

Now, with reference to beautifying that part of the city. There are pending in the courts of the District a half dozen cases condemning certain portions of this property. These cases have been pending for 20 years and are still undecided. The point was well made by the gentleman from North Carolina that until they are ready to beautify these grounds and make them a part of the improvement that has been contemplated there is no use of demolishing these Government hotels. They were built, perhaps, better than they knew. They are in splendid condition. There are some five or six of them that are not now occupied as Government hotels, but these are occupied by various other activities of the Government and some of the activities of the District of Columbia.

No one is compelled to live in these hotels. Most of the young ladies who are occupying these homes are doing it because they are getting better accommodations there for the amount of money they are paying than they could get elsewhere. To my mind, it would be a calamity to close them. If these 900 young women were thrown out upon the public to-morrow to find some other places to go and get accommodations the profiteer would again be getting in his work, as they have been doing in this town ever since the war.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. This would not go into effect until the 1st of July, would it?

Mr. WOOD. No.

Mr. DALLINGER. So they would not be thrown out to-morrow?

Mr. WOOD. But there is no reason for it. These grounds could not be beautified, and the result the gentleman would like to see accomplished can not be accomplished until certain of these law suits are finally determined. To-day you can not walk from here to Union Station without seeing some of these places half built up, and the cases with respect to those properties are still pending in the courts.

Mr. DALLINGER. Can the gentleman from Indiana give us any idea when these buildings will be torn down——

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER (continuing). And when we will be able to begin to carry out the plan that was determined upon 20 years ago?

Mr. WOOD. I think when the Government has the title to the other property finally decided in the court, where these cases are now pending, we will get rid of the Government buildings.

Mr. DALLINGER. Can the gentleman give us any idea when that will be?

Mr. WOOD. No; I can not, because of the fact I can not tell when these cases are going to be decided in the courts of the District.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the necessity for this appropriation? If these buildings are being used, rented, and so on, why are they not self-sustaining?

Mr. WOOD. They are self-sustaining. The fact of the business is they are paying a little profit into the Treasury. It is perhaps not quite accurate to call it a profit, because there is nothing included for overhead or for interest on the investment; but these Government hotels are paying a surplus into the Treasury.

Mr. NEWTON. Then the gentleman thinks the buildings as now constructed look a whole lot better there than to have a lot of vacant, torn-up ground; and that is just about what will happen if we abandon these buildings before we are ready to go ahead with the improvement which we all want to see. For one I would rather have the place used at it is being used instead of having a lot of vacant ground there.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he can tell the House when we are going to be in a position to beautify these grounds?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana to direct the attention of the committee to page 275 of the hearings where there is given the amount of receipts and also the amount of disbursements, the receipts being $445,738.68 and the disbursements $393,967.47, showing that the receipts are approximately $50,000 more than the disbursements.

Mr. WOOD. Yes; and, in addition to that, they have been saving the Government thousands of dollars a year in the laundry which they have down there to take care of all such work in the various departments. There is also a saving through the manufacture of ice. I think this institution is one of the most profitable institutions the Government has, and while it may be an eyesore and may continue for some years to come, yet it will not continue longer than the eyesores that many of us have seen since we have been here, where the grounds are filled to the second floor of various buildings, and the title to this property is still pending in the courts of the District of Columbia. The title to the ground upon which these hotel buildings are located has been settled, but as to some of that ground we are there by suffrance, ready to get off immediately when the other titles are adjudicated.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied with the explanation of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all other authorized expenditures necessary in the execution of laws to regulate commerce, including one chief counsel, one director of finance, and one director of traffic at $10,000 each per annum, traveling expenses, and stenographic reporting services to be obtained on and after the approval of this act by the commission, in its discretion, through the civil service or by contract, or renewal of existing contract, or otherwise, $2,564,500, of which amount not to exceed $2,008,010 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, exclusive of special counsel, for which the expenditure shall not exceed $50,000; not exceeding $3,000 for necessary books, reports, and periodicals; not exceeding $100 in the open market for the purchase of office furniture similar in class or kind to that listed in the general supply schedule; and not exceeding $139,000 for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the item before us has to do with the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I want to make a few observations with reference to the progress of the work being done under the resolution passed by Congress in January, 1925, which provided for a general survey and readjustment of the freight rates of this country.

I am prompted particularly to speak at this time about this by reason of a decision in the Federal court in California, handed down upon Wednesday of last week, January 18. I have just received this morning from the Attorney General's office a copy of the bill in equity filed by 48 railroads attacking the so-called Hoch-Smith resolution, and the interpretation of the resolution by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and also a copy of the decision of the court in that case. It is a decision of very great importance. The case was one of the definite cases in which the Interstate Commerce Commission had granted substantial decreases in freights and had based its action specifically upon the Hoch-Smith resolution, and is commonly referred to as the California fruit case.

The case was brought by the California Growers and Shippers' Protective League to obtain reductions on transcontinental rates on citrus fruits. Some time prior to this the fruit people of southern California had brought a similar case, but their application had been denied by the commission. After the passage of the Hoch-Smith resolution they brought another case, and on July 20, 1927, the commission granted the application and granted very substantial freight reductions of 12 or 13 cents a hundred pounds, and based its action squarely upon the resolution. The decision was attacked, and 48 of the great railroads of the country were permitted to join in the suit, which indicates their view of its importance. They sought to enjoin the putting into effect of the reduced rates. The case was heard by a specially constituted Federal court in California, consisting of Circuit Judge Rudkin and District Judges Kerrigan and St. Sure. The attack was upon the constitutionality of the resolution itself, upon the constitutionality of the commission's construction of it, and upon the findings generally of the commission. The decision of the court sustains the action of the commission in every particular, denies the injunction, and the new reduced rates will be ordered in.

The resolution has been on the statute books for nearly three years. I never claimed, and no one else ever claimed, that it was a panacea for freight ills. I shall not take the time to rehearse the history of that legislation, but I do say that it has already been of very great advantage, and especially to agriculture.

The resolution has been viciously attacked from certain quarters, largely inspired by selfish interests. Its purposes and its terms have been grossly misrepresented, and the attitude of the commission toward it has been misrepresented and effort made to put the whole situation in an improper light before the country.

Action under the resolution has not been as speedy and as far-reaching as many of us would hope for. But I am sure that every fair man who knows anything about the work of the commission and the great burden and complexity of the task with which it labors want to be as patient as possible with the commission.

It is not my purpose to-day to attempt to outline the very broad work that has been instituted and is being carried on under the resolution. There are major investigations on certain basic commodities, such as grain and grain products, cotton, cottonseed and cottonseed products, vegetable oils, petroleum, iron, and steel, and so forth. Then there are broad surveys being made of class and commodity rates in various sections of the country. On some of the very large cases the hearings are completed or nearly so.

In a number of cases already decided the commission has construed and applied the Hoch-Smith resolution, and some of these cases have been of great importance. I wish I had time to read from some of these decisions, but I shall not impose upon the House to do so at this time.

Let me refer, for the information of those who may be further interested in the history of the resolution and the progress so far made under it, to a very splendid and comprehensive report made on the subject by the rate committee of the National Association of State Railroad and Public Utility Commissioners at the annual convention of the association in Dallas, Tex., last October. The report was presented by Hon. Hugh H. Williams, of New Mexico, chairman of the committee, and is a complete and convincing answer to the critics who have sought to discredit the legislation. The report, which covers 22 pages and which was unanimously adopted by the association, outlines the need for the legislation, the steps leading up to its enactment, tells of various trade and business bodies, farm organizations, traffic experts, and others who had long urged it, and sweeps away various misrepresentations concerning the circumstances under which Congress passed it. The report then takes up in detail many cases in which the commission has already taken action in compliance with it.

The report then sums up the results so far attained under the Hoch-Smith resolution, and as the summary is brief I will read it. But before doing so let me remind you that this association of State commissioners is an old association, composed of men who are in immediate and constant touch with rate matters and who in the main have shown a very high regard for the interests of the public in all these freight questions. Their testimony is entitled to very great weight. I quote now from the association's report:

It may, therefore, be said that these effects have been produced by the resolution:

1. It has already resulted in reductions of importance.
2. It has stayed important rate advances.
3. It has resulted in the institution of important rate investigations in which the substantial relief for agriculture may be confidently expected.
4. It has supplied to the Interstate Commerce Commission a more convenient and expeditious method of procedure for use in a constructive treatment of complicated rate situations than was possible under previously existing laws, which procedure has been used by the commission with such regard for the rights of all parties that no complaint has arisen against it.

Then, in the recommendation they say:

We recommend that this association by resolution declare its opposition to any repeal of the Hoch-Smith resolution or to any amendment of it which would affect the principles therein declared, that the products of agriculture, including livestock, shall be accorded the lowest possible level of rates.

That recommendation was adopted by the national association.

I say that results have not been as rapid as many of us hoped for, and while I do not want to indulge in any intemperate criticism of the railroads, I do say that the attitude of many of the railroads toward these efforts to get a better distribution of the freight burden has been an indefensible attitude. They have thrown every sort of obstacle in the way of the commission toward the carrying out of the plain mandate of Congress in this regard. I call attention to one case of tremendous importance in the whole western country, namely, the western grain case. In the western grain case all the great farm organizations of the whole Middle West had united in applications for moderate decreases in rates upon grain, which in my judgment were entirely justified under all of the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOCH. Instead of submitting to reasonable decreases, which the facts, I believe, plainly called for in that case, the western railroads countered by demanding increases in grain rates of from 20 to 40 per cent. The commission has been holding hearings in that grain case at Wichita, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Chicago, and, perhaps, other places. I undertake to say that there is no man informed with reference to conditions out there who seriously believes that the railroads ever expected to get increases in freight rates upon grain. It is the common conversation of the street that this attitude and action of the railroads was purely railroad tactics for the sole purpose of preventing decreases.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. I yield.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Is it not within the province of the Interstate Commerce Commission to take cognizance of that fact and to go along and consider the question of whether they will make reductions instead of increases?

Mr. HOCH. It certainly is.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If that is true, why do they permit the railroads to pursue these tactics?

Mr. HOCH. Under the law the railroads have the legal right, of course, to make any sort of application they desire, but I am saying that, in my judgment—and I believe it is the judgment of all men informed with reference to the situation—the railroads had no idea of ever getting those increases. I think the commission ought to take those facts into consideration, and I hope that the commission will find some way to shorten up these hearings in order that we may have a decision on that matter of so great importance to the West.

These western railroads, with scarcely an exception, have been enjoying the most prosperous years they have ever had. We all rejoice in that. Take it through my own country. The Santa Fe, the Rock Island, the Union Pacific, and even the Missouri Pacific, which only a few years ago was considered improvident and comparatively unsuccessful, have been doing wonderfully well. And yet in spite of the fact that these railroads have been enjoying this great prosperity, and in spite of the fact that the country through which they run has been through a period of agricultural depression, these railroads come in, in the face of that situation, and brazenly ask for these increases from 20 to 40 per cent in grain freight rates. I say that it is indefensible, and it indicates on the part of some railroad officials an indifference to public sentiment and public welfare which in the long run will breed harm for even the railroads themselves. [Applause.]

It will be recalled that a great many years ago a railroad president, in a flare against public sentiment, said, "The public be damned." Happily we had gotten pretty much past that sort of an attitude. We have gotten to a place of good will between the railroads and the public and we all rejoice in that. We have come to a time when it is no longer the stock in trade of the demagogue to indulge in indiscriminate attacks on the railroads and when railroads generally have been seeking success through good will, cooperation, and service. We all want them to prosper. We know the necessity for adequate transportation service, but there is a suspicion growing that the attitude of some of the railroads in some of these great cases is dictated not so much by men in the actual transportation business, the real railroaders, who grew up with the business and who know that in the long run the railroads can not prosper unless the country through which they run prospers, but are dictated by some who are more interested in financial manipulation, and who are far removed from the country served by those railroads, and who are seemingly indifferent to public sentiment in that country. [Applause.] And I trust that the Interstate Commerce Commission will take a more vigorous attitude in bringing to a conclusion this readjustment of the freight structure to which, in my judgment, the great agricultural section of the country in particular is eminently entitled.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wanted to know whether or not you would put into your remarks the results in such cases where reductions have been had. I think that is information which the Members of the House and the country would like to have.

Mr. HOCH. Yes. I will do that. In the great major cases, of course, decisions have not yet been rendered. The livestock case is still pending. Its decision should be expedited. This western grain case is another great primary case not yet completed. It is true that the commission has not yet taken action with reference to these great major cases, but there has been substantial benefit in a number of cases which are very important to the parties interested. And the resolution has undoubtedly been the bulwark which has prevented very large freight increases which many believe we would have had in the West if it had not been for the direction of this resolution.

It may be of interest to the Members, if they do not know it, that soon after Congress passed this resolution in 1925, Canada passed a similar provision, part of it almost word for word like ours, directing this survey of the freight structure, and it is of great interest to some of us in the grain-producing section of the country to know that the Canadian commission last summer, after a hearing involving grain rates, issued an order substantially reducing grain rates in Canada; and they did it, according to their statement, in carrying out a great national policy in the interests of agriculture in their country. To-day the producers of wheat in this country are at a disadvantage in comparison with the Canadian producer, and the Canadian commission refer specifically to the situation of the American grain producers and state that in their judgment American grain producers are bearing an unfair proportion of the freight burden.

I do not mean to criticize our commission. I appreciate the difficulties of their task, but I hope they will prosecute this thing a little more vigorously. There are those of us who have resisted any policy looking toward legislative rate making, but I utterly reject the criticism coming from some quarters that it is not the business of Congress to direct in any way the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission has no power whatever, except as an agency of Congress, in the regulation of interstate commerce. While Congress should not, without the very greatest provocation, enter upon a policy of specific rate making, because we are not equipped for that, yet I say that it is not only the right but the duty of Congress to direct the Interstate Commerce Commission in matters of broad, fundamental transportation policy.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Can the gentleman give us any idea of the effect of these Canadian rates? Are they compensatory or are their losses made up by taxation?

Mr. HOCH. I have no way of telling. The Canadian commission, in the exercise of its power to put into effect just and reasonable rates, has ordered these rates put into effect, and I assume that the Canadian commission, in their judgment, are not penalizing the railroads.

It is held by decisions of the Supreme Court that there is plainly a zone of just and reasonable rates, and the courts are not rate-making bodies at all. The courts are only concerned as to whether there has been any denial of rights under the Constitution, and Congress has a right to direct that certain classes and kinds of commodities may have as low lawful rates as the commission can establish.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. HOCH. Unless somebody asks me some more questions, I shall need only a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. My observation of rate cases, while limited, shows that the burden is usually on the public, which under the exigencies of the cases is a very doubtful result, and it refuses to yield the full information needed by an investigator. Does the Hoch-Smith resolution clothe the commission with the initiative, to initiate the survey at the expense of Government, or does that expense still fall upon the general public?

Mr. HOCH. It directs the commission to conduct these surveys, and under that direction the commission is conducting the surveys, and the appropriation item of which I am speaking includes the work carried on under this resolution as well as other work.

Mr. NEWTON. I notice that the hearings disclose that about $138,000 has been used under the Hoch-Smith resolution alone. That, in a way, answers the question of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HOCH. Of course, even with reference to that amount we can not tell what the expenses would have been on other work if they had not been engaged on the work under the Hoch-Smith resolution.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman was discussing a ruling by the Supreme Court when I came in.

Mr. HOCH. I am not sure whether the gentleman from Wisconsin refers to the California case involving the Hoch-Smith resolution, or to the Supreme Court case I mentioned. The former is the case of the Ann Arbor Railroad and others against The United States of America and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman summarize that decision or state just what that was?

Mr. HOCH. The California fruit growers had filed those applications for decreases in transcontinental rates, and they based their application largely on the mandate of the Hoch-Smith resolution, namely, to give to the producer of agricultural products the lowest possible lawful rates consistent with the maintenance of adequate service.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is an adequate rate a lawful rate?

Mr. HOCH. A lawful rate is a just and reasonable rate. There is not simply one rigid line where you can say that a rate is a lawful rate. In other words, until they get down to the point of confiscation the court will not set it aside, holding that within that zone to which I refer the commission has discretion to establish reasonable rates.

The California fruit growers contended they were suffering depression and that the value of the service must be considered along with the cost of the service to the transportation company and that their situation brought them within the terms of the Hoch-Smith resolution. The Interstate Commerce Commission, in a very able and elaborate opinion upholding the mandate of Congress as contained in the Hoch-Smith resolution, said that the fruits were agricultural products, and held that the rate which they were asking was not a confiscatory rate but was a just and reasonable rate under all the circumstances, and granted the decreases of 12 and 13 cents a hundred. The railroads thereupon brought an injunction to prevent these rates from being put into effect, and it was upon that injunction that the hearing in the case which I have referred was held.

The railroads in a very elaborate attack attacked it, of course, from every possible angle. They attacked the authority of the commission and they attacked the authority of Congress to pass such a resolution as the Hoch-Smith resolution, claiming it was unconstitutional and all of that.

Since the time has been given me, and if the committee will bear with me a little longer, because I am not going to take any more time, I will just read what these three Federal judges said last Wednesday upon that proposition, as it is very brief. I am quoting now the memorandum opinion by the court:

The Interstate Commerce Commission reduced the rate on transcontinental shipments of deciduous fruits from California to certain eastern points from $1.73 to $1.60, and to certain other eastern points from $1.62 to $1.50 per 100 pounds. The present suit was instituted by the large number of railroads affected by the reduction to set aside the order of the commission and to suspend its operation during the pendency of the suit. The application for a temporary injunction is based largely on the testimony taken before the commission and on the report made by the commission. We have given careful consideration to the record and to the exhaustive arguments submitted on the application for the temporary injunction, and will content ourselves at this time with a mere statement of our conclusions. First, the contention that the reduced rate will compel the carriers to transport this class of freight at a loss, or without substantial reward, is without support in the record. Second, the contention that the carriers are entitled to receive what would be deemed a fair return on this class of freight, independently of their other business and independently of any other consideration, is unfounded in law.

Then they quote from the case of Northern Pacific Railway v. North Dakota (236 U. S. 585-598), as follows:

The legislature undoubtedly has a wide range of discretion in the exercise of the power to prescribe reasonable charges, and it is not bound to fix uniform rates for all commodities or to secure the same percentage of profit on every sort of business. There are many factors to be considered—differences in the articles transported, the care required, the risk assumed, the value of the service, and it is obviously important that there should be reasonable adjustments and classifications. Nor is its authority hampered by the necessity of establishing such minute distinctions that the effective exercise of the rate-making power becomes impossible. It is not bound to prescribe separate rates for every individual service performed, but it may group services by fixing rates for classes of traffic.

As repeatedly observed, we do not sit as a revisory board to substitute our judgment for that of the legislature, or its administrative agent, as to matters within its province. * * * The court, therefore, is not called upon to concern itself with mere details of a schedule; or to review a particular tariff or schedule which yields substantial compensation for the services it embraces, when the profitableness of the intrastate business as a whole is not involved.

I now read from the memorandum opinion:

Third, the commission was authorized to reduce rates on the products of agriculture before completing the thorough investigation of the rate structure of common carriers, subject to the interstate commerce act, as directed by the joint resolution of January 30, 1925 (43 Stat. 801), and did not otherwise misconstrue the terms of that resolution, which are in a large measure directory. The application for a temporary injunction is therefore denied.

Mr. Chairman, in compliance with the suggestion that I submit citation to various cases decided under the Hoch-Smith resolution, let me submit here for publication in the RECORD some quotations from a splendid address made by Hon. John E. Benton, general solicitor of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, before the annual meeting of the American Farm Bureau Federation at Chicago on December 6, 1927. I should like to insert the whole address, but will only insert the portions which give the information mentioned. I quote as follows:

Very shortly after the resolution was signed—on March 12, 1925—the Interstate Commerce Commission instituted its rate-structure investigation No. 17000, involving all the freight rates in the country, for the purpose of making the reductions and revisions ordered by the resolution. * * *

The impossibility of considering and determining at a single time solutions for all of the rate situations in the United States was recognized by Congress, and the resolution provides that the commission may make orders therein "from time to time and as expeditiously as possible." The commission has accordingly broken the proceeding into parts, which have been concurrently carried forward, under the direction of different commissioners and before different examiners. The parts which involve farm products are the following:

Grain rates in the western district, involving rates on grain and grain products in all of the States west of the Mississippi River and also in the State of Illinois and in the Southeast; western and southern livestock rates, involving rates on livestock in this same territory, and also in the States south of the Potomac and the Ohio; rates on cotton from substantially all producing areas; rates on cottonseed and its products between all points of origin and destination in the country; and hay rates in the western group.

While it is true that none of these proceedings mentioned, which are part of the general rate structure investigation, have been concluded it is not true that the Hoch-Smith resolution remains yet without concrete results.

In the early part of 1925 the carriers operating in all of the States west of the Mississippi River and the Great Lakes petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission for an advance in all freight rates. This advance they claimed was necessary to give them the section 15a return. The proceeding was known as ex parte 87. Hearings were held throughout the West and extended over many months. The commission's decision was handed down on July 14, 1926 (113 I. C. C. 3). The commission found that the carriers were not making the section 15a returns but held that they had not shown sufficient justification for an advance in all rates, including those on the products of agriculture. Leaving the carriers to present another application covering increases which might be justified, the commission said:

"The record, however, warrants us in concluding that in proposing changes in existing rate structure, either for the purpose of improving earnings of carriers in western trunk-line territory, or for the purpose of rectifying inequalities in existing rate structures, carriers should propose no advances in the rates on products of agriculture, including livestock, except where particular rates on such products may need adjustment to remove inconsistencies, or where it can be shown that the product in question is not affected by depression."

The next case, after ex parte 87, decided by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was affected by the Hoch-Smith resolution, was the Northwest Grain Rates Case, I. & S. 2469 (122 I. C. C. 235), decided February 8, 1927. In that case the carriers sought to make very substantial advances in grain rates in the Northwest. The decision turned on the Hoch-Smith resolution. The commission found that the increased rates, which the carriers wanted to put into effect, judged by comparison with rates from other producing sections to their primary markets, were not unduly high. Taking into account, however, the effect of the Hoch-Smith resolution the commission denied the increase. On this point it said:

"The intent of the resolution is that products of agriculture affected by depression shall move at the 'lowest possible lawful rates compatible with the maintenance of adequate transportation service.' It sets no new standard of lawfulness, but provides, in effect, that there are flexible limits to our discretion; we shall require the maintenance of the lowest rates falling within those flexible limits. * * * The substance of the provision of the resolution quoted above is that agricultural products affected by depression shall in this respect be included in the class of most-favored commodities, to such extent, at least, as may be 'compatible with the maintenance of adequate transportation service.'"

In the Livestock Association Cases (122 I. C. C. 609), decided March 14, 1927, while holding that upon the record which had been developed in those cases, which were not heard nor consolidated with No. 17,000, no reduction in all livestock rates could be made, the commission did reduce rates for distances not in excess of 600 miles, in the southwest, saying that it did so "for the purpose of removing discriminations and in the light of the Hoch-Smith resolution."

Another case, which was of importance to the farmers of New England, was Milk and Cream Between New England Points (126 I. C. C. 39, 68), decided April 11, 1927, the commission said:

"Under the joint resolution of the Congress approved January 30, 1925, commonly known as the Hoch-Smith resolution, the provisions of which are a part of the law which we administer, we must consider, in adjusting freight rates, 'the conditions which at any given time prevail in our several industries' to the end that commodities may freely move and especially the effect upon the products of agriculture which industry was specifically recognized by the Congress as being at the time in a depressed condition. This must be given particular weight in determining whether proposed increases in rates upon products of agriculture may be established. The respondents in the present case contended that milk and cream are not products of agriculture, but we are of the opinion that they are and that they come within the class of products with which the Hoch-Smith resolution specifically deals."

That was a case in which the carriers were seeking to advance their rates, and because such an advance was incompatible with the Hoch-Smith resolution it was denied.

Another case, outside the general rate-structure investigation, in which the Hoch-Smith resolution was given effect, involved the transcontinental rates on citrus fruits from California. This was brought by the California Growers' and Shippers' Protective League to obtain reductions in those rates. A similar case involving the same issues had been heard before the Hoch-Smith resolution was adopted, and reductions had been denied. On a second presentation, after the Hoch-Smith resolution became law, the commission, on July 20, 1927, in a decision reported (129 I. C. C. 25), ordered the rates reduced, saying:

"Complainant has established that the growing of deciduous fruits is one of the great basic industries of California, and that this industry for the past five years has undergone a period of deflation and depression. Its economic situation is such that it clearly comes within the terms of the Hoch-Smith resolution as entitled to the lowest possible lawful rates compatible with the maintenance of adequate transportation service."

There is also now pending before the commission a proposed report by Examiner Cheseldine, distributed November 15, 1927, in cases brought by the boards of railroad commissioners of Iowa and South Dakota (I. C. C. Nos. 18730 and 18787) to obtain reductions in rates on coarse grains from those States to various points. The examiner recommends certain reductions. In the report, which he proposes for adoption by the commission, the following is said:

"In the carriage of the great staples and necessities of life the rates should be such as will encourage and warrant their movement, and while they should not be so low as to impose a burden on other traffic, they should have reasonable relation to the cost of production and the value of the transportation service to the producer and shipper. At the time of the hearing there was a serious depression in the farming industry in this territory. The value of corn or other coarse grains in South Dakota was abnormally low, farm foreclosures were numerous, and while the condition has improved somewhat it is common knowledge that it is yet acute. At the same time the cost of production has greatly increased. The general financial condition of the farmers in this territory was partly responsible for the Hoch-Smith resolution, and the situation here is one that it was designed to assist."

* * * Some reductions of importance have been ordered. Furthermore, we have seen that the commission has instituted and is carrying on investigations affecting some of the principal farm products over widely extended areas of the country. These may be expected to be ripe for decision within a year or less. We have also seen that in the cases which it has decided the commission has placed an interpretation upon the Hoch-Smith resolution which would seem to insure substantial relief to agriculture.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Under date of January 21 last there appears an editorial in the New York Journal of Commerce captioned "Hot air in Congress." This editorial deals with a speech which I delivered in the House on January 19, in the course of which I commented upon a meeting between three minority members of the United States Shipping Board and certain representatives of the United States Steel Corporation and associates. Among other things, the editorial states the following:

The public, unfortunately, has not been supplied with the full story of what happened in these negotiations.

Had the writer of this editorial been interested enough in learning the truth to read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 19, he would have found incorporated in my speech the complete official report of the negotiations at this very extraordinary meeting, which report was made to the Shipping Board by the commissioners who attended it. That report is a public record. The editor could have obtained it as I did. If he will now read the official records he will find that action on this Calcutta shipping business had been unanimously taken by the Shipping Board after full consultation with the representatives of the Steel Corporation's steamship lines and those of the largest importers of cargoes under discussion. Not only that but he will also find that this unanimous action of the Shipping Board was taken after considerable correspondence between the Steel Products Co. of New York and the Shipping Board at a date prior to the extraordinary meeting in question. He will then understand that after the unanimous action by the Shipping Board had been taken the representatives of the Steel Corporation referred to in my speech arranged for a minority of the Shipping Board commissioners to meet them in the private office of the chairman of the subcommittee, which was at that very time considering the request of the Shipping Board for its annual appropriations.

To repeat a portion of this editorial above referred to, I can say in the writer's own words, "The public, unfortunately, has not been supplied with the full story," as to the reason why the general counsel of the Steel Corporation, the president of the Steel Corporation's Isthmian line, and their associates arranged for this extraordinary meeting. Perhaps the editor can enlighten the public on this phase of the situation. I can not. I have access to the public records, but am not in close contact with the officials of the United States Steel Corporation.

Perhaps the editor in question can tell us whether this meeting was intended as a compliment to the three commissioners present or an implication that they, a minority, were influential enough to overcome the action of a majority of the board. What was the purpose of these representatives of the United States Steel Corporation in holding this meeting with a minority of the commissioners of the Shipping Board at that particular time and in that particular place?

Perhaps, also, the writer of this editorial can enlighten the public as to why those Americans, members of the Jute & Gunnies Importers' Association, deliberately entered into contracts with foreign shippers, voluntarily paying a half a dollar a ton more for the transportation of their goods by these foreign ships than was asked of them for the same transportation by American ships. Does this editor approve of American manufacturers paying foreign ships a half a dollar a ton more than is asked for the same service by American ships? Does he know that the Shipping Board had given the Steel Corporation every opportunity for six years to build up an American-flag service to Calcutta? Does he know that at the end of this six-year period the Steel Corporation was making only four sailing to Calcutta out of a total of 69 per year and leaving 65 sailings to foreign-flag ships? Such is the fact, and I ask him if he believes, in the face of these facts, that the Shipping Board should sit idly by and take no action?

I at least and possibly other Members of the Congress, together with the American public as well, will be interested in the answers to these question which I respectfully propound to that editor of the New York Journal of Commerce who wrote the courteous and enlightening editorial entitled "Hot air in Congress." [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to keep informed regarding and to enforce compliance with acts to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads; the act requiring common carriers to make reports of accidents and authorizing investigations thereof; and to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and test appliances intended to promote the safety of railway operation, as authorized by the joint resolution approved June 30, 1906, and the provision of the sundry civil act approved May 27, 1908, to investigate, test experimentally, and report on the use and need of any appliances or systems intended to promote the safety of railway operation, including the employment of a chief inspector at $6,000 per annum, and two assistant chief inspectors at $5,000 each per annum, and such other inspectors as may be necessary, and for traveling expenses, $515,824, of which amount not to exceed $80,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the language at lines 9, 10, and 11, on page 23—including the employment of a chief inspector at $6,000 per annum, and two assistant chief inspectors at $5,000 each per annum.

I have reserved a point of order on this language for this reason: We have a classification act and I presume these men would come under that act, and I do not understand why they should be taken out of the provisions of the general law.

Mr. WOOD. They are not taken out of the provisions of the general law, but they have never had their classification fixed and they have never had their rate of compensation fixed. One of the great troubles in the administration of this office is to get men to do this work who are worth while, and when they get a person down there who is worth while somebody comes along and takes him away from them because they can pay more money. The work of these men correspond with the work in the locomotive-inspector service, which is in the same classification as these men. They are entirely comparable and for that reason the Interstate Commerce Commission has fixed these salaries.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I confess I have not had the time to read all the hearings on this bill. What I surmise is that the Interstate Commerce Commission is undertaking by this language to substitute its judgment for the judgment of the Personnel Reclassification Board. They probably are dissatisfied with the salaries fixed by the Personnel Reclassification Board and they are undertaking to get the committee to take these particular men out of the authority of the board. I think to do that thing is very questionable wisdom.

Mr. WOOD. I think the gentleman is mistaken with reference to that. It is not the purpose of the commission to arbitrarily fix salaries, but they are trying to fix these salaries in the same grade of salaries of men who are performing comparable service.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. I feel compelled to make it, because there is nothing in the record to show any reason why we should undertake by congressional enactment to fix the salaries of these three particular employees outside of the usual machinery provided by law.

Mr. WOOD. I wish the gentleman would withhold his point of order, because I am sure the gentleman wants to be entirely fair.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I certainly do.

Mr. WOOD. Congress has fixed a rate of salary for locomotive inspectors, but we have never fixed a salary for this class of employees. Their work is exactly comparable and there is no reason on earth, in justice, why they should not be the same.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I understand, then, from the gentleman's statement that there is a statute that prescribes the specific salary that the locomotive inspectors shall receive.

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. And it is the purpose to put these salaries in a grade comparable with the salaries of locomotive inspectors?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; that is absolutely it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Well, I would hesitate to set my judgment up against that of the committee on a detail of that kind, so I withdraw the point or order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all printing and binding for the Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, $3,450.

Total, Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, $2,584,980.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: On page 28, after line 6, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"A plot of ground comprising not to exceed 42,000 square feet in the southwest corner of square No. 3530, being a portion of the site of the McKinley High School and the Langley Junior High School, is hereby made available for one of the bathing pools authorized by the act approved May 4, 1926."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, this item, under the rules, would be subject to a point of order. I would like an opportunity to explain just what it means and ask that no point of order be raised.

The last Congress passed an act authorizing an expenditure of $345,000 to build two bathing or swimming pools. The Fine Arts Commission, the Park and Planning Commission, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Board of Education, and the Committee on Appropriations finally decided that one of these pools should be built on the playgrounds of the schools, and contracts were so let.

Later, notwithstanding the fact that everybody agreed upon the matter, the Comptroller General ruled, after about half the work was done on one of them, that the ground on which the pool was being built was not under the jurisdiction of the Office of Public Parks and could not be used for this pool.

This amendment is to correct the situation under which the contract was let so that it will conform to the ruling made by the Comptroller General and come within the scope of what was intended when the act was passed.

I hope there will not be any objection to the amendment. It is simply to correct this situation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Astrophysical Observatory: For maintenance of the Astrophysical Observatory, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including assistants, purchase of books, periodicals, and apparatus, making necessary observations in high altitudes, repairs and alterations of buildings, preparation of manuscripts, drawings and illustrations, traveling expenses, and miscellaneous expenses, $33,200.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to speak for three minutes out of order. I want to speak on the bill, but on another paragraph than the one we are considering.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to speak out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMMER. Attention was called a while ago to the Government hotels and a statement was made as to the earnings last year. It was $52,763.21, as I understand. I want to call attention to the fact—I will not say it is a fraud, I will not say it is hypocrisy, I will not say it is deception, but I will say that it is misleading that the board or Housing Corporation in increasing the charge for board and housing on the employees of the Government $4.50 in March, 1923, upon the theory that it had to be done in order to pay the ground rent.

The facts are that the terms of the contract under which the United States Government purchased from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. that land upon which stands some of the buildings of the Government hotel stipulates, among other things, that:

First, the price paid is to be the same as the condemnation price alone in 1913, plus interest, plus taxes;

Second, that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. is to return to the United States Government all income received from the property during the period beginning with the year 1913 and ending with the date of purchase, including the ground rental paid for the period November 14, 1922, to December 16, 1925, out of the revenues of the Government hotels from March 16, 1923, to December 16, 1925.

One outstanding consequence of this method of purchase is that the $4.50 monthly increase in rate which was put into effect March 16, 1923, for the sole purpose, as was claimed, of paying ground rental for the hotel has been used actually for the purpose of purchasing a park for the United States Government.

This ground rental received by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. was at the rate of $74,315 per annum, 6 per cent on the 1913 condemnation price of the land occupied by the hotel, plus the taxes, covered the period November 4, 1922—one year after the signing of the peace treaty—to December 16, 1925, when the Baltimore & Ohio declined to renew the lease because of its desire to have the land either purchased by the Government or released under clear title, and amounted in round numbers to $229,000.

The official records of the Labor Department show clearly that the surplus being realized from the hotels during the 21 months immediately preceding the date of the $4.50 increase in rate at the hotels was more than sufficient to have paid the ground rental.

Now, what I want to know is why it is that when this price of board and housing of Government employees was increased $4.50 per month in 1923 that the management continued to charge the increase after the Government acquired the property. There should be an investigation of this matter, and I give notice that it is my purpose to ask for one if this additional charge is not discontinued. Here we are 10 years after the world conflict paying more to a Government-operated housing management than twice the cost of board and housing paid by Government employees prior to the World War.

The Clerk read as follows:

TARIFF COMMISSION

For salaries and expenses of the United States Tariff Commission, including purchase and exchange of labor-saving devices, the purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, gloves and other protective equipment for photostat and other machine operators, payment in advance for subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, and contract stenographic reporting services, as may be necessary, as authorized under Title VII of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, and under sections 315, 316, 317, and 318 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved September 21, 1922, $738,000, of which amount not to exceed $502,470 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia and not to exceed $2,000 for expenses, except membership fees, of attendance at meetings concerned with subjects under investigation by the commission: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any member of the United States Tariff Commission who shall hereafter participate in any proceedings under said sections 315, 316, 317, and 318 of said act, approved September 21, 1922, wherein he or any member of his family has any special, direct, and pecuniary interest, or in which he has acted as attorney or special representative.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee whether the amount asked for the use of the Tariff Commission has been granted by the committee.

Mr. WOOD. I will state to the gentleman that the amount recommended by the committee is the amount recommended by the Budget and $68,000 or $70,000 more than they had last year.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I am interested in several cases pending before the Tariff Commission, and they complain that their funds are so limited that they can not carry out the work for which the commission was created.

Mr. WOOD. I think with a little bit of cooperation between the members of the committee and less favoritism and less diversification in political ideas they can get all of the facts for the information of the President on the amount appropriated. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Under the law they are compelled to make all the investigations called for and they ought to have the means to do so.

Mr. WOOD. They are not compelled to make any investigations except those submitted to them on request. They can discriminate between those they think important and those that they think are not important. I think they will get along pretty well with the amount of money we give them.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I know of cases in which I am interested that have dragged along for months, and every time I call attention to them they say that they are limited in the amount of money, and it seems to me that it is impossible for them to carry out the purposes for which the commission was created.

Mr. WOOD. There are several important matters before the Tariff Commission. Their findings of fact for the information of the President are very important to the people of the United States and those interested in the business that is involved in the investigation. Several of them are with reference to the agricultural products, and I think it is very important that this commission should make a report of the findings of fact as soon as possible. We went into the thing thoroughly, and we are convinced that if these gentlemen would apply themselves to things that are vital, they can get all the facts for the President, so that he can get his information without much delay.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I will say that the commission has been in existence for a great many years, and I think they have not made more than two score recommendations in important cases. This commission was created for a specific purpose, and if this purpose can not be carried out, then the commission may as well be abolished. If they are limited on account of funds, those funds ought to be supplied to them. There is no sense in creating a commission and then not giving it means to carry on.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, since this commission was organized there have been some 73 investigations made by it, and I think some 29 reports filed. Of those, there have been some 13 or 14 that have been acted upon by the President. I hold no brief for this commission. The whole thing is wrong. We ought to have a Tariff Commission that is in sympathy with the administration, and not a Tariff Commission that is divided against itself, each member contending for the principle in matters of political economy for which he stands. Our Democratic brothers had the right idea of it, because they abolished the Tariff Commission by striking out the appropriation. If I had a tariff commission of my own creation, I would have one that would be in sympathy with the Democrats in their cry of a tariff for revenue only or free trade—which would be the most damnable thing that could possibly happen to the country—in time of Democratic administration, and when the Republicans were in power I would have one that was for a protective tariff with a rising ascendency.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. The gentleman has expressed my idea in respect to it.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the appropriation providing for the Tariff Commission not only in a general way but very much for the same reason that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COLE] has indicated his interest. I note that the proposed appropriation for the next year is an increase of $68,000 over what they have during the present fiscal year. I trust that the judgment of the chairman of the subcommittee is correct when he states that he believes that this increase will be a sufficient amount to take care of applications for increases and decreases under the flexible provisions of the act.

Yet this ought to be remembered: During the last fiscal year the appropriation provided was at least forty or fifty thousand dollars less than the Tariff Commission needed for these very purposes, and an item of about that amount was inserted for the commission in the so-called deficiency appropriation bill, which was passed by the House but which was not acted on in the other body, due to the filibuster which took place during the closing days of the Congress. Failure of that bill meant several months' delay in the prosecution of this work. Nothing was done on many applications pending until the beginning of this fiscal year; that is, after July 1.

A great many applications are pending before that commission. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has stated, there have been 29 reports made, but, gentlemen, there have been as many as 319 applications filed since the passage of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act, under the so-called flexible provisions of that act. At any rate, that many people, or, rather, industries or organizations or associations, have felt that there is need for either increases or decreases of tariff rates due to differences that exist one way or the other with reference to the cost of production in this country and in competing countries from the prescribed rate, and out of those 318 they have chosen only 73 so far in which to make any investigation and 29 reports have been made. Presumably those chosen are deemed of the greater importance.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In view of what the gentleman has just stated of dissatisfaction on the part of so many industries with reference to present tariff schedules, does not the gentleman think that ought to be an inducement to his party here in the House to undertake to revise those schedules at this session of Congress?

Mr. BURTNESS. Of course, the gentleman realizes that that is a very controversial question and one that can not be discussed in 5 or 10 minutes. I am frank to say, however, that, in my judgment, the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act was passed under conditions not entirely normal, and that it is only reasonable—in fact it was inevitable—that many rates have become out of line, and that a number of revisions should be made in the act either through the methods provided by the flexible provisions of the act or by a general revision. A year when a political campaign is held is usually not a year conducive to clear and impartial thinking for a general revision by legislation. A careful revision should, however, be undertaken at the earliest practical date. But let us come back to the question I arose to discuss. There is throughout the country a tremendous dissatisfaction because of the delay of the applications made before this commission. I have been much interested in some of these investigations and have almost constantly kept in touch with them. One of the first and one of the chief and most comprehensive investigations was made with reference to wheat a number of years ago, and the duty was increased thereon. The investigation conducted was thorough and it took considerable time. The agricultural sections of the country to-day are interested in many applications that are pending before that commission, and I want to read portions of a letter from the secretary of the commission, which indicates the length of time that it takes now to conduct an investigation and reach a conclusion after application is made. Some have charged that the duty on pig iron was increased all of a sudden, but that it takes a tremendous length of time to get the duty increased on butter, or flax, or corn, or onions, or beans, or farm products. I desired to learn the exact facts as to this charge and therefore made an inquiry of the commission to ascertain just the time when two different typical applications were made and the various steps taken thereon. I chose one agricultural crop and one product of industry. My inquiry was made with respect to flax, in which we are tremendously interested in the Northwest, and with reference to pig iron. I read from the letter in reply, which I shall insert by way of extension, if I get permission later on.

Our records show that applications for an investigation with respect to flaxseed were filed on November 28 and December 4, 1923, and on March 11 and 24 and May 15, 1926.

The investigation was instituted by resolution of the commission adopted on August 4, 1926. Domestic field work was begun on November 29, 1926, and was finished on January 20, 1927.

Our producers of flaxseed believe they are entitled to an increase. Prices thereon at the local elevator are low. Many do not realize that an investigation into the costs of production in this and competing countries is required at all, so see no need of delay. But those who recognize the necessity of an investigation can not understand the interminable time required. In the case of flaxseed the first two applications made back in 1923 were disregarded, but there was such a pressure brought to bear by many of us for investigations in the spring of 1926 that they yielded to that pressure, and an investigation was ordered on August 4, 1926.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. What does that mean? That is almost 18 months ago. The letter from which I have quoted states the domestic field work was begun on November 29, 1926, and was finished on January 20, 1927. Why the delay from August 4 to November 29 before sending the investigators into the field?

The length of time required for the investigation in this country with regard to actual work in the field was not extraordinary—a couple of months.

I do not think anyone objects to that, but months had intervened between the application and the time at which they started on the prosecution of the required work. Now, a whole year and more has gone by since the investigators proceeded to ascertain the facts, and as yet we have no information, so far as general information given out to the public is concerned, up to this time. It is true the Argentinian authorities objected to this country sending down investigators to investigate the cost of flax production in Argentina. They tell us, however, they are now proceeding to ascertain the cost of flaxseed by invoices and other methods. But a year has gone by since the investigation into domestic costs was completed in this country, and therefore you can not blame the people who are interested in an industry of that sort if they do lose their patience.

I think it is rather unfair, however, for anyone to say that that is the way they are treating applications on agricultural products and that they are treating other products differently. I personally can find no evidence of favoritism. I find, for instance, that the application with reference to the duty on pig iron was filed way back on December 13, 1922; the order directing that the investigation should be made was entered on March 27, 1923, and the proclamation increasing the duty was issued on February 23, 1927, or four years after the investigation was instituted. You see, the delay is about equally bad in all cases. I do not know whether pig iron needed an increase or not. I am not certain whether, after costs of production are obtained here and in Argentina, flaxseed will be shown entitled to an increase above 40 cents per bushel or not. Some of us think that it will. But I do feel this way about it, that whether an application involves an agricultural product or a manufactured product, whether it involves a decrease or an increase in the rate of duty, we ought to have some sort of method so that three or four years will not be required before an investigation into costs of production is completed.

If there is not enough money provided in this bill for prompt investigations, then I sincerely hope that sufficient money will be forthcoming in a later appropriation, because, as I suggested, the patience of many people who are vitally interested in questions of this kind is almost exhausted. Some of us feel the investigations are also too extended and too meticulous and that more practical methods might be devised.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Is it not correct that of the increases referred to by the gentleman which were granted, two-thirds of them were on products relating to agriculture?

Mr. BURTNESS. No; not exactly. I shall be very glad to answer that question exactly by inserting in the RECORD another statement I have here giving the subjects with respect to which the President has proclaimed changes. Some are important to agriculture. Outstanding among them, so far as agriculture is concerned, are wheat, butter, cheese, and cherries.

When I mention butter let me call your attention to this fact: The increase on butter went into effect March 6, 1926—the proclamation was made then but went into effect 30 days later, on April 5, 1926. Immediately after that went into effect it was shown that through the failure to carry a proper increase also into the duty on cream, the increase provided for by that proclamation was evaded considerably by shipments coming in from Canada. That is, they shipped in cream instead of butter, cream being still at the former rate. It is now two years since that situation arose, and nothing has been done with reference to it, so far as results are concerned. I presume that investigations are still going on upon an application to change the duty on cream. But it emphasizes the need of investigations which shall be more prompt than is the case at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has again expired.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, particularly by inserting the letter and the statement to which I referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION,
Washington, January 19, 1928.

Hon. O. B. BURTNESS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BURTNESS: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of December 31, 1927, inquiring as to the various steps taken in the pending investigation by the Tariff Commission of the costs of production of flaxseed and in the completed investigation with respect to the costs of production of pig iron.

Our records show that applications for an investigation with respect to flaxseed were filed on November 28 and December 4, 1923, and on March 11 and 24 and May 15, 1926.

The investigation was instituted by resolution of the commission adopted on August 4, 1926. Domestic field work was begun on November 29, 1926, and was finished on January 20, 1927. Under the plans for the investigation as developed agents of the commission were to depart for Argentina on September 24, 1927. Prior to that date, however, and because of objections raised by the Government of Argentina, this portion of the field work was abandoned and the efforts of the commission were turned to the procurement of invoice data and other available information from which to calculate the costs of production of flaxseed in Argentina. When the procurement of these data is completed the commission will analyze them as promptly as may be practicable and will summarize the results in a preliminary statement of information which will be issued for the use of interested parties. It is difficult to estimate when this work can be finished, in view of the number of agricultural investigations now in progress and the small force available to the commission.

In the case of pig iron the application was received on December 13, 1922. The investigation was instituted by order of the commission on March 27, 1923. The public hearing was held on April 20, 1926. Briefs were filed on May 5, 1926. The commission's report was transmitted to the President on February 2, 1927, and the President's proclamation increasing the rate of duty was issued on February 23, 1927.

In this investigation foreign costs of production were ascertained by reference to invoice and other available data. No agents of the commission were sent abroad for that purpose.

Very truly yours,

JOHN F. BETHUNE, Secretary.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], the distinguished chairman of this subcommittee, with reference to the work of the Tariff Commission. I think they have done some very good work, and I think also that by reason of the work they have done various industries, including agriculture, have been benefited therefrom.

Now, it is possible that they might work a little better if they were organized along the lines the gentleman has suggested; but be that as it may, Congress has laid down these flexible provisions for the changing of the tariff schedule by schedule, and we ought to provide them with necessary funds, so that they can go out and do the work that Congress has ordered them to do.

The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] mentioned butter. It seems to me that at the time the commission was considering butter they should, through their own initiative, have considered cream, milk, cheese, and other products that are so closely related to butter. That is one of the primary principles of tariff legislation, that you ought not change the duty on one commodity without also changing the duties of other commodities closely connected with it. I received in the mail, I think this week, some notes of hearings on milk and cream, whereas that whole question should have been determined at the time the duty on butter was raised. Now, there have been delays, and I presume that practically every one of us knows of cases where the commission has been delayed acting upon urgent applications.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Speaking of delays, I would like to remind the gentleman that the Tariff Commission ordered a hearing on the 15th of July, 1926, and the report is only now being mimeographed, a year and a half afterward. At the time the commission held the investigation they assured us the report would be issued by October 1; then the date was postponed until January 1. I am wondering whether the Committee on Ways and Means should not take some cognizance of the situation down there. They are just milling around and getting nowhere.

Mr. NEWTON. What the gentleman has related with reference to that particular commodity is only typical of the experience that others have had with respect to other commodities. It seems to me that Congress fixes a general policy as to adjusting tariff schedules through these flexible provisions that we ought not to leave the Director of the Budget the sole privilege of saying how much money they should have.

Mr. KNUTSON. The Tariff Commission takes two years to arrive at a decision, and in a case of that kind what do they base that decision on? Upon information which they gathered? That might have been two years before the time when they make their report.

Mr. NEWTON. There is merit in the gentleman's suggestion, and that by the time they do act the industry may be beyond redemption. If this is due to money then we ought to give them more money; and, of course, we can not dump it all in one year, because they can only train a certain number of technical and expert employees in a given year. I hope that as to these Government agencies that are really agents of Congress—and that is true of the Tariff Commission—we will give them the money they reasonably think they can expend during a given year so they can keep their work current.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. HALE. What explanation, if any, does the Tariff Commission give for these delays? Do they charge it to the lack of funds?

Mr. NEWTON. That is one of the explanations they give, that they have not been given sufficient money. There may be others. One other explanation is that they have a great deal of difficulty in going into countries and finding out in those foreign countries just what it costs. It seems to me they ought to be able to arrive at a pretty good estimate of the cost through other methods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Is not an additional reason they urge the fact that they have been deluged with a very large number of applications for investigations?

Mr. NEWTON. They have been. I do not know that is the reason, but I can well see where it might be. No doubt they have been deluged with a large number of applications.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I recall very distinctly going to the commission with the gentleman from Minnesota at the time this granite matter was up, and I recall even more clearly the fact that within a few months I have taken up the matter of the rug industry in an endeavor to work out some method of adequate protection for the hooked-rug industry, which is of serious consequence, I think, in many of the rural sections of this Union, but I can not get any assurance or even encouragement that that inquiry can be reached short of years.

Mr. KNUTSON. May I say to the gentleman that they have the peanut schedule up now, and that is going to take some time.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. In regard to the delays, the number of applications can not be urged as the reason for those delays because while the applications have been made they have not considered them. They have only considered 73 items, and it does not make any difference how many applications may have been made so long as they have not given them any consideration. As I say, they have considered only 73, and they told me this morning they did not take them up faster or dispose of them faster because of a lack of money with which to do the work.

Mr. KNUTSON. May I interrupt to say that more money is not going to cure the situation down there. They are wasting a lot of time in debating the whichness and what not, where and when. They are the most meticulous people down there we have here in Washington, and some of their minds seem to travel in circles.

Mr. NEWTON. I know that my colleague from Minnesota has been very industrious and insistent with reference to the commodity he referred to, and that is true of others. So there ought to be some remedy afforded in order that we may get some action.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I think it should be stated, in all fairness to the commission, that they occupy a very considerable time on important matters. For instance, I will refer to one instance. The investigation was instituted March 27, 1923, and hearings were held July 17, 1923, and September 6, 1923. After those hearings it required the commission more than three years to make its report to the President. The report was dated October 2, 1926. That was an item in which a decrease in the tariff was instituted by the President, and the article was paint-brush handles. So I think it is fair to state that the commission gives consideration to these important matters.

Mr. NEWTON. But the fact remains, gentlemen, that unless we are to have some general tariff revision and spend about two years at it, with all of the uncertainties that would bring, help and assistance to individual industries must lie, for awhile, at least, through the use of these flexible provisions of the tariff law. There are demands for tariff changes and, it seems to me, we ought to give them all of the money they feel they can reasonably use.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Does the gentleman think they are really flexible?

Mr. KNUTSON. They have certainly stretched them out to a great length.

Mr. NEWTON. They are clearly flexible, although they have not "flexed" in certain directions as much as we would like to have them.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. Gentlemen, I paid my respects to the Tariff Commission on Friday last. I could not find temperate enough language then to express myself with reference to this commission, and after thinking it over I do not think I can find a sufficient vocabulary to express myself now with reference to it. I would like to direct the attention of the Members of the House to the great speech of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], on January 16–23, 1926, with reference to this Tariff Commission. If anybody can read that speech and not be convinced and convicted of the uselessness of this Tariff Commission, I can not follow his mental processes of reasoning.

Let us look at the proviso in this paragraph of the bill. Why is it there? The proviso is:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any member of the United States Tariff Commission who shall hereafter participate in any proceedings under said sections 315, 316, 317, and 318 of said act, approved September 21, 1922, wherein he or any member of his family has any special, direct, and pecuniary interest, or in which he has acted as attorney or special representative.

Read Senator NORRIS's speech and you will find why this proviso was inserted. They had a member of the Tariff Commission whose family had $200,000 of stock in a corporation interested in sugar. The sugar schedule was up for investigation by the Tariff Commission. The commission stood 3 and 3. They tried to get him to disqualify, but he refused. He voted on his own case. Finally Congress put in this proviso and Mr. Glassie was disqualified.

A former Member of Congress, David Lewis, a man of the highest integrity, great industry, and very great ability; a man who is an expert on tariff matters, was a member of the commission. His time expired in September of 1924, just before a presidential election. Another member of the commission was sent to him with a commission of reappointment with the suggestion that he would be reappointed conditioned that he would tender his resignation in blank, which could be accepted by the President at the President's will. High minded as Mr. Lewis is, of course he refused to do this. He was sent for by the President and the President asked him if he had this letter—meaning the letter of resignation. He declined, of course, to file any such resignation. He was reappointed, the election came on, but his name did not go to the Senate.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield? Does not the gentleman think if the President had an undated letter of resignation from every member of the Tariff Commission we would be better off? [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. I would accept one from them all, so far as I am concerned; but I am just telling you how the appointments are manipulated. Another member of the commission who favored a reduction of the duty on sugar—Mr. Culbertson, a man of high character—was given a diplomatic post. Lewis's name was not sent to the Senate, and then Culbertson was given another position; but in the meantime the commission had recommended a reduction of one-half cent a pound on sugar. This pended until after the election, and then in June of 1925 this was refused by the President.

Now, let me show you how many decreases there have been by the commission. We have been appropriating $750,000, on the average, a year for the Tariff Commission. There has been a reduction on phenol, there has been a reduction on paintbrush handles, there has been a reduction on mill feed, and there has been a reduction on bobwhite quail—four articles. [Laughter.]

If any man in the House or in the country will read Senator NORRIS's speech he will know something about the proceedings of this commission, and if he then thinks it has justified itself, all right and good.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. Does not the gentleman think the commission has done some good in reference to raising some of the agricultural schedules?

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will read my speech of last Friday, when I had enough time to pay my respects to that commission, the gentleman will understand I have no sympathy whatever with it. As long as the commission is as it is constituted, I would vote to eliminate the appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery and printing and binding, $640.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, it is sometimes a relief to turn from the stress and turmoil of issues to something entirely different. I want to talk to you just a little while about a personality.

One of the most interesting characters that I have met during my period of service in the Congress is Congressman EDGAR HOWARD, of Nebraska. He is sometimes referred to as the wit of the House. And, judging from his never-failing good humor and his incisive and sparkling manner of speech, we can not help thinking that he deserves the title.

Almost always, however, hidden away, even in his humor, is the point that he wants to drive home, and his wit thus becomes a means to an end. Frequently, when Members of the House are laughing at one of his sallies, they are made suddenly to realize in a few words more than is sometimes told in an entire speech. One can not help recalling the striking question which he asked, and which he attributed to one Will Rogers, when he demanded to know "Why are we in Nicaragua and what the h——l are we doing there?" In the one question, put seemingly in fun, he clearly stated the position which not only he but a good many others have taken as to our much-disputed activities in that far southern land.

But he also has a serious side to his nature. He writes occasional editorials for a paper in which he is interested and which he formerly edited in his home city of Columbus, Nebr. In these editorials are to be found a running-fire comment on the public questions of the day, especially in regard to affairs in Washington. Recently in one of these editorials he paid his respects to the tax reduction bill as it passed the House, and the reason for certain opposition thereto. This editorial speaks for itself. I have not checked the facts as given, but Mr. HOWARD usually knows what he is talking about. The strength and soberness of this article, coming as it does from one whose remarks are sometimes regarded as facetious rather than otherwise, gives added force to this very earnest analysis of the reasons for the activities of some of those who are trying to delay the much-desired tax-reduction program. I think it deserves a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and this is the purpose for which I arose. It is as follows:

A $3,000,000 REASON

Many persons have expressed surprise at the action of Andrew Mellon and his group of financiers in opposing the new revenue bill as passed by the House of Representatives.

No surprise about it.

That new revenue bill, if it shall pass the Senate and be approved by the President in its present form, will make the Mellon group of corporations pay $6,000,000 more income tax than is paid by that group under the present law.

How does this happen?

Well, under the existing law a few hundred gigantic corporations are permitted to assemble in their income-tax returns the earnings and losses of thousands of little corporations which they own or control, and by that kind of business they are enabled to gyp the Government out of $6,000,000 annually, according to estimates made by men who have made deep study of the income-tax problem. In the new revenue bill every corporation, no matter how large or small, is compelled to make its own income-tax report. This provision in the bill was put over in the House despite the frantic protests of all the administration leaders. The bill has now gone to the Senate, and there the spokesman for the administration and the Mellon group of bankers (both being one in voice and plan) boldly state that the bill will not be allowed to pass as long as it shall contain that provision which requires each corporation to file a separate income-tax report.

Let me give just one instance of how the big fellows have been able to cheat the Government out of income-tax money. One certain of the big "mother" corporations, which owns a large number of "children" corporations, had trouble with a competitor which refused to permit the big corporation to dictate the price at which it must sell its products. Then the big "mother" corporation decided to put that "unreasonable" competitor out of business. How did it go about it? Why, it ordered one of its own "children" corporations, located near the "unreasonable" competitor, to sell its product at a price far below cost. The unreasonable competitor made a brave effort to meet the stiff competition, but at last went broke, and then went out of business, leaving a clear field for the big "mother" corporation's child which operated in that territory. It cost a lot of money for the big "mother" corporation to put that competitor out of business, but the loss was soon made up after competition was destroyed, and after prices had gone back to their old high level, as they promptly went after the competition had been destroyed.

But what has all this to do with income-tax returns?

Well, under the existing law the "mother" corporation reported the loss which her own child corporation had suffered when selling products at less than cost, in order to crush competition—reported it as a loss suffered by the "mother" corporation, and that amount of loss was deducted from profits of the big "mother" corporation when making its income-tax return. If the "child" corporation had filed its own income-tax return, showing a big loss, of course, it would not have had any tax to pay. But the big "mother" corporation comes along and lists that loss by its own "child" corporation as its own, thus reducing the volume of its own net profits, and escaping the heavy tax the "mother" corporation would have been compelled to pay if the law had not allowed the "mother" to list as her own the loss sustained by her "child" corporation in driving that competitor out of business.

Not hard to understand, is it?

I do not claim to understand all about the doings of the big boys in the game of finance and the game of government, both being about the same thing here in Washington. But there are men in this great city who keep tab on the big fellows, and are able to solve their curves. I have been talking to the understanding ones, and they tell me that if the new revenue bill should go through the Senate and be approved by President Coolidge in the form in which it passed the House, requiring the "mother" corporations and the "children" corporations each to file a separate income-tax return, the result would be to increase the tax on the "mother" corporations to the extent of more than $6,000,000. I can not positively say that this is a correct estimate of the amount, but I believe it is close to correct. And the further estimate has been made that if the new revenue bill shall become the law of the land it will cost Andrew Mellon and the Mellon family interests an increase of $3,000,000 in the income tax they will be required to pay.

Quite naturally Mussolini Mellon shows his teeth and declares that the new revenue bill shall not pass.

And the worst of it is that Mellon appears to have the power to make good his boast.

EDGAR HOWARD.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD

For seven commissioners at $12,000 each per annum, secretary $7,500, during the present incumbency; and in the event of a change in incumbency the salary of such position shall be in accordance with the provisions of the classification act of 1923 and section 2 of this act, in all, $91,500.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language "Secretary, $7,500, during the present incumbency." The classification act of 1923 fixes this salary and this is new legislation.

Mr. WOOD. I wish the gentleman would reserve his point of order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will be pleased to reserve it.

Mr. WOOD. I call the attention of the gentleman and the committee to the fact that the secretary to the Shipping Board does the same character of work as do the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the secretary of several other concerns. Under the peculiar position in which he finds himself under the classification arrangement, unless some relief is brought to him the board will lose him. This man has been a very efficient officer, and, to my mind, he has earned a service that ought to be recognized—in the saving of thousands of dollars to the Government and his courteous manner of treatment for everybody. Of course, this is subject to a point of order if the gentleman from New Jersey insists upon it.

I will state to the gentleman from New Jersey that this man occupies the same relation in reference to the control that other gentlemen have who are getting $10,000 per annum. If the gentleman will refer to page 811 of the hearings he will find what this man's duties are. We went into that matter at great length.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If he can not get what others in the same grade are getting under the circumstances, that is not the fault of the act but on account of the provision you carry in section 2. If that is your policy and applicable to all employees of the various services of the Government, why do you make an exception in this particular case?

Mr. WOOD. We are not making an exception. Two years ago we did the same thing in reference to the secretary of the Civil Service Commission, and there was no objection made because of the fact that everybody was agreed that the service warranted it. If it was true then it is infinitely more true now, for the service this man is rendering is very great.

Mr. LEHLBACH. You are taking care of this particular case. If the gentleman will turn to the limitation he has put on these salaries under the classification, he says:

And in grades in which only one position is allocated, the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade.

That is what you rely on for this specific case. But you go on and say:

Except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade, advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade.

Now, if this is a meritorious case, we have the law here.

Mr. WOOD. Yes; and that is what we are doing. This is a most meritorious case and we have made the exception.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Let the promotion be made by the board as contemplated by the act.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman knows that the board will never do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Chair suggests that something should be done with the balance of this paragraph.

Mr. WOOD. An amendment will be offered later. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TILSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9481, the independent offices bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein certain resolutions adopted by the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation and the Minnesota Livestock Breeders' Association on the subject of agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I regret to object, I have been objecting to the insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of miscellaneous resolutions and editorials and matters of that kind. We have a rule of the House which provides that resolutions and memorials and communications of that kind shall be dropped into the basket in the Speaker's table and referred by him to the appropriate committee.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KVALE. This very morning resolutions regarding Muscle Shoals were inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Oh, those were not resolutions. The matter presented by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] was a communication from a public utilities commission of a sovereign State. If the gentleman wants to extend his remarks on any subject, including, of course, subjects of legislation covered by these resolutions, I shall not object, but I dare say there is not a Member of the House who does not daily receive from one to a dozen copies of different resolutions dealing with various subjects. If we inserted them all into the RECORD, it would make it unduly large. It was for this reason that the House adopted a rule which requires that such resolutions and memorials shall be dropped in the basket on the Speaker's table and referred by him to the appropriate committee. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request.

Mr. KVALE. I have not taken up very much space in the RECORD, but if the gentleman objects I shall withdraw my request for the time being.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. HANCOCK, at the request of Mr. SWEET, on account of illness.

Mr. KINDRED, indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair announces the change of reference of H. J. Res. 176 from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on the Judiciary, the chairman of both committees having agreed to the change.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I venture to suggest that just the will of the chairman of the two committees under an agreement privately made ought not to be sufficient to change a reference. I submit it should be put before the House that without objection the change will be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has the following information, if the gentleman from Tennessee will permit: A somewhat similar resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That has been considered by that committee and was later reported to the House and the resolution agreed to. This is a resolution on a similar subject.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not interposing objection because I do not know what the subject matter is. What I was really directing attention to was the simple announcement of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course, it can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. After a bill or resolution has been introduced and has been referred it has then reached a stage where the House itself has a right in the matter, without any reference to the will or wish of the respective chairmen of committees. I interpose no objection to its being rereferred under the statement of the Chair, but I think we ought always to know what those things are about.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the title of the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 176

Joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to an agreement or pact entered into between the State of Wisconsin and the State of Michigan for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a highway bridge across the Menominee River.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My recollection is that it is the custom to refer all such resolutions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the impression of the Chair. Is there objection to the change of reference?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they presented to the President of the United States for his approval a bill of the following title:

A bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred to the appropriate committee, as follows:

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior reporting, pursuant to law, relative to documents and files of papers in the department which are not needed or useful in the transaction of current business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and asking for action looking toward their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. NYE and Mr. PITTMAN members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

INVESTIGATION OF SINKING OF SUBMARINE "S–4"

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I would like to ask unanimous consent to call up Calendar No. 78, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 131) providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S–4, and upon methods and appliances for the protection of submarines.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I object; and I will state that I shall not consent to the consideration of the measure until the Senate itself shall have the disposal of it when it comes here. We spent almost one day in discussion of it and then it was withdrawn. The next time it comes before the Senate I think it proper that the Senate shall have the disposal of it, and not one Member of the Senate who can interpose and withdraw it from consideration whenever he pleases.

Mr. HALE. The joint resolution was withdrawn because certain Senators were not here who wished to address the Senate during its consideration. I would like to have it brought up at the earliest possible moment. It is an important measure that should be settled, and the commission, whatever it may be, should get to work on an investigation of the disaster.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator can move to bring it up in the regular way. He had nearly a whole day devoted to the consideration of the joint resolution, and then he withdrew it because, as I thought, he could not get it passed.

Mr. HALE. It could not have been finished that afternoon under any circumstances.

Mr. SWANSON. I object.

Mr. HALE. I give notice that I shall move to take it up at the earliest possible moment; if not before, immediately following the final disposition of the pending unfinished business, the merchant marine bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in this connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "What is the truth about the S–4?" written by Mr. Courtenay Terrett, a newspaper correspondent who was present all the while during the activities of the Government to recover the submarine and rescue its inmates. The article appears in the Outlook for January 11, 1928. I had intended to have it read to the Senate, but it is too long, so I am going to content myself by asking unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD. But I want to call the attention of Senators to the article, written by this newspaper man of repute, I understand, as being worthy of their reading and consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

WHAT IS THE TRUTH ABOUT THE "S–4"?

By Courtenay Terrett

(Mr. Terrett was one of the correspondents who went to Provincetown to see the Navy rescue six living men trapped in the torpedo room of the sunken submarine S–4. The effort quickly degenerated into a plain job of salvage. The story Mr. Terrett tells of the actual consideration given to salvaging the ship as opposed to saving the lives of its survivors, is not pleasant reading. It may be, as he says, that suitable explanations can be made to naval boards of inquiry and congressional committees; but his facts are hard facts, and one or two are capable of a sinister interpretation.)

The sea wind riffled the water and broke up the white-gold patches of reflected light into shimmering streaks. The scattered fleet seemed to lie in a restless moonlit sky, the anchor chains barnacled with stars.

All but one vessel.

The Falcon, long and low, stood out as whitely against the liquid darkness as a medieval painting of the Holy Grail. Batteries of strong lights scoured the decks on which 200 men were working late and hard, and the illumination ran off to spread in a glowing film over the waters around the ship.

At the stern two hose lines trailed off into the burnished water, and a diver, whiter in his rubber suit than a naked man, stood clumsy and hideous on a platform slung out over the rail by a crane. He was going below, 17 fathoms under that bright surface, where lay the gashed and flooded carcass of the submarine S–4.

The two hose lines led down to her. One had been made fast two hours earlier, at 1 o'clock, and was now pumping sweet, living air into the fetid forward torpedo compartment. It was this diver's purpose to attach the second air hose.

One would have thought that men were being saved from death, that these measures were parts of a rescue operation.

Indeed, they might have been but for one fact:

The six men who had survived the submarine's quick plunge to sea bottom happened to be dead, and not all the air covering the earth nor all the divers in all the navies could bring them back to life.

This was midnight of Wednesday, December 21, and they had been dead for hours if not for days.

It had been the preceding Saturday afternoon that the rum-chasing Coast Guard destroyer Paulding, seeing nothing of the submarine tender Wandank or its flag warning that a submarine was running on the test course outside Provincetown Harbor, had slashed into the ascending S–4, cut her halfway through amidship and sent her to the bottom with tons of green sea water in her belly. Thirty-four men died then.

Explanations will be offered as to why air was not pumped in to the six living men on Sunday afternoon, when it was pumped in, three days later, to six dead men.

There will be technical explanations offered by men anxious to explain, and they may satisfy a naval board of inquiry or a congressional investigation.

But they will never satisfy those of us who for five maddening days watched a slowly assembling fleet of rescue ships, equipped with the best available apparatus and manned by a thousand experienced men, lying over the sunken submarine and accomplishing nothing toward saving those six known survivors.

In retrospect it seems that rescue was never in the Navy's plan, but only the salvage of a fighting machine which cost upward of $3,000,000 to build and might be reconditioned at an expense less than replacement.

This view is unfair, perhaps, for there were men and officers in that fleet who were feverishly anxious to do something, anything, that might save the six, and who were heart-sick and incautiously resentful when they knew that the chance had passed. Yet the facts are challenging.

The Coast Guards men located the S–4's resting place Saturday night after dragging the ocean floor for hours from small boats, and a buoy was put down to mark the spot.

Already the destroyer Sturtevant and the mine sweeper Lark were at the scene. The Lark had diving equipment aboard, but it was not used that night. Morning found the Bushnell, fitted for divers, the Falcon, bearing the fullest of diving equipment, and the mine sweeper Mallard at the scene, and displayed a sea far calmer than that of the night before. Yet it was well past noon on Sunday before the first diver went down; for, though ships were watching all through the night, the marking buoy had broken free and the S–4's position was lost.

Again the small boats swept and dragged the sea bed. Hours passed, and no man knew whether 40 men lived below. At length the Coast Guards men found the S–4 again. Another buoy was put over to mark the spot. Divers on the Falcon climbed into their awkward dress and slowly descended through the 102 feet of sea.

They found, down in the darkness of 17 fathoms, the ship resting on an even keel. A deep wound half severed her, slashing through the control room below the conning tower, and her deck was a tangle of wires and rails and twisted plates.

The divers plodded around through the mud, exploring the wreck. Thomas Eadie, one of the best of them, tapped a bar against the plates of the forward torpedo compartment and got a muffled answer. He went aloft, slowly, and into the decompression chamber, and came out to announce that men still lived down below.

Other divers went down. They confirmed Eadie. Finally, late, an air line was run over the Falcon's stern and a diver attached it to the wreck.

It was not run to the compartment where men were known to be alive. It was attached to another part of the ship. Secretary Wilbur says that it was attached to the general air-distributing system. But the men at the scene that night announced that it had been attached to the forward ballast tanks, and explained that its purpose was to push some of the water out of the S–4 and lighten her for raising.

Rear Admiral Frank Brumby, in command of the fleet, himself wirelessed to Washington:

"Divers now securing salvage air lines to tanks."

And a few hours later he reported, "Blowing air from Falcon to tanks."

There was no mention in those messages of sending air to the compartment where men were alive; the word "salvage" is notable, also, as being the admiral's choice over "rescue."

Simon Lake, the inventor of the even-keel submarine, says that the operation of putting an air line into the torpedo room is no more complex than boring a hole in the hull, even with an ordinary breast drill, and plugging the hose end into it as the drill was withdrawn.

Before the men died they opened the inside valve of the S-C tube, "the listening telescope" rising through the roof to project above the deck. The company which manufactures these tubes says it is "just a plumber's job" to fit a hose to them, requiring no more than five minutes and needing no special fittings. It was apparently not even considered at the time.

Instead air was pumped into the ballast tanks until after midnight.

Then, when "Whitey" Michaels, a well-known and daring diver, was brought to the surface with a bad attack of the "bends"—air bubbles in the blood system, resulting from too long exposure to great pressure—the Falcon cast off the air lines and steamed to Boston to place Michaels in a hospital.

The explanation was offered when it returned in the evening of the next day that it was the only vessel in the fleet possessing a decompression chamber and that it was necessary to keep Michaels in this chamber to save his life; further, that the increasing roughness of the sea made diving impossible, anyway.

The officers who bellowed a brief excuse over the ships' sides at reporters who hung about in wave-tossed open fishing boats angrily refused to speculate upon what the situation would be if the storm should suddenly subside with the Falcon still miles away.

Fortunately for the peace of conscience of the Falcon's officers and Admiral Brumby, the sea did stay rough all day Monday and all day Tuesday.

The rescue fleet lay about idly, impotently. The submarine S–8 lay anchored above her stricken sister and listened for signals. A few came up, slowly hammered out, piteous and yet courageous calls for air and food and water, but always for air.

Long since the air in the torpedo room had been exhausted. The six were living now upon the precious oxygen contained in five steel bottles, and they asked, "Is there any hope?"

The men up above lied, perhaps knowingly, perhaps not.

"There is hope" they signaled back.

In midafternoon Tuesday the reporters in the fishing boats saw with amazement the Bushnell and the Falcon up anchor and hurry into the harbor.

They followed the Navy ships into the harbor and, while junior officers howled angry orders to keep off, the newspaper men called for the admiral. He came to the rail and identified himself by pointing to the gold braid and leaves on his uniform cap.

One newspaper man called to him, "Have you quit?"

The admiral's answer was an explosively negative.

"Then why did you come in?" he was asked.

There was another angry rumble, "Because I wanted to," he shouted and stalked into his cabin out of earshot of other annoying inquiries.

The attitude of hostility toward the press—an attitude that this was purely a Navy matter and that the public had no right to be interested in what was being done to save six men imprisoned at the sea bottom—was relaxed only once in the first three days of the "rescue."

The exception was Captain Struthers's courteous reception of a boatload of newspaper men Monday afternoon. He assisted them in boarding the Bushnell and offered coffee and sandwiches. But what they wanted was information.

They asked what was being done, what was going to be done, what could be done. He hesitated, evaded. They asked if further messages had been received from the doomed six. He said vaguely that there had been one "some time that morning about oxygen bottles." They asked for its literal reading. They asked if the names of the imprisoned six had not been communicated in any of the messages. They asked many questions and got few answers.

They went ashore and found that the information they sought, and which in some cases the Bushnell's commander had denied knowing, had been given out at Washington.

It was on Tuesday, the day marked by the admiral's unexplained retreat from the open sea to the harbor's comfort, that the possibility of introducing an air line by way of the S-C tube was first mentioned.

Until that time the discussion of getting air to the men in the S–4 had centered about introducing oxygen bottles into the torpedo tubes, a process necessitating the fitting of water-tight collars about the bottles to make it fit the tubes.

Then, apparently, some one recollected that the S-C tube, or listening device projecting up through the deck from the torpedo room, might afford an inlet. Fitted with a pet-cock valve inside, it provided a 2-inch pipe through which air might be pumped.

Junior officers were asked—for those in authority did not care to be asked questions—why this had not been thought of while the divers were down Sunday afternoon. They said, defensively, that the process was also one requiring special fittings and would take time.

A sailor commented in a low voice, "Any dumb plumber could do it in five minutes."

The even easier method of merely boring a hole in the hull and quickly plugging it with the end of an air line was dismissed as totally unfeasible.

On these two days while the fleet lay idle it was supplemented by the arrival of tugs towing pontoons, by two great derrick lighters from Brooklyn. These devices, necessary to any operation with a view to raising the submarine, had been started long after the news of the S–4's sinking.

The pontoons had not been started until Sunday morning instead of Saturday evening, and one of them, springing a leak, held half of them back a full day in the slow tow from Brooklyn to Provincetown.

But all was in readiness when Wednesday dawned. The bright sun showed a sea that was smooth and clear. Within the harbor the water scarcely rippled, and outside Long Point the waves were as slight as on any fine summer day. Yet the press boats, hurrying out with the expectation of finding divers busy and rescue operations progressing with feverish haste, found nothing being done. At 11 o'clock no diver had gone over the side.

At 1 o'clock the newspaper men discovered that once more small boats were out trailing hawsers, dragging the sea bed.

One of them was hailed: "What are you looking for?"

"The sub," called back a sailor, and a petty officer slapped him on the back with an order: "Keep your damn mouth shut."

On the Falcon and on the Bushnell gold-sprigged gentlemen grew apoplectic at the inquiry as to whether the submarine had been lost a third time. Divers were already descending, they pointed out; they would not go down unless they knew where the submarine was. Nevertheless an hour later it was officially admitted at Charlestown Navy Yard in Boston that the rescue fleet had lost the S–4.

It was nearly sundown—5.27 to be exact—before the wreck was relocated.

Then the Coast Guards men rediscovered it for the third time. A buoy, the third, was again attached. Divers went down into the water, which the burning floodlights pierced for a few feet. Underwater lights were lowered with them, and with fair facility an air line was finally attached to the S-C tube.

The diver who made it fast—at 11 o'clock—reported that the inner valve of the tube had been opened by the men in the submarine.

There had been no message, no coherent, intelligible signal from below for more than 24 hours.

The six men were dead and everyone knew it, but the air began flowing down into the compartment where they lay. In four hours the air had been entirely replaced by fresh air, it was computed.

What was the use? they asked in the fishing boats and on shore. And they answered it themselves. The Navy had to make some gesture of self-justification.

All night the Falcon's pumps forced air down through the long hose lines into the six men's crypt. The next morning a handsome and smartly tailored young officer arrived from Boston. He was instructed, he explained winningly, to establish a cordial liaison between the fleet and the newspaper men. He would make four trips a day from shore to interview Admiral Brumby and bring the information back to the reporters.

He made this explanation to the 15 men still left at the village, for more than half of the reportorial crew had already departed, knowing that no rescue story would or could be written. Only a salvage job remained.

With this officer, in charge of a petty officer, came three pulmotors, for reviving asphyxiated men.

They might have been useful 36 or 48 hours earlier. They should have been on hand on Sunday.

But then, so should the pontoons and the derricks.

So, with the equipment finally complete down to a liaison officer and a pulmotor expert, and with two hose lines still pumping air into the S–4's torpedo room, Admiral Brumby announced on Thursday noon:

"I have no doubt that there is absolutely no life aboard the S–4."

No one else had, either.

His announcement brought down puzzled queries, biting denunciations, upon the Navy Department; and next day Curtis Wilbur, the author of Susie Bear and holder of the Naval Academy tambourine-kicking record, journeyed to Provincetown, comforted his officers, and denounced their critics. Every effort, he announced, would be made, and at once, to salvage the submarine.

If all goes well, sorrowing families will have the bodies of their sons before spring.

PUBLIC HIGHWAY AT ALDERSON, W. VA.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill (S. 2215) to authorize the construction of a public highway to connect the town of Alderson with the village of Glenray, W. Va. The House passed an identical bill which came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill and that it be taken up for immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Nebraska? Without objection, the committee will be discharged and the bill will be read.

Mr. NORRIS. I will explain the bill. There can not be any objection to it. I make this request because I do not want the Senate to take up, on a call of the calendar, and pass the Senate bill when the House has passed an identically similar bill. They are word for word the same. All the bill does is to grant permission, on the part of the Government, to the town of Alderson, W. Va., to construct a highway across the Government property there.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator merely contemplates placing the House bill in the position on the calendar which the Senate bill now occupies?

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no; more than that. He asks for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask to take up the House bill now for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I suggest that the Senator should first substitute the House bill for the Senate bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that will be done.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9022) to authorize the town of Alderson, W. Va., to maintain a public highway upon the premises occupied by the Federal Industrial Institution for Women at Alderson, W. Va., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General is hereby authorized and empowered to grant to the town of Alderson, W. Va., subject to and under such conditions and regulations as the Attorney General shall from time to time prescribe, and subject to revocation at such time as in his judgment the interests of the United States require it, the right to construct and maintain upon and across the eastern end of the premises occupied and used by and for the Federal Industrial Institution for Women at Alderson, W. Va., a public highway to connect the town of Alderson with the village of Glenray.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the bill (S. 2215) to authorize the construction of a public highway to connect the town of Alderson with the village of Glenray, W. Va., be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. STEPHENS presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Concurrent Resolution 3, memorializing Congress to take over and assume flood control on the Mississippi River

Whereas flood control of the Mississippi River is obviously a matter of national interest and concern and falls within the legitimate scope of direct Federal action, the jurisdiction of the United States over the Mississippi River being paramount to that of the several States bordering thereon; and

Whereas the States bordering on the Mississippi River are wholly unable to cope with the flood situation and to prevent loss of human life and calamitous destruction of property caused by the overflowing of the river within their respective territories; and

Whereas in order to prevent further injury from floods emanating from the Mississippi River a governmental course or policy toward said situation should be adopted and immediate governmental action undertaken to restrain and control said floods: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Mississippi (the Senate concurring), That the United States Government be, and it is hereby, urged to take over and assume at the earliest practicable moment the function of flood control on the Mississippi River as a matter of entire and exclusive Federal action; and that the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to at once enact such statutes as may be necessary, proper, or incidental to said course, and to effectuate the said policy of exclusive Federal flood control in areas affected by the overflow of the Mississippi River: Be it further

Resolved, That officially certified copies of this resolution be mailed and presented to the President and Vice President of the United States and to the Members of the Congress.

Adopted by the house of representatives January 5, 1928.

Adopted by the senate January 9, 1928.

I, Walker Wood, secretary of state of the State of Mississippi, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing instrument entitled "Concurrent Resolution 3" is a true and correct copy of Concurrent Resolution 3 of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi at the 1928 session thereof as same appears on the enrolled act of said concurrent resolution now on file and a matter of record in the office of the secretary of state.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Mississippi hereunto affixed this 20th day of January, 1928.

CONDITIONS IN CHINA

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] entitled "Privilege holds China in subjection," which appeared in La Follette's Magazine for December last.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

PRIVILEGE HOLDS CHINA IN SUBJECTION—MILITARISM, GRAFT, AND PROFIT BATTLE AGAINST NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY AND DEMOCRACY FOR CELESTIALS; CRY OF BOLSHEVIK A BOGEY

By BURTON K. WHEELER, United States Senator from Montana

(Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, of Montana, author of the article that follows, as our readers well know, is one of the most progressive and fearless fighters for the public interest of his day and generation. He was the candidate for Vice President on the Independent-Progressive ticket with Robert M. La Follette in the 1924 presidential campaign, in which Senator WHEELER made a strong impression on the country by his aggressive championship of the people's cause.

It was Senator WHEELER's unflagging interest and zeal in prosecuting the investigation of the Department of Justice that forced Attorney General Harry Daugherty to resign, together with William J. Burns, head of the secret service. This led the Department of Justice to institute a vindictive suit, charging Senator WHEELER with having appeared before the Department of the Interior in violation of a Federal statute. Readers know how this charge was repudiated, first, by the Senate's indorsement of its investigating committee's declaration that Senator WHEELER had at all times observed not only the spirit but the letter of the law; second, by the Montana jury's immediate acquittal when the Government brought its case, relying on a surprise witness, whose testimony was manifestly perjured; third, by the decision in favor of Senator WHEELER by the court of the District of Columbia, where, in its determination to "get" him and if possible destroy his usefulness, the Government had brought another suit on practically the same charge refuted by the United States Senate and the Montana jury. The persecution of Senator WHEELER for the performance of his public duty is one of the serious offenses for which the Coolidge administration is plainly answerable.

Following the adjournment of Congress last March Senator WHEELER, accompanied by Mrs. Wheeler, two sons, and a daughter, made a trip to the Orient, of whose conditions he wanted to get first-hand information. Returning to Montana, Senator WHEELER spent the remainder of his vacation in speaking to audiences, including high schools, over the State, giving his constituents the benefit of the personal knowledge he had gained of the part of the world he had visited. We are indebted to the North American Newspaper Alliance for the privilege of printing the following account of Senator WHEELER's observations and conclusions as to conditions in China.—Editor's note.)

If you are one of those sentimental souls who wants to believe, and therefore does believe, that the Chinese people are like so many Americans, with the same ideals, whether high or low, and but for the interference of foreign governments they would to-day have a government patterned after our own, go there. Or if you are one of those fanatics who believes that there is a bolshevik behind every sage bush and that the Third Internationale at Moscow is responsible for every bit of unrest in the world, then you ought to go to China.

Of course, if you go there and only talk with the northern dictator, Chang Tso Lin, you would come away convinced that he with his many wives was trying to save not only China but the United States and the British Isles from bolshevism.

DELUSIONS ABOUT CHINA

I must admit that I went to the Orient last March with many delusions about China, and how the Chinese were being exploited by foreigners and that the foreigners had never helped but only hurt the Chinese people. I had read of their art, of their culture, and of their civilization before the days of Marco Polo. At Peking I saw the marvelous palaces, the works of art, and the great wall.

At Nanking I visited the tombs of the dynasty, saw the animals carved from stone, the great wall surrounding the city, and was brought to the inevitable conclusion that here at one time had dwelled a great people who had builded a great nation.

Now, I saw between 400,000,000 and 500,000,000 people—poverty stricken, diseased, dejected, and miserable, most of them living on less than 10 cents a day. How, I asked myself, is it possible for a nation that once boasted of the highest civilization to sink to the lowest depths of degradation? Was it the foreign imperialist who ingratiated himself into their confidence and then exploited them? It couldn't be that, because there were no foreigners in China then. Was it the Third Internationale in Moscow with their preachings against imperialism, etc., that caused this catastrophe? No; because there was no Third Internationale then. Was it any other foreign intrigue? No.

Well, then, what was it? It was simply the selfishness and the greed of the leaders of the Chinese people who exploited their own people for their own benefit and who preached the doctrine so familiar to the ears of some of us in this country, that we should worship at the shrine of our ancient ancestors, believe the same things that they did.

The Chinese people did not progress in their religious, political, or economic ideas. They were satisfied and contented, and they retrogressed.

MISERY AND POVERTY ABOUT

It is most difficult for the average American to obtain a correct mental picture of the misery and poverty in China to-day unless he goes there. There is one vision that haunts my sight day and night. I see the gaunt and stunted forms of little children robbed of the joys of childhood; the joyless and hopeless faces of women stubbing along their way on bound feet; men stooped and staggering under loads too heavy for beasts of burden to bear, and in the features of all marks of sin, disease, suffering, despair; blind girls sold into a life of shame. I see the narrow streets and dark alleys with their filth; boys and girls, men and women, sleeping in the doorways and upon the docks without clothes. I know of the illiteracy, of the ignorance, and the superstition of the people. I realize how they have been victimized by selfish and unscrupulous war lords. Then I ask myself how it is possible to lift these people out of this human cesspool, build a nation which shall represent the people, raise their standards of living, and give them an education.

There can be no question in the minds of any sane person that the Chinese upper classes have in the past, and are to-day, exploiting their own people in the most vicious manner. There is no question but what the Chinese upper classes are more cruel and inhuman than Americans. There is no question but the foreign employers of labor treat their employees better than do the Chinese employers, furnish them with more sanitary places in which to work, pay them a little more wages, and in most instances work their employees shorter hours. But to those of you who think that the American business man in China is there for the purpose of helping the Chinese I wish to narrate a conversation which took place at a luncheon in Shanghai.

LOSE AMERICAN IDEALISM

There were present representatives of several American firms, and naturally the conversation drifted onto the Chinese situation. Some of them felt that the administration at Washington was not pursuing the proper course. They felt, I gathered, that the administration should take a firmer stand against the nationalist. Wishing to learn what these men thought of the character of the nationalist leaders, I inquired as to what kind of a man Chang Kai Shek was. One member of this group, not having permission to use his name, I shall refrain from doing so, spoke up and said: "Chang Kai Shek is a pimp, always has been, and always will be." He further said that "all of the nationalist leaders were no good," that "when they took Shanghai they immediately called upon him and insisted he pay his men more money, notwithstanding the fact that he was paying them more money than anyone else engaged in the same line of business." I was curious to learn what reason there could be for the nationalists to single him out and asked him how he explained it. He then said: "You see, I employ Chinamen to work for me, and they in turn buy boys to work for them. They furnish them with chow and a few clothes, and they [nationalists] included these boys among my employees."

I asked him if he was not receiving the benefit of the labor of these boys. He admitted he was, but added: "They would sell these boys to the Chinamen, but they would not sell them to me, although I would treat them better than the Chinamen." I do not believe that this would-be slave owner represents the spirit of many American business men. I cite it to you as an extreme case. But, nevertheless, I am firmly convinced that, unfortunately, many Americans who go to China lose their American idealism, if they ever had any to lose, and look upon the Chinese as an inferior race of people who are here upon this earth for the purpose of acting as serfs and slaves for those of us who are fortunate enough to be born white.

Throughout the Orient, and particularly in the Philippines, when you speak of educating the oriental it is not at all uncommon to hear Europeans and Americans say: "To educate them is to spoil them." I may be termed a sentimentalist, a pink, or a whatnot, but I am unable to bring myself to believe that in the long run any race of people can be spoiled by the right kind of an education. You will hear it said that all the Chinese student learns in America is how to jazz, or that the Filipinos all want to become lawyers or doctors. That, of course, is unfortunate, but it does not apply to the orientals alone. In my judgment, what they need more than anything else is education—not the kind of education that teaches them to all become doctors, lawyers, or philosophers—but skilled mechanics, craftsmen, scientific farmers, etc.

Every time you educate an oriental you raise his standard of living and increase his wants. There are over 400,000,000 Chinese. As fast as they become educated they want American articles of all kind. The Standard Oil Co. to-day is selling them gasoline at around 50 cents (American money) per gallon, and also kerosene, which is a drug upon the American market. American tobacco interests are selling cigarettes to the Chinese now. We in the United States are producing more manufactured articles than we can consume. This Nation is bound to develop greater industrial capacity, even surpass the fondest dream of any industrialist, providing we can find markets for our products. The Orient will furnish the market.

ENGLAND'S POLICY FAILS

England's strong-armed policy in the Orient has failed. If the United States follows the advice of some of her pro-British citizens in the Orient she will fail. The Chinese hate the British. They have effectively boycotted British merchandise. The Standard Oil Co. has benefited by this boycott, as have other Americans. The British do not like it and want us to join with them, thus forcing the Chinese to boycott us all! This Government should send its most trustworthy men to the Orient to make an intensive study of the political and economic conditions in the Orient. You business men should not send the office boy to China and hope to succeed. China is not the best place to live. You prohibitionists will find it hard to drink the water and harder still to drink the booze and keep going in that climate. Too many Americans are trying that now.

The question is, Do we really want to help the Chinese? Most of you have not cared anything about helping them from any altruistic reasons, even though by so doing you were helping to build up the moral fiber of the world. That statement is not quite fair to you—you do care—you give anywhere from 10 cents to $10 a year for the foreign missions, and then forget about it—so you know you care. But it is different now. The time is at hand. It is not a question of sentiment—it is a question of hard-headed business. We are not as actively interested in the Orient as is Great Britain, because there is India. If China wakes up, what about India, and all the rest of her oriental possessions? What about the opium trade, etc.? One Britisher said to me: "You can not give the Philippines their independence. If you do, Great Britain or Japan will take them. We can not afford to see the Philippines have their independence for the effect it will have upon India." But the United States has no India. We are not as yet as dependent upon the Orient as England, but it is coming. Now is the time to prepare, not by treating them rough and telling them nothing, but by treating them kindly and telling them everything.

BOGIE OF BOLSHEVIK

Chang Tso Lin believes the only way to help China is by helping him. He would have you believe that he is not fighting to save the Chinese alone, but is interested primarily in saving the United States and the rest of the world from the bolshevik! I met him by appointment at 11 o'clock p. m. at his palace in Peking. He had been playing mah-jongg all the night previously, and so was unable to receive me in the day time. As I sat there and conversed with him I wondered whom he resembled that I had known. Finally I realized he resembled no one person but a type—the old-time western frontier gambler—slick, suave, cunning, insincere. You see them now only in the movies.

Yes; he with his many wives is saving the world and the United States from bolshevism, and when I told him that the sensible people of the United States were not worrying much about the bolsheviks because our farmers had a good crop of wheat and our workers had automobiles, he didn't seem to like it particularly. And then when I told him that the nationalist leaders had told me that they, too, were seeking only to help the Chinese people and to save the world from the bolshevik, and asked him why, if it were true that all of them were fighting for the same things, he and they didn't stop fighting, disband their armies, get together around a table, iron out their petty difficulties, and use the money that it cost for their armies to build schools, build roads, and endeavor to raise the standard of living of his own people, he was still more perturbed. He informed me that the Russians were the ones who were financing Chang Kai Shek. I didn't tell him that I had quite positive evidence that the oil interests had helped to finance some of the nationalist leaders by paying their taxes considerably in advance, and that I hardly thought they would have done so if they felt that all the southern leaders were as red as he would have me believe. It might happen, but it isn't likely.

DOCTOR WU A CALM LEADER

The southern general, Chang Kai Shek, was more open, more frank, and I felt more honest, though I was impressed with the fact that he did not seem big enough for the stupendous task he had before him. When I interviewed Chang Kai Shek I felt that he was somewhat discouraged. There were dissensions in his own ranks. He had the opposition of the foreigners, and opposition of the communists at Hankow, and the opposition of Chang Tso Lin, besides dissensions and petty jealousies that creep into any liberal movement the moment it meets with success.

Doctor Wu, the nationalists' foreign minister, whom I also interviewed, was educated in the United States, was extremely friendly to our people, and wanted our aid and cooperation. In my judgment he is one of the most sensible and conscientious Chinamen with whom I came in contact. He is not antiforeign in any sense, unless wanting to correct certain abuses perpetrated by foreigners could be so considered. He is not a red, unless wanting to serve the cause of the mass of his people could be so considered.

Since we left China, Chang Kai Shek left Nanking, deserted the army he was leading, and, according to the press dispatches, intends to marry a beautiful girl and start a real war. I can hear the propagandist in Shanghai say, "I told you so—all grafters—all alike." But make no mistake about this, every southern general may sell out and quit, the southern army may be forced back, but the struggle between the north and the south, between the old autocratic conservative régime and the new democratic movement, will go on, and while I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet I am willing to hazard the guess that the liberal forces in China will win.

DEMOCRACY WILL WIN

The issue is militarism, graft, and special privilege over against national sovereignty and democracy. On the one side are war lords with armies of hirelings, grown fat and powerful, impoverishing the people by oppression and cruelties which rival the tyrannies of the dark ages; on the other side, students, teachers in the schools and universities, the merchants, often intimidated into silence, and the Christian population of China in an overwhelming majority.

The slogan of the northern armies, taken apparently from one of our detective agencies, is "Destroy the reds," and the watchword for the southern forces is "For the cause of the people." The nationalist movement has been discredited in the minds of many foreigners by excesses and crimes which have been committed. But the whole movement can not be damned by calling it "red."

We in America should help the Chinese to help themselves. The southern forces are encouraging the masses to become educated and are seeking to raise their standards of living. Whom besides the Chinese is that going to help? I am not speaking now except in the materialistic sense—whom besides the Chinese, I repeat, is it going to help if they become educated and their standards of living are raised? It will help all of the American people individually and collectively to a greater prosperity. The Chinese, like every other nation, is seeking to imitate the American. They want our products and we want to sell to them.

DIFFERENCE OF IDEALS

Those deluded souls who are asking us to join with Great Britain and Japan in an armed intervention of China entirely overlook the fact that even though we conceded for sake of argument that these nations would exercise only a sort of benevolent dictatorship over China and that it might be beneficial to China, it would most likely lead to a conflict between the nations themselves. Our interest in China and our ideals are so far different from these countries that such a combination must of necessity prove disastrous to us if not to all concerned. The only other alternative is to help in every way possible a sane and liberal Chinese movement or sit idly by, see it fail, and later see that country pass absolutely under the domination of Russia. You can't stamp out the seeds of bolshevism by shouting "Red," nor can you stamp it out with armies. You can only stop it by making conditions so much better that the majority of the articulate people don't want it.

China, with its misery, its poverty, and its disease, is the most fertile field in the world for the spread of bolshevism. Unless some group like the nationalists can hold out some hope to these 400,000,000 or more people that their condition is going to be better and ultimately actually make it better, China is bound to come under the influence, if not the absolute domination, of the Russian Government. Some say it isn't possible because of the large class of people owning small farms. But the farmers are not making money enough to meet their increasing wants, and, even if they were, you have the cities. You forget that it wasn't the farmers of Russia that started the revolution. The communists took charge of Leningrad and of Moscow and the revolution spread to the other cities. The control of the cities meant the control of Russia.

A JUMP FROM STARVATION

The Chinese worker is scarcely one jump from starvation. The occidental speaks to him when he wants a favor and curses him otherwise. The Russian talks to him, works with him, and spreads the gospel that the proletariat can rule China and make a better job of it than the war lord or the foreigner. They tell him it can't get any worse, and the Chinaman may think there is a possibility that it might get better. If China becomes allied with or under the influence of Russia, watch India, watch Japan, yes, watch for another world catastrophe.

It isn't the preaching of Karl Marx, or Lenin, or Debs that makes radicals—it is the short-sightedness and ignorance of those who call themselves smart among the ruling classes that permit conditions to become so deplorable that in desperation a slumbering mass of people wake up temporarily, act like wild men, kill their fellowmen, and take the reins of government into their own desperate hands.

Take your choice—help a Chinese moderate government in China or be forced to take a bolshevik China.

POLICY IN CHINA

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very informative article entitled "Has the United States a China Policy?" by Stanley K. Hornbeck.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave is granted. The article is as follows:

[Reprinted from Foreign Affairs, vol. 5, pp. 617–632, July, 1927]

"HAS THE UNITED STATES A CHINA POLICY?"

From the nationalist headquarters at Hankow there comes a "Manifesto to the American People" in which it is declared that "the Chinese people believe the American people are not aware of the crimes their Government is committing" in pursuit of a "catastrophic change in America's policy toward China."

Misinformation, misrepresentation, ignorance, credulity, emotionalism, and impatience render the Chinese masses easy victims of the agitator and American classes enthusiastic creditors of much that is incredible. In soil fertilized by one or more of these ingredients grew the Boxer uprising. In such soil have been cultivated the antiforeign manifestations of the Chinese nationalist movement. In such soil there flourishes in the United States a luxuriant crop of erroneous impressions with regard to conditions in China and with regard to what the United States, its Government, and its citizens are doing in China.

Impressions, opinions, assertions. There are in regard to the situation in China, and in regard to the problem which that situation presents, certain indisputable facts. Chinese leaders, groups, and factions are at war with one another. Some of them are actively hostile to the foreign powers, foreign nationals, and foreign influences. Political authority has broken down. Chinese soldiers and Chinese civilians have driven and are driving foreigners from their homes and their places of business. Articulate political China has declared and is demanding that the "unequal" treaties be done away with and that the privileges enjoyed by the foreign powers and foreign nationals in China be terminated.

For months there have been demands that the American Government "do something" in regard to China. From China, in so far as it is articulate, and from many quarters in the United States have come suggestions, advice, and demands with regard to the negotiation of a new treaty. After the adjournment (July 23, 1926) of the special conference on the Chinese customs tariff (Peking) the demand began to be voiced that the American Government "negotiate with China" at once and independently of the other powers. In January, 1927, Secretary of State Kellogg made public a statement affirming the willingness of the American Government to go on with the negotiations begun at Peking or to enter upon new negotiations with representatives of China at the earliest possible moment. A flood of suggestions and demands has ensued. From some quarters it has been urged that the Department of State propose formally to the Chinese minister in Washington that delegations be forthwith appointed; from some that the American Government appoint its delegates without waiting for the Chinese; and from some that it "confirm its readiness to negotiate" by "naming a delegation satisfactory to the Chinese." A prominent Chinese spokesman has urged that "the powers themselves should declare in irrevocable terms and unconditionally the terminating of all unequal treaties."

In studying the treaty provisions and the whole system which has arisen under the treaties in regulation of the contact between the Chinese and foreigners two facts should be kept ever in mind: First, this system has developed not without cause and reason. Second, whatever its faults, it exists; it rests upon law and contract; it has been the legal basis upon which many foreigners and more Chinese have ordered their lives, made their investments, created and carried on their business during several generations; and it can not be abolished suddenly without working injustice and great hardship to a considerable number of honest, law-abiding, hard-working, and progressive persons, both foreigners and Chinese, more of the latter than of the former.

It was urged until a few weeks ago by some Chinese and some Americans that the Government stake everything on the prospects of one Chinese faction, and advocates of this course declared that if the United States did not do this the Chinese people would "lose faith in America," would regard America as an imperialistic power, would consider her an enemy and would treat her as such. It has since been suggested that the American Government send a commission to China to investigate, authorized perhaps to negotiate. It has been suggested recently that the American Government should negotiate with both "governments" or with each and all of the various contending and competing authorities in China.

Always the demand that the American Government "do something"; frequently the demand that it "take the lead" in China; in many forms a demand for action, immediate action, and positive action.

Then came action. There was a change in the situation in China. Attacks on foreigners began. Missionaries were driven from their posts; the British concession at Hankow was overrun by a mob; it was announced that Chinese armed forces intended to take the international settlement at Shanghai. Action. The British Government sent armed forces to China; the American Government and other governments sent armed forces. Then came the affirmation, with grave concern on the part of those who advanced it, that there had been a deplorable "change" in the policy of the United States toward China. Next came dispatches to the effect that the other powers were swinging toward the policy of the American Government—much to the gratification of Washington.

All within a few weeks—assertions that the United States has not a China policy, assertions that it has, demands that it do something, complaints when it does something, complaints because it does not do more, demands that its policy be changed, the affirmation that it has been changed, assurances that it has not been changed, and expressions of gratification that the other powers are inclining toward the American policy.

To the question asked a few days ago by one of the keenest men in Washington, "Has the American Government, really, a China policy?" the reply was and is: "Yes; it has—a policy so obvious, so simple, and so straight-in-line with American traditions and opinions that many people fail to see it because they are looking for something different."

The American Government has a China policy, based on well-established principles. The China policy of the United States has been and is, fortunately, a consistent policy. To anyone who will take the trouble to look into the history of American activities in the Far East during a century and a half of contact between the United States and China and then read the published statements of the President and the Secretary of State during the past two years and then examine the record of the past five years, this will appear a truism.

Probably the most common error made by those who study foreign policy is that of failing to distinguish between policy and plan of action, then between plan of action and detail of action, and finally between action which is negative—but nevertheless deliberate and consciously determined—and action which is positive and expressed in movement.

In the field of foreign relations every government has a twofold duty: first, to safeguard the lives and interests of its own citizens; second, to respect the rights and susceptibilities of the people of other countries. In relations between the United States and China, successive American administrations have established in reference to this twofold duty a record of performance with which neither the American nor the Chinese public, as they look back over it, find much fault. And the present administration is not ignorant of or indifferent to that record.

American Far Eastern policy has been shaped by the belief of the American people that free states should remain free—in the Orient as elsewhere—and should be encouraged to develop peacefully along their own lines without political interference. In this respect the far eastern policy of the United States has sprung from the same root in American thought from which sprang the Monroe doctrine in relation to the Western Hemisphere. In relation to China, as earlier in relation to Japan, the American people and the American Government have looked with disapproval upon tendencies toward imperialistic adventure or partition or absorption by foreign states. This attitude and policy have run a clear course. (In the amended text of the preamble to the Porter resolution, as passed by the House of Representatives on February 21, 1927, it is stated: "* * * The United States, in its relations with China, has always endeavored to act in a spirit of mutual fairness and equity and with due regard for the conditions prevailing from time to time in the two countries." This is a fair statement.)

American interest in China has been chiefly commercial and cultural. To China from America there went first, merchants; second, missionaries; third, diplomats. No American soldiers went to China until 1900.

In the early days of the Canton trade, before the first treaties, "In every issue between the foreigner and the Chinese, the important question was whether the Americans would find it most to their profit to stand with the English or with the Chinese." This continued after the signing of the treaties. "Sometimes the Americans stood with the British for concerted action, but when the concerted action proposed by the British would have a tendency to weaken the Chinese merchants, or when the British adopted policies directly inimical to the American trade the Americans were disposed to support the Chinese." (Tyler Dennett, "Americans in Eastern Asia," p. 53.)

When diplomatic relations began, the principal positive objective of American policy in China was—as it had been and has been elsewhere—to insure for Americans equality of opportunity. In the treaty which Caleb Cushing concluded, equality of treatment was promised by China to the United States. (As in the preceding British treaties, the provisions with regard to the tariff and extraterritoriality were unilateral, but it needs to be taken into consideration—though it seldom seems to be—that all of the far eastern treaties of that period were concluded with a view to regulating contacts on oriental, not on occidental soil. The west went to the east; for a long time the east did not reciprocate; there was, therefore, in those early days no occasion for and probably little thought of "reciprocity.")

The "second plank in the platform of American policy" toward China was laid down in the period of the Taiping rebellion. Humphrey Marshall, American commissioner, took the position (1853) "* * * that the highest interests of the United States are involved in sustaining China—maintaining order here [at Shanghai] * * * rather than to see China become the theater of widespread anarchy and ultimately the prey of Eureopean ambition"; and later, "it is my purpose to perform, punctiliously, every obligation assumed by the United States under the treaty, and to refrain from embarrassing the public administration of Chinese affairs by throwing unnecessary obstacles in the way." The American Government became of the same mind; its policy became that of respecting China's sovereignty and helping the Chinese authorities to maintain the political and administrative integrity of the empire. (See Tyler Dennett, "Americans in Eastern Asia," pp. 215–220.)

Shortly thereafter, though Americans in China, including officials, merchants, and some missionaries, urged that the United States cooperate with European governments in the use of force, the American Government resolutely refused to be drawn into the armed conflict. ("The aggressiveness of the American missionaries in their disposition to force the opening of the Empire is notable. It is entirely in accord with what had been the prevailing spirit in missionary circles from the beginning." Tyler Dennett, "Americans in Eastern Asia," p. 563. "* * * From 1830 to about 1900 'American' missionaries carried on most of the actual intercourse between the Governments of China and the United States * * " and, " * * so far as I can discover the generality of the missionaries approved of both the necessity of the 'rights' and of their being made treaty provisions. * * *." Frank Rawlinson, "Chinese Recorder," November, 1925, p. 721.)

Fifteen years later, in the only treaty which Anson Burlingame succeeded in concluding, it was reiterated that the sovereign rights of China must be respected and the principle of equal opportunity for all nations to compete "in trade or navigation within the Chinese dominions" be respected—in accordance with, but not beyond, "the treaty stipulations of the parties." (In that treaty, too, were included several wholly reciprocal provisions; and there was laid down the principle (Article VIII) of nonintervention in China's domestic administration.)

It remained for John Hay to formulate in 1899 the doctrine that, in reference to their "spheres of interest" in China, the powers should follow, with regard to each other and to the world, the principle of equality of opportunity; and to suggest in 1900 that the powers pledge themselves to respect China's territorial and administrative entity. The Hay notes committed the United States, and those of the other powers whose replies were favorable, to the principle of cooperation in a course of self-denial and restraint. The principle of cooperation was followed by most of the powers in 1900; and during the negotiations of 1900–1901, in the post-Boxer settlement, the American Government did everything possible to make effective the feature of restraint.

In 1902 and 1903 the British, the American, and the Japanese Governments assented by treaty to an increase in China's tariff rates simultaneously with the abolition by China of likin duties, and agreed to relinquish extraterritorial rights when satisfied that the state of Chinese laws and arrangements for their administration and other considerations should warrant.

In 1915 the Wilson administration served notice that it would recognize no agreement which China might be forced to make which would impair "* * * the political or territorial integrity of the Republic of China, or the international policy relative to China commonly known as the open-door policy." In 1918 President Wilson approved of American participation in the new consortium in the belief that only by participation could the American Government exercise a restraining influence which would be in the long run to China's advantage. At the Paris conference President Wilson labored hard over China's case. He failed to break the arrangement which had been concluded two years earlier among four other powers. But the American Senate and the American people stood with China—the principle involved being that of preserving China's independence and territorial integrity—until at Washington agreements were arrived at between Japan and China whereby the "lost rights" in Shantung were restored to China.

At the Washington conference, with the American Government playing the leading part, the principal powers concerned (including China) committed themselves to a common understanding with regard to equality of opportunity in China, respect for China's sovereignty, and noninterference in China's domestic affairs, and in these agreements the underlying principle was that there should be cooperation in a course of forbearance, self-denial, and restraint.

Three years went by before the last of the powers signatory to the Washington treaties deposited its ratification of the treaty concerning the Chinese customs tariff and enabled the Chinese Government to ask for the assembling of that conference. On September 4, 1925, the powers sent identic notes to the Chinese Government. In its participation in this note the American Government said: "* * * The United States is now prepared to consider the Chinese Government's proposal for the modification of the existing treaties."

Two days earlier (September 2, 1925) Secretary Kellogg had stated in a speech at Detroit the principles of the Chinese policy of the American Government, as follows: "In brief that policy may be said to be to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of China, to encourage the development of an effective stable government, to maintain the open door or equal opportunity for the trade of nationals of all countries, to carry out scrupulously the obligations and promises made to China at the Washington conference, and to require China to perform the obligations of a sovereign state in the protection of foreign citizens and their property."

The American Government forthwith sent its delegation to the tariff conference at Peking prepared to go the limit to which other powers might be moved to go toward creating in and for China an improved fiscal situation, and at the conference the American delegation did its utmost to carry out the spirit of its very liberal instructions and persisted in the hope that an agreement would be reached until, in July, 1926, the Nationalist Government (then at Canton) served notice that it would recognize no engagement which might be entered into by the Peking government.

The commission on extraterritoriality pursued for nine months its investigation of the laws and administration of justice in China. The American member of the commission took a leading part, as chairman, in drawing up suggestions and recommendations as to steps which should be taken both by China and by the powers toward producing conditions which would warrant the powers in giving up their rights in this connection. In their report the commissioners expressed unanimously the opinion that there should be a period of transition, by agreement and program, rather than abrupt destruction of such legal structure and arrangements as exist in China before another system has been made ready to take its place.

In a statement on January 27, 1927, Secretary Kellogg said with regard to the Chinese tariff and extraterritoriality: "The United States is * * * prepared to enter into negotiations with any government of China or delegations which can represent or speak for China * * * for * * * entirely releasing tariff control and restoring complete tariff autonomy to China. * * * The United States is prepared to put into force the recommendations of the extraterritoriality commission which can be put into force without a treaty at once (the American Government has since taken certain steps in this direction) and to negotiate the release of extraterritorial rights as soon as China is prepared to provide protection by law and through her courts to American citizens their rights and property. * * * The Government of the United States * * * is ready * * * to continue the negotiations on the entire subject of the tariff and extraterritoriality or to take up negotiations on behalf of the United States alone." But, "Existing treaties which were ratified by the Senate of the United States can not be abrogated by the President but must be superseded by new treaties negotiated with somebody representing China and subsequently ratified by the Senate of the United States."

During the past four months it has been demonstrated that there exists in China no governing authority which can guarantee to foreigners in certain areas either protection in situ or safe conduct to places of security in China or to points of departure from China. The American Government has dispatched to China naval and land forces, as have other governments, for the protection of its nationals. American naval vessels have been used to assist in the evacuation of foreigners from points in the interior. (The foreign governments have asked or ordered their citizens to come out from points in the interior. The American Government has no means of forcing American citizens to come out, but it has done everything possible to get them to come and has provided them with transportation facilities.) In several instances when fired upon by Chinese armed forces they have returned the fire. In one instance only have they fired without first having been fired upon—when, at Nanking, after foreigners in the city had been under Chinese fire all day and some had been killed, they threw a barrage around the Socony Compound to make possible the escape of a group of foreigners who were in imminent danger of their lives at the hands of Chinese soldiers. American marines have been landed at Shanghai and are participating there in maintaining order in the foreign-administered area (within which are resident some 40,000 foreigners, exclusive of refugees, and some 1,200,000 Chinese) and in preventing troops of any of the contending Chinese armies from invading that area.

This action of the American Government has drawn expostulations both from American and from Chinese sources. The cry has been raised that from the traditional American policy of goodwill and nonaggression toward China the United States has been drawn away into accepting a made-in-Europe policy. Until the Nanking incident, contenders of this school almost unanimously held the view that the United States should refrain from disposing in China any armed forces whatever.

Secretary Kellogg declares in a published statement: "American diplomatic and military representatives in China are cooperating fully with other foreign representatives when faced with a joint problem such as protection of the lives and property of their nationals." Senator BORAH declares in a public address: "We are not sending our armed forces to China to do battle with the armed forces of China." President Coolidge takes occasion to explain that our troops will cooperate with other foreign troops for the specifically limited purpose of protecting American lives when cooperation promotes this end; but that there will be no "unified command"; and he declares: "Our citizens are being concentrated in ports where we can protect them and remove them. It is solely for this purpose that our warships and marines are in that territory."

The United States is unquestionably committed by tradition, by precedent, and by declaration to certain definite principles of China policy. These principles are assurance of equality of opportunity; respect for China's sovereignty and territorial integrity; noninterference in China's domestic affairs; nonaggression; and insistence that China perform the obligations of a sovereign State in protection of foreign citizens. The United States is also committed, partly by tradition and precedent, but more particularly by the provisions and spirit of the Washington agreements, to the principle of cooperative action.

In the presence of conditions such as now exist in China, can a plan of action be devised which will be consistent at once with the principles of nonaggression, of insistence that China afford proper protection to foreigners, and of cooperation?

Efforts have been made to commit the American Government to going along with other powers if and when these powers decide upon measures of coercion. But in the 1830's and in the 1850's such efforts were made. The American Government was implored to participate in armed hostilities against China, and it refused. In 1900 the American Government sent troops to China, as did other governments, but not for purposes of aggression. American armed forces are now cooperating with those of other countries, as they did in 1900. Yet McKinley's and Hay's policy in 1900 was "to seek a solution which will safeguard the independence and integrity of the Chinese Empire"; and during the negotiations which ensued, W. W. Rockhill, at Peking, with John Hay behind him at Washington, stood between Chinese officialdom and the crushing proposals of certain other powers. What would the American Government have been able to do in those negotiations if it had not participated in the relief of the legations?

But what about "cooperation" now? Concerted action is one of the most desirable things and one of the things most difficult to achieve in the field of human endeavor. It is difficult enough as between two individuals. Where a dozen nations are involved the difficulty is multiplied many fold. Americans have cooperated with the nationals of other countries in China in many ways and over long periods of time. American officials and the American Government have cooperated with the officials and the governments of other countries frequently, effectively, and through periods of years in China. The American Government has from time to time definitely advocated, and at Washington actually brought about, an agreement that there should be cooperation. Where this principle is adopted, there must either be express commitment as to specified courses of action or provision that the will of the majority shall prevail, or an understanding that in the absence of specifications and of the majority rule each party shall be free to participate in or to abstain from action proposed. The Washington treaties committed the powers—and in reference to some matters, China—to cooperation in relation to certain specified matters; they committed them to the not doing of certain things, to self-denial. The separate treaties between China and the powers individually commit the parties to certain things. But is there anywhere a provision which prescribes a course of action to be taken in case of breach of treaty provision, a provision whereunder, for instance, in case China disregards or can not fulfill her treaty pledges to one or to all of the treaty powers, those powers are pledged jointly to employ force in an effort to penalize or to coerce her The United States never has participated in aggressive action against China and has never entered into any engagement so to do. It has no commitments which lay upon it the obligation to use its forces in 1927 for any other than a common protective end.

The question whether the United States should or should not cooperate in the use of force to compel one or another of the Chinese authorities to honor China's treaty obligations is one in the answering of which the American Government is no less free now than it was in 1900 and in 1840 and in 1856 to exercise its own judgment and to decide according to its reading of American public opinion and its estimate of the various rights and interests and other considerations involved.

At this point there comes a series of questions. What, in the presence of existing conditions and circumstances, would the American Government have a legal right to do in China? What would it be politically expedient for it to do? What is the extent of its lawful obligation to citizens of the United States in regard to (a) protection of life, (b) protection of property, (c) enforcement of rights accorded under treaty provisions in general? How many and where are the persons to be protected? How much, where, and of what value is the property which is threatened? Of what sort and of what value are the general treaty rights for which enforcement is sought? What do the people of the United States States want the Government to do? What is it advisable for it to do?

There are present in the Far Eastern Division of the Department of State five officers, each of whom has had long experience in the Far East. Two of these men were born and brought up in China. Three have had more than 15 years each of official "career" service in China, read and speak Chinese, and have served both in consulates and at the legation in Peking. One has been consul general at large in the Far East. A fourth has had more than 30 years in the Consular Service, of which the past 13 have been in China and the past 8 as consul general at the most important port in China. The fifth has had 20 years of "career" service in Japan, in Manchuria, and in Siberia, and speaks and reads Japanese. The American minister to China is a recognized authority on China and has served in Siam, in Russia, and in Japan, as well as twice in China and for six years in the Department of State. These men know their Far East.

In the conduct of foreign relations the Department of State pays much attention to the question of legal rights and lawful obligations. It is well informed with regard to the number and location of American citizens, and the value and location of American property in China, and with regard to American investments, trade, and other interests involved. With regard to what the people of the United States want, it must form its own conclusions, but it is in much better position to judge than is the man in the street or in the business office or at missionary headquarters or in the study, for there pour in to it from a thousand quarters, from all over the United States, from all over China, from all over the world, reports, dispatches, petitions, resolutions, letters, telegrams, and memoranda expressive of opinions, hopes, desires, and demands.

There is no unanimity of opinion, it goes without saying, among Americans, either in the United States or in China or elsewhere, with regard to what the Government ought to do. Merely among Americans resident in China three sets of interests, three points of view, and three schools of thought are readily distinguishable. The merchant class is concerned about markets; the missionary class is concerned about propagation of ideas; the official class is concerned about persons and property in relation to laws and principles. But not all of the merchants hold the same views regarding policy, either commercial or political; not all of the missionaries are engaged in the same lines of endeavor, have the same outlook, or advocate the same policies, either for the societies under which they work or for the government to which they owe allegiance; and not all of the officials have the same views with regard to what is expedient or what is advisable. The interests, the views, and the objectives of the importer and the exporter differ considerably from those of the banker and the railway builder. The perspective and the views of the missionary, who sits in a comfortable office in the security of Shanghai, and those of the missionary who resides, by virtue of a special treaty provision and the grace of Providence, in a remote village in the interior, traveling year in and year out among vocational and avocational bandits, are quite different. Even among the diplomatic and consular officials there is by no means always identity of view, though within this class there is as a rule less diversity and less particularity of view than within the other classes.

And the views of a class, or of a majority within a class, as well as of individuals, are subject to change, sometimes radical and rapid change. Thus the views of the missionaries with regard to the nationalist government at Hankow and with regard to the presence of foreign armed forces in Chinese waters and at Shanghai appear to have undergone considerable modification since March 24 (the Nanking incident).

In considering what it may or may not do, what it will or will not do with regard to China, an administration must necessarily consider not alone relations with China but also relations with other powers. The American Government is responsible for considering and safeguarding the interests of all Americans, not only all Americans in China but all Americans everywhere; it has to consider the safety and interests of the whole American people.

In deciding what it may or may not do an administration must turn both to national law and to international law. It does not have an altogether free hand—or will—in relation to such a question as, for instance, that of affording protection. Treaties are made between governments, but they provide for rights of persons as well as of States. In the United States treaties are a part of the law of the land. Is it not, then, an obligation, a duty of the Government to protect its citizens in the enjoyment of their lawful rights? Ordinarily this obligation is met, this function performed, by diplomatic processes. But where a foreign government has become powerless, where there is no local authority able to afford protection, where American nationals are in danger of violence to their persons, is it not the duty of the American Government to substitute its own police force for the local police forces which should be but are not present? The only way to protect life is to prevent its being taken.

The American Government has commitments—to China and to other powers. And so has China commitments—to the United States and to the other powers. The American Government tries to live up to its commitments.

In dealing with China the powers have tried almost every line of policy imaginable. There have been periods of independent action (free competition), periods of partial cooperation, periods of complete cooperation, periods of informal cooperation, periods of cooperation by agreement. The theory of the Washington treaties is cooperation. The American Government cooperated with the others at the tariff conference, in the work of the extraterritoriality commission, in connection with representations to both of the contending Chinese factions in North China in 1926 with regard to what is called the "Taku incident." American forces are cooperating now with those of other foreign powers in China. As Secretary Kellogg has stated, "American diplomatic and military representatives in China are cooperating fully with other foreign representatives when faced with a joint problem such as the protection of the lives and property of their nationals."

That appears, however, to be the limit within which it intends to use force. It has cooperated in the presentation of demands to nationalist authorities in connection with the Nanking incident. But it apparently declines to participate in proposed measures of a coercive character conceived with a view to following up those demands. Whence, now, the charge that by holding back it is untrue to the principle of cooperative action.

This charge is not warranted. The theory of the cooperative policy does not require that in whatever direction one or more powers may wish to proceed the others must go; and the express commitments with regard to cooperation are commitments individually and collectively to refrain from aggression, not commitments collectively to proceed in measures of coercion. Any one of the States committed to the cooperative policy may without violation either of the letter or of the spirit of the policy object to a proposed positive program and decline to participate in its execution without violation of either the letter or the spirit of the cooperative policy. In fact, in case some States proceed with such a program in spite of objection and of refusal to participate on the part of others, is it not those who act rather than those who decline to act who forsake the cooperative principle?

As a matter of fact, while the cooperative principle has been in force several powers have not hesitated to act independently. While the powers were acting in common in negotiating at Peking concerning the Chinese customs tariff, Japan was, with the full knowledge of all the others, negotiating with the Peking Government for a new and separate commercial treaty between itself and China. Belgium has been negotiating wtih Peking during the past six months. Great Britain has been negotiating with both the Peking and the nationalist (Hankow) authorities. The principle of cooperative action applies properly where there has been or can be achieved a unanimity of opinion with regard to a proposed action wherein common rights and interests are involved.

The principle of independent action may be applied properly where such unanimity has not been or can not be achieved, or where the issue is one in which rights and interests peculiar to one or several powers only are involved. In view of difficulties experienced, Secretary Kellogg has declared in regard to such questions as, for instance, the tariff, that the American Government is prepared either to continue negotiations in common with the other powers or to enter upon negotiations between China and the United States alone.

In final analysis the Government has to make up its own mind with regard to what is lawful, what is possible, what is expedient, what is advisable, what is to be done. This the Government appears to have done and to be doing, without fuss and without confusion. It is well equipped adequately to consider the factors and to arrive at sound conclusions. It is not likely that it will depart far from the established lines of American policy. Even if it should wish to, it would find it difficult to do so. The Chinese policy of the Government always has been responsive to the attitude and wishes of the American people. Public opinion is becoming more and more an active and conclusive influence in determining of policy and of action. Public opinion does not change rapidly. The American people are possessed of a peculiarly sympathetic attitude toward the Chinese people, an attitude which is somewhat sentimental and somewhat patronizing, but genuinely benevolent. Warranted or not, Americans regard the Chinese as a nation of great potentialities, wish them well, believe that they will be better off and the world better off if they govern themselves, and believe them capable of self-government. The American people are opposed to any course of action which would constitute, in their opinion, "aggression" against the Chinese people.

In only one particular, so far as is discernible, has the present administration deviated from the course prescribed by the traditions, the precedents, and the practices to which in reference to China it has fallen heir from preceding administrations. For almost 150 years the American people and the American Government have proceeded on the assumption that in China there was a Government capable of performing the ordinarily accepted functions of a sovereign authority. Now, and for the time being, the American Government has apparently, of necessity, given up that assumption, as have the other foreign governments.

The Government appears fully to understand what it is about. It has declared clearly the principles of its position. It has stated what it is prepared to do with regard to treaties and for what purpose it has sent armed forces. In the presence of an obscure and involved situation in China, where political chaos may continue for a long time, it has envisaged the fundamental facts and taken a "long-swing" view, profiting by the lessons of history. Its acts have been consistent with its statements. There is no evidence to warrant the assertion that it has departed from the traditions of American policy or the apprehension that it will do so. We may assume that it will continue along the line which it has followed during the past few months, which is simply a practical application of principles which have been developed during a century and a half of American contact with China.

There is every reason to expect that it will continue to pursue a course directed toward the protection of American lives and the conservation of American interests, a course considerate of Chinese rights and interests and aspirations, cooperative in so far as commitments and common responsibilities are concerned, independent where an issue is peculiar to the United States and China or to another power and China, independent where some objective is sought by another or other powers and not by the United States, independent where there arises a question of using force for purposes other than defense.

Where there is occasion for concurrent action, the United States may be expected to use its influence in the direction of restraint, in opposition to aggression. If aggression is decided upon, it may reasonably be expected that the United States will not participate.

COMMITTEE COMMISSIONS TO TAKE TESTIMONY

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may submit a brief resolution, formal in character, which I desire may be read, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). In the absence of objection, the resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 118) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized, on the request of the chairman of any of the committees of the Senate, to issue commissions to take testimony within the United States or elsewhere.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I desire to ask the Senator from Montana, is there any objection, from any source of which the Senator knows, to the adoption of this resolution?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Montana said the resolution was of merely formal character. What is the idea of the resolution?

Mr. JONES. I will say that I understood from the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] that the resolution was entirely satisfactory to him.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator from Montana how will the resolution operate?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If adopted, the resolution would authorize the President of the Senate to issue commissions to take testimony on the request of the chairman of any committee of the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. Is not that authority now possessed by committees under the general resolutions giving them authority to conduct hearings?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The authority of committees under that general resolution does not seem to be ample.

Mr. MOSES. I wish the Senator from Montana to have a private conversation with me about it. I will object to the consideration of the resolution for the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MOSES. I object.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], I understand, temporarily objects to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] objects to the present consideration of the resolution, and the resolution will go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana subsequently said: Mr. President, I am advised that objection has been withdrawn to the resolution which I submitted a few moments ago, and I now ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana have the resolution once more read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SACKETT. Would the Senator from Montana object to having the resolution so modified as to limit the power granted to take testimony to the request of the committee instead of the request of the chairman of the committee? That would require committee action.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should not at all object to such a modification.

Mr. MOSES. Is the resolution to be so modified?

Mr. SACKETT. I will ask that it be modified so that the taking of testimony shall be on the request of the committee instead of the request of the chairman of the committee. I understand the Senator from Montana accepts the modification.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the resolution is rather indefinite as it is. It does not provide where the committee shall take the testimony, whether they shall take it in Washington or out over the country; nor does it make any provision for the expenses which may be involved in the taking of testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MOSES. How does the resolution read as now modified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution as modified at the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT].

Will the Senator from Montana again state the proposed modification?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is proposed that instead of reading "the chairman of any of the committees," it shall read "on the request of any of the committees of the Senate."

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask that the resolution may be read as now modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution as modified will be read.

The resolution as modified was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized, on the request of any of the committees of the Senate, to issue commissions to take testimony within the United States or elsewhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in my judgment there is no more important question before the American people than the matter of building up our merchant marine. I think an adequate merchant marine is vital to the development of our commerce and to our national security. The question involved in it is not a partisan one. It is a question that is bigger than partisanship. If there is one genuinely American question, in my judgment, before the people of this country it is the question of the building up of American shipping. I am glad to say this question has been dealt with by the Committee on Commerce in an entirely nonpartisan way. In the consideration of the shipping act of 1920 that act was developed and passed with an entire absence of partisanship. There was no partisanship in the committee and there was no partisanship on the floor of the Senate. So with the measure that is now before the Senate. It was considered in the committee in an entirely nonpartisan way.

Mr. President, I wish also to say that there is no man on this floor who has taken greater interest in or done more toward the proper and wise solution of this problem than has the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the ranking minority member upon the committee. I wish to commend the remarkably able and comprehensive speech that he made on this floor a few days ago. He has acted in a most patriotic, genuinely American way with reference to this important subject; the people of the country owe him a very great debt of gratitude for the earnest, faithful, patriotic work that he has done with reference to this question; and, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I am glad to say this with reference to his work.

Mr. President, this is a country of about 120,000,000 people; its wealth is estimated at $400,000,000,000; its annual imports and export trade is nearly $10,000,000,000; and it seems almost inconceivable that a country with such wealth as this, a country with an ocean on each side of it, a country the foreign commerce of which can not get to market except by shipping could be in such a deplorable condition so far as shipping is concerned.

I do not think that we need to argue the importance of a merchant marine for this country. It is not necessary to take the time of the Senate to show the importance of it so far as our commerce is concerned, nor ought it to be necessary to show its importance as an instrumentality of national security. However, I think I shall take this opportunity to call attention to the condition that confronted us when the World War came on and the result of it, which it seems to me ought to be enough to make everyone perfectly willing to do whatever may be necessary to insure our people a merchant marine.

We all know that when the World War came on American shipping was at the foot of the list. Ships under the American flag were carrying only about 7 or 9 per cent of our imports and our exports. My recollection is that when the World War broke out we had just about 16 ships of about 166,000 tons flying the American flag engaged in overseas commerce. I shall call attention a little later to conditions that existed locally in so far as our commerce was concerned; but what has it cost us in dollars and cents because we did not have an adequate merchant marine?

When we ourselves got into the World War the cry was for ships and ships and more ships; it was necessary to have ships to transfer our troops across the sea; and Congress appropriated, in round numbers, over $3,000,000,000 for the building of ships. That amount of money and more was expended for that purpose. So that, because we did not have an adequate merchant marine, the people were required to put up money to the amount of over $3,000,000,000. We got this money largely by the sale of Liberty bonds; in other words, we borrowed the money. We are paying in interest every year now on the amount of money borrowed, in round numbers, over $100,000,000. How long we shall continue to do so nobody can tell; but possibly, on the average, during the next 50 years the people of this country will pay in interest alone the sum of $50,000,000 a year because we did not have a merchant marine when we became involved in the World War. We have been paying out since the World War large sums of money to make up the deficit in the operation of our shipping. We have probably expended for that purpose alone two hundred or three hundred million dollars.

But that is not all. Before we got into the World War it cost this country hundreds of millions of dollars because we did not have a merchant marine. The ships that were going on ordinary runs, transporting our commerce, were taken by the needs of war to other services. We were dependent largely upon British shipping, and British shipping had to be taken off the commercial runs and used for the transporting of war supplies and of troops.

I remember that Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo made an investigation to ascertain the increased cost in the freight charges by reason of the fact that we had not a merchant marine and because of the increase in rates, and he estimated that in one year, because of our lack of shipping, the people of this country had paid in increased rates on carrying charges over $300,000,000. Rates soared, doubled, trebled, and in some cases they were increased over 2,000 per cent because of our lack of shipping.

It was found also that our products, and especially the products of the farm, were congested at the seaports and on the docks. They were waiting for shipping to take them to the markets which demanded them, but the ships were not available. Many of these products were perishable, and they perished. What the loss was from that source, of course, nobody can tell, but no doubt the losses to the farmer and to the manufacturer and to business of every kind amounted possibly to hundreds of millions of dollars.

It seems to me that these facts alone, which are within the memory of every American citizen, ought to make us willing to adopt any course that will give us reasonable assurance of an adequate merchant marine. These facts demonstrate the absolute necessity of a merchant marine.

I wish to call attention to a prophecy. I do not claim to be much of a prophet, but several years ago in discussing the importance of a merchant marine, when the Simmons-Underwood Tariff Act was under consideration and the provision in reference to discriminating duties was before the Senate, I made a speech in which, after calling attention to the value of the commerce carried by foreign ships and the value of our commerce, I said this:

> Not only is this condition of things humiliating and unprofitable, but it is actually dangerous. British ships transport the greater part of our foreign commerce. Suppose England should engage in a war with a great power. Thousands of her ships would be taken for transports and other thousands might be destroyed. Our foreign commerce would be destroyed, and the products we now send abroad would be left on our hands, glutting our markets and bringing upon us industrial ruin and widespread commercial disaster. Farmers and manufacturers would suffer alike, and the laborer and his family would face the wolf of hunger in his home. We are at the very point where Thomas Jefferson, whom I have heard referred to to-night as the patron saint of the Democratic Party, said protective and defensive measures become necessary.

He said:

> If particular nations grasp at undue shares of our commerce, and, more especially, if they seize on the means of the United States to convert them into aliment for their own strength, and withdraw them entirely from the support of those to whom they belong, defensive and protective measures become necessary on the part of the nation whose marine resources are thus invaded; or it will be disarmed of its defense, its productions will be at the mercy of the nation which has possessed itself exclusively of the means of carrying them, and its politics may be influenced by those who command its commerce.

The very thing mentioned there happened. In addition to what I have just read, I wish to read a brief extract from a book called "The Heritage of Tyre," by William Brown Meloney. The book was published in 1916, after the World War had begun. I desire to call attention to his vivid description of the situation at that time:

> In this year of 1916 the United States, without a merchant marine, bereft of ships, is more than half the slave that she was in 1861. What boots it that labor is free if the products of its industry and enterprise are denied their markets?
> Turn where one will and it is to behold the evidence of its vassalage. Leave any one of our glutted seaports, with piers and warehouses and freight terminals burdened beyond capacity by an immovable commerce, and follow the railroad lines into the interior, across the continent—go north, go south, go east, go west, and there is not a mile that has not a chapter to contribute to the tale. All of the conceivable products of 100,000,000 people lie along those steel arteries arrested by embargoes. What moves is what the warring nations choose to buy and will receive from the railroads at tidewater. All else must abide its time or rot, for as Europe controls the world's deep-water tonnage, so our market is limited to her will. It matters not that there are other markets in which we could sell and entrench ourselves to the advantage of future trade and expansion. We haven't the ships to reach them.
> Turn from field and plain and orchard and forest to the manufacturing centers, and it is to find the same paralysis of industry, for industry lives by import as well as by export. Here a factory stands silent because it can not get tin from England; there a silk loom lies manacled because it can not obtain the raw product from China. As Britain controls her shipping, so does Japan control hers. Japan has but to say to her merchant marine, "Our ships will carry Japanese exports from December to May and imports for Japanese consumption only from June to November," and that is sufficient. The rest of the world may whistle. What is true of those two nations is likewise true of all others.
> As this is being set down, comes news that Britain is promulgating an order in council prohibiting among other things the importation of automobiles for private use, fruit, musical instruments, cutlery of all kinds, hardware, yarns, chinaware, fancy goods, and even soaps; and it is explained that this is being done, not as a matter of policy but because of a shortage of ships; that Britain must have American wheat and corn and meat and that other things can not be permitted to take up the space of her vessels. Yet wheat and corn and meat and munitions of war are but a part of American commerce.
> At peace and neutral though we are, belligerency in the present situation could exact no more of us.

Mr. President, those are words written at a time when the need for our ships was evident to everybody. I fear, however, that we forget these things, and so I have called them to your attention.

With reference to national security, it seems to me the value of an American merchant marine was demonstrated most conclusively by the situation that confronted us when we entered the World War and the steps that we took when we entered it. It was most fortunate for civilization, it was most fortunate for the associated powers that when we entered the war there were ships of Germany interned in our ports, and in my judgment the German ships won the victory for the associated powers in the World War. That is a strong statement to make, but what was the situation?

When we entered the World War we had no ships. We had none to transport our soldiers across the sea. They could not get to the battle front unless they were carried by shipping. Where did we get the shipping? We took these interned ships in the harbor of New York and in the other harbors of this country and we converted them into transports for our soldiers; and it is said that the Leviathan, the pride of our shipping fleet now, a German ship, carried to Europe 275,000 American soldiers. If we had not had those ships where we could get at them, it is very likely that our boys would not have been transported across the sea when they were. Very likely they would have been delayed six months in getting to the battle line in France.

I think military authorities concede that if they had not gotten there when they did, the outcome of the war very likely would have been different. If our soldiers had been delayed six months in getting to the battle line in France, the chances are that Germany would have cut in two the allied armies, gotten to the coast, and the result of the war would have been entirely different.

I hope we may never be found in that condition again. It was most fortunate that these ships were in our ports so that we could take them; but we can not depend upon that again. If we get into trouble again—which we hope we may never do—we can not rely upon having our enemy ships in our ports, that we may take them and transport our troops with them wherever they may be needed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want the Senator to get the idea from the question I am about to ask that I am trying to belittle the argument he is making, because I am not. I am in sympathy with it. At the same time, it seems to me that it could be very well said that the argument the Senator is now making, and using the German ships as an illustration, if reversed and applied to Germany, would show that the thing to do would be not to have a merchant marine. If Germany had not had a merchant marine, we would not have had those ships, so that in her case a merchant marine was to her detriment; and the next war may find us in the position she was in, and the enemy using our merchant marine. In other words, it is a good deal like the early bird that catches the worm; it is the early worm that gets caught.

Mr. JONES. I think we had better take the chance of having shipping for our security. We might lose it in that way, but I do not think we are likely to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on the other hand, may I suggest to the Senator, if he will allow me, that it was the fact that Great Britain had some 18,000,000 tons of merchant shipping that enabled her to survive after the submarine campaign was instituted. If she had not had the enormous number of merchant ships that she did possess after that campaign was started—and she lost about 1 out of 6 that left her ports—altogether some 7,000,000 tons of merchant shipping was sunk by the submarines—if Great Britain had not had an enormous number of merchant ships, she could not have supplied her army or her people with food.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that; but, at the same time, if we are going to take the argument of the Senator from Washington at 100 per cent, we will have to admit that if Germany had not had a merchant marine she probably would have won the war.

Mr. JONES. No; my judgment is that if Germany had not had a merchant marine she would not have gotten into the war; she would have hesitated about entering it.

Mr. NORRIS. It would have been a good thing for Germany if she had stayed out.

Mr. JONES. Yes; it would have been a good thing for the world, of course, if she had stayed out; but she did not. She got into the war.

Mr. NORRIS. And she had a merchant marine.

Mr. JONES. This was a condition that helped us.

Mr. NORRIS. If she had not had it and had stayed out of the war, it would have been a good thing.

Mr. FLETCHER. And very likely if the United States had had sufficient merchant marine, there would not have been any submarine warfare.

Mr. JONES. Yes; very likely that is true, too.

I want to insert in the RECORD right at this point an editorial from the Washington Post of January 12. It deals with the situation in, I think, a very splendid way from different standpoints; but I just want to read this clause:

> The greatest weakness of the national defense is the present merchant marine. It is the weak link that breaks the chain of national security. The Nation will not be capable of defending its commerce until it has suitable merchant ships and a stronger fleet. The national-defense feature of this problem commands the attention of Congress at this session.

I just want to call attention to this. We talk about the need of a navy for the defense of our commerce, and yet if our commerce is not carried in American ships it will very likely be carried in neutral ships, if carried at all; and we do not need a navy to defend the neutral shipping of the world.

Mr. President, I think everybody wants a merchant marine. I have never met anyone who did not say, when the matter was brought up, "Yes; we want a merchant marine"; but we divide over details. We divide over methods as to how we get it; and this is really what prevented us from having a merchant marine when the World War broke out.

How can we get an American merchant marine? To my notion, there are just two ways by which we can get it. One is through private energy, private capital; the other is through the Government. I frankly say that I should like to see our American merchant marine privately owned and developed with private capital. I think, taking it on the whole, that that is a more efficient way to do it, a more economical way to do it; and I had come to the point where I had concluded that I would vote for any measure that I believed had any chance of success that would lead private capital to go into the building of an American merchant marine; but I have come to the conclusion that it is impossible to pass through Congress any measure that will give the aid that is necessary to induce private capital to go into the shipbuilding and ship-operating business.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. Did the committee give full consideration to the possibility of securing capital for a privately owned merchant marine at a low rate of interest, to be loaned by the Government to private parties for this purpose, in order that they might have the benefit of the Government guaranty of their capital, and therefore secure money at 3 per cent instead of at 6 per cent?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the committee considered the whole problem as we thought it confronted us. I have been in Congress for 29 years. When I first entered the House I became a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I knew what we had been attempting to do for 25 years preceding that time. We had been striving to adopt measures of some kind that would lead to the building up of an American merchant marine. We had not been able to do it. I think the first term I was here the Merchant Marine Committee considered the shipping problem. We tried to reach an agreement with reference to a bill that we thought would build up the American merchant marine. We could not do it; at any rate, we could not reach a conclusion upon any bill that seemed to meet the approval either of the House of Representatives or of the Senate. During the last 60 years the only measure looking to aid or the building up of a merchant marine through private enterprise and energy in the nature of a subsidy or whatever you may call it, Government aid, was the passage of the mail act of 1891, under which, my recollection is, we got just two ships.

I remember when what was known as the Hanna-Grosvenor bill was brought up. That was a subsidy proposition. I was on the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries when it was considered. I remember when it was brought up in the House of Representatives. An effort was made to get it through the Senate. It was not passed through either House. It could not command a majority vote in either House.

So much for that.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator, although I have particular points to cover.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I know that. I fear, however, that the answer of the Senator was not quite responsive to the question of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. JONES. I am going to answer it at the conclusion of what I am saying.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JONES. It is within the memory of many here—I think about four or five years ago—when we had up what was known as the Harding subsidy bill. I remember the conditions surrounding that measure. It was a measure urged by the President. It was recognized as an administration bill, for the building up of the American merchant marine. The Republicans controlled both the House and the Senate and the Executive. In the House of Representatives—and I think it is not unparliamentary to refer to this—there were 298 Republicans and 130 Democrats. In other words, the administration party, the Republican Party, just four or five years ago had a majority in the House of Representatives of 168 over the strong minority party. They brought in this subsidy bill, they brought it up for consideration, it came to a vote, and what was the vote? The vote was yeas 208, nays 184, or a bare majority of 24, with a normal administration majority of 168.

That bill came over to the Senate, and in the Senate the administration was proportionately as strong as in the House. In the Senate there were 59 Republicans and 37 Democrats. In other words, the Republican Party had a majority of 22 in this body. It was my duty, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, to take charge of that measure; and I remember how we had that bill before the Senate day after day and night after night. We could not get it to a vote. We did not get it to a vote. But I know this, that we made our poll; we tried to ascertain the strength of our bill, and at no time were we certain that we would have even a majority if that bill should come to a vote. We did figure that if we could get it to a vote we could pass it by one. That was as near as we could get, and we were not certain of that.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. At least the opposition to the bill must have felt assured that it would pass should it ever be permitted to reach a vote.

Mr. JONES. Not necessarily. They were not sure that they could beat it if it came to a vote, but they knew that if they could prevent a vote until the 4th of March the bill could not pass; and that was what happened.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator ought to say, and I am satisfied he will be glad to do so, because he is always fair, that that bill came up in the Senate in a short session, after there had been an election, and that—and I do not mean to be at all offensive to anyone—we had in the Senate at that time a large number of so-called "lame ducks." Was it not conceded that the bill could not pass through either House with the new Congress that had been elected at that time, and that if it had not been that it was in a short session, with the power of the President behind the bill, and that there were a lot of Members of the Senate who had been defeated for reelection, most of whom were appointed to office by the President soon after the Congress adjourned, the bill would not have been able to command a majority? It was conceded that it could not have commanded a majority. Is not that true?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I think that is true; but, notwithstanding that, I am satisfied that even if the election had been different we could not have passed the bill through the Senate when we were trying to pass it. I think those who were opposed to the bill were not influenced by the outcome of the election, but they were expressing their views with reference to the measure on the merits of it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. I am somewhat interested in the historical discussion in the Senate four or five years ago of the Lasker bill and so-called Harding bill. I get the implication from what the Senator said that he thinks there never was any test in this body on that bill. I recall distinctly that a motion was made to substitute the so-called filled milk bill, and to displace the Shipping Board bill, and that that motion to displace was carried, which brought about a distinct test in this body as to the opponents of and those favorable to the merchant marine measure which was known as a subsidy proposition.

Mr. JONES. I had really forgotten that and I am glad the Senator has called our attention to it. It simply intensifies my statement that there is a situation adverse to legislation of this kind.

The Senator from Connecticut asked if we considered this matter of reduced interest, and so on. That is a subsidy, pure and simple, and the committee, in view of the record made during the last 60 years, felt that it would be useless to present a measure in the nature of a subsidy. We believe that the conditions in the Senate and the House are much more unfavorable to a subsidy now than they were when this other bill was up, and I think the Senator himself will agree to that.

As I said a moment ago, we had 22 majority in the Senate of the United States. Everybody knows what we have now. Everybody knows whether any measure in the nature of a subsidy would come as near enactment as that measure did.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator, who has been here so very much longer than I have and who is so very much more familiar with these matters, perhaps can tell me, if it will not interfere with the progress of his speech, and if it will I shall be glad to have him answer at some other time——

Mr. JONES. That will be all right.

Mr. BINGHAM. As everyone knows, Government operation in business has always been more expensive and more extravagant and less efficient than private operation. I would like to have the Senator tell me why he thinks that a majority of the Members of Congress will be willing to pass a bill which will place a heavier burden on the taxpayers of the country than to pass a bill which would relieve them of a part of that burden, and merely lend a helping hand to those who are seeking to secure capital in order to build up the merchant marine on a sound basis and by private initiative? Furthermore, although the Senator has stated very emphatically that it is a subsidy, it does not seem to me to be a subsidy. It is not a direct payment of funds, but rather it is a kind of guaranty to these individuals who are willing to do something which the country needs and which will be of great benefit to the national defense and to the building up of the merchant marine. I hope the country is willing to help them secure their funds at a lower rate of interest than they otherwise could get. Why is it that the feeling is so keen in favor of Government operation that the Congress, he thinks, is willing to pass a bill which will put a larger burden on the taxpayer, instead of giving some kind of a helping hand to private interests at lesser cost?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it is not for me to say why Senators vote one way or why Senators vote another.

Mr. BINGHAM. Have they not given their opinions in public sufficiently often in the Senator's long experience in Congress so that he might be willing to give us a brief summary of these reasons? The situation seems to me almost incredible.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. Just a moment. I give to the Senator the facts of 60 years of history of our country, when we have been trying to do this thing. It seems to me that those facts and that record are stronger than anything than I can say as to why a Senator votes this way or votes that way. We have refused to do what the Senator suggests ought to be done, and we have refused to do it over a period of 60 years. In my judgment, the importance of a merchant marine is so great, and the time is so pressing, that, as we can not, in my judgment, get a merchant marine one way, I think we should take it another.

Now I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I simply wanted to recall historically to the Senator's attention that while it is probably incredible that the Government should enter into any enterprise or pursue any adventure, that applies to most adventures and most enterprises, not to Cape Cod, or the purchase of the Cape Cod Canal, because there a different rule obtains so far as the Government is concerned, and it might well be that the circumstances surrounding a merchant marine would be quite as important to the United States of America as for the United States of America to maintain the Cape Cod Canal, or to purchase it, so that the Government should maintain and should operate it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. My good friend from California, in bringing the Cape Cod Canal into the discussion, endeavors to capitalize that hostility to certain New England measures that has been vividly brought to our attention on the floor of the Senate within the past few weeks. May I call to his attention the fact——

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator permit me to deny any hostility to any New England measure, or any other measure? I was simply recalling how, under some circumstances, Government ownership was a boon to the people, but how, under other circumstances, it was a terrible thing to the people. I do not assail the Cape Cod Canal, nor our New England brethren, in the slightest degree. That is far from me. I simply wanted to instance the particular occasion when our friends here who inveigh against the Government entering any enterprise were very strongly in favor of the Government doing that very thing.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield for a moment further?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. It does not seem to me that the two matters are comparable at all, because from the very earliest days the Government has recognized the fact that part of its work was improving the navigable waters of the United States has dredged harbors and rivers, has built the Panama Canal and other canals. Therefore the ownership of the Cape Cod Canal comes under a line of precedents which have shown themselves to be useful and valuable, whereas the proposal to put the Government into the shipping business might be said to come under the wretched precedent which was followed in war time of putting the Government into the railroad business and into other forms of business, in which experience has shown that the Government is not successful.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the Senator's narration of the history of subsidy legislation in the Senate would not be complete if it were not asserted that since the failure of the Harding subsidy bill no President and no Member of the House or Senate has ever proposed a subsidy bill of the character of that bill at least. Am I correct?

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that the President has said in one or two messages that there should be Government aid, but in the last message of the President even that suggestion was not made.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. No such bill has been presented to the House or the Senate upon which any vote was taken, at least, or has come out of a committee?

Mr. JONES. Not since the Harding bill.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Washington, however, presented such a bill last year.

Mr. JONES. I presented such a bill last year and I presented such a bill this year. I did that under these circumstances: The Senator will remember that we passed a resolution through the Senate—I think a couple of years ago—asking the Shipping Board to investigate the situation and recommend to Congress concrete measures for the building up of an American merchant marine. The Shipping Board held hearings all over the country; they got the views of the people all over the country; and finally, while they did not submit it as a part of their report, I asked them to prepare such a subsidy bill as in their judgment would give us an adequate American merchant marine.

They prepared such a bill. In conjunction with them I prepared a bill, the alternative for the Government. I introduced both of those bills. We had the matter up in the Commerce Committee at the close of the last session of Congress. The committee came to the conclusion that we could not pass a subsidy bill, we could not enact such a bill into law, and as the only alternative they reported the bill providing for a Government merchant marine, which was substantially the same as provided in the pending bill. At the beginning of this session of Congress I reintroduced the two bills. I reintroduced the subsidy bill and I reintroduced the pending bill, and under the circumstances which I have just mentioned the committee reported this bill.

I have tried to make it clear that personally I would favor a subsidy bill and would vote for a subsidy bill if I thought there was any possibility of getting it through and getting one that would be adequate. I am going to refer to this phase of the situation a little bit later on, but I am going to say now that even if we could pass a subsidy bill nobody knows whether it would accomplish what we want done. Nobody knows whether it would be adequate and sufficient to induce private capital to build the ships that we want built, and if it failed to do that then we would be in a position where nothing could be done for 2 or 3 or 4 years.

I believe in putting something through that would be certain. If we can supplement it by and by with something which would induce private capital to take over the ships we built, and to build new ships and maintain the service, I would support it. But I want something that will insure a merchant marine, and in my judgment the only reasonable assurance that we can get is for the Government to get behind it, and that is exactly what is proposed to be done in this bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. A moment ago the Senator from Connecticut asked the Senator from Washington if any consideration had been given to loans at low rates of interest, and I think the reply made by the Senator from Washington was that consideration had not been given, because that would be in the nature of a subsidy.

Mr. JONES. No; we considered that matter in determining what we thought was the wise thing to do. We came to the conclusion that there was no possibility of passing a subsidy bill, and I think the committee felt that that was in the nature of a subsidy.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator another question? We have this loan fund of about $80,000,000 or $90,000,000.

Mr. JONES. I think now it is about $90,000,000.

Mr. COPELAND. By the way, in that connection I want my memory refreshed. I helped the Senator, so far as I could in my weak way, to add to what he called the fighting fund. How much did we add that year?

Mr. JONES. I think it was $5,000,000. It was proposed to add $10,000,000, and we got $5,000,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Has that been exhausted yet?

Mr. JONES. That bill has not passed at this session. I rather think we had something of the kind in the other bill, too.

Mr. COPELAND. As a matter of fact, we have in the loan fund $80,000,000 or $90,000,000. Would the Senator consider that lending that money to private citizens of the United States at the current rate of interest—I mean by that the rate the Government would have to pay for any money that it borrowed—under the provisions of section 11 of the Jones Act, I think it is, would be in the nature of a subsidy?

Mr. JONES. I think so. It would not be a very big one. I do not believe that it would lead to the building of new ships for the overseas trade unless we had something else to supplement it.

Mr. COPELAND. Is the Senator familiar with the hearing held this morning before the Shipping Board?

Mr. JONES. No; I was present at the flood-control hearing this morning.

Mr. COPELAND. A definite proposal was made this morning for the building of six ships of 33 to 35 knots, finer ships than are now owned or being built by any other country. I am going to speak on this at some length at a later time. One of the conditions imposed upon proceeding with that plan is that there should be a revision of the loan provision to make possible the building of these ships with a loan of three-quarters of their value instead of two-thirds as it is at present, and that the rate charged should be the current rate.

Without considering the other elements involved in the proposal would the Senator consider that that would be an improper use of the loan fund if ample security were given for the return of the money and if the Government were reimbursed at the current rate of interest, and if repayment must be made complete in 20 years? Would the Senator consider that a subsidy or an improper use of the fund?

Mr. JONES. I would not consider it an improper use of the funds. The Senator knows my position. I will vote for a subsidy bill if it is one which I think will bring results, but I have come to the conclusion that we can not pass any such bill. The Senator does not need to argue those things with me.

Mr. COPELAND. No; I know that; and I know very well the honorable purpose of the Senator.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I know the Senator does.

Mr. COPELAND. But I want to ask him his individual opinion. Would he see any objection to a modification of that section of the Jones Act permitting the lending of 75 per cent instead of 66 per cent for 20 years instead of 15 years, the rate to be fixed at the current rate to the Government?

Mr. JONES. I would not so far as I am individually concerned, but I am satisfied that a measure like this is substantially the only measure that stands any chance of getting through the Congress, though I am standing by this bill and propose to stand by it even though there are other matters which I might like to see put into the law. I want to see above everything else a merchant marine, an adequate American merchant marine, of up-to-date ships.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator was asked about subsidies. As I recall, when a subsidy bill was proposed in 1921 or 1923 the Senator stood on this floor for nearly two and one-half months——

Mr. JONES. I sat most of the time! [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. And tried to get that subsidy bill passed. The Senator found it was impossible. The Senator still believes it is impossible to pass a subsidy bill, does he not?

Mr. JONES. I think it is more impossible now than it was then.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE and Mr. EDGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator from California rose first. I will yield to him, and then will yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I inquire whether the Senator expects to bring this matter on for a vote to-day?

Mr. JONES. If I could do so I would, but I do not expect to be able to do so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I and several other Senators interested in it must be before the Finance Committee at 2 o'clock.

Mr. JONES. I do not expect it to come to a vote to-day.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I want to make some remarks on the bill before it comes to a vote, if I have the opportunity.

Mr. JONES. I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator has very clearly expressed his desire to get some bill passed that will at least seem to make possible a merchant marine, in which desire I heartily join; but why is it necessary in that connection to go to the extreme either way? The proposition of the Senator from New York as a business proposition provides apparently 75 per cent from the Government and 25 per cent from private capital. The bill before us, if we recondition or rebuild the ships, must necessarily call upon the Government to provide 100 per cent.

Mr. COPELAND. With no return of the money.

Mr. EDGE. Yes. Why is it interposed from time to time that the Senate will not consider a business proposition because at one time or another in the past 60 years it refused to pass an out-and-out subsidy bill. Possibly this is in the nature of a subsidy, but it is a clear business proposition which I believe the taxpayers of the country would approve, because it relieves them of 25 per cent of the burden. Why should it be assumed in advance that it would not pass? I am inclined to believe the chairman of the committee is probably incorrect, and I hope he is, in stating that the Senate would refuse to accept 25 per cent from private citizens when such a proposition would carry with it the very assurance which the Senator is looking for, and that is the building of ships. Why should not we save 25 per cent if it is assured that the ships will be built?

Mr. JONES. Suppose we pass a provision carrying just what is proposed here. What assurance have we that the people will go on and build the ships?

Mr. EDGE. As I understand the proposition that has been made to the Shipping Board only to-day, it is that if the Senate will provide that amendment they will enter into a contract, with bonds, to build the ships. I know nothing more about it than that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from New Jersey a question. Was this made as a condition to our not legislating as proposed in the bill presented by the Senator from Washington?

Mr. EDGE. I do not understand that it was.

Mr. COPELAND. I can answer no; that it is not.

Mr. EDGE. It is simply a suggested amendment to the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. What conflict, therefore, is there in the bill and in the proposition? Why not embody them in two separate bills?

Mr. EDGE. Why not embody them in one bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. One provides for a loan of this fund the Government has, amounting to nearly $100,000,000, to people who will build ships and operate them, and one provides for the Government taking over and controlling the ships which the Government now owns. The two provisions do not seem to me to be coupled together in any way, and they may not work together. However, I wish to say that I have not understood that those who are engaged or desire to engage in the private operation of ships have had trouble about getting the money to build the ships or have had trouble about the rate of interest that they would have to pay for the money they would have to use to build the ships.

The trouble with them has been that they have contended that the cost of construction is such and the cost of operation is such that they can not operate them successfully in competition with foreign ships. If we could loan them the money and the ships should be built, does not the Senator think they would be here knocking at the doors of Congress and asking us for a subsidy of some sort by granting them fat mail contracts or otherwise for the purpose of putting them upon an equality with what they say is foreign competition?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will permit me to answer the Senator from North Carolina, because apparently the Senator from North Carolina directed his question to me——

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I did.

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from New York for that purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, in addition to a modification of the loan fund, they are asking that the ocean mail act shall be amended, not to give a subsidy——

Mr. SIMMONS. To give what? If not a subsidy, then what? Just ordinary pay, or do they want pay which is so far in excess of the actual cost of transportation that it becomes either a subsidy or a subvention, which is the same thing?

Mr. COPELAND. I discussed the matter with the Senator from North Carolina on Saturday, but I have fuller information now. There is no desire to ask anything in the way of a subsidy or subvention. It is asked that there shall be a stabilization of the rates, a readjustment of the rates, and that the Postmaster General shall be permitted to enter into contracts for a period of 5 to 10 years on the basis of the service rendered.

I hope to show to-morrow, by facts which I shall present, that the total amount spent for mail service under these conditions will not exceed the amount spent now. The Senator will probably ask, how then does it help the company? It is because we are now paying to British bottoms $1,500,000 for the carriage of our mails by reason of the fact that our own United States lines are inadequate to provide the ships and so, under this arrangement of the mail service, that money will go to American ships which will be built under the further conditions which were discussed this morning.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator, but I think when we do it will be merely the same old proposition of a subsidy.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator from Washington be so good as to tell me whether there has ever been a vote in either House on the question of direct loans to be made so as to enable those who are anxious to build up a merchant marine to secure their money at a lower rate of interest than they could otherwise secure it upon the market?

Mr. JONES. There has been none, except on the provisions of the act of 1920 that in the case of ships built for the overseas trade loans could be advanced at, I think, 4 or 4½ per cent, and in the case of ships built for the coastwise trade at, I think, 5 per cent.

Mr. BINGHAM. Was there a vote on that provision?

Mr. JONES. That provision was adopted in the merchant marine act of 1920, but there has not been a solitary loan made for the building of a ship in the foreign trade, although there have been several loans made for the building of ships in the coastwise trade.

Mr. BINGHAM. Were there any votes in committee on the particular proposal which the Senator from New York mentioned a few moments ago?

Mr. JONES. No; there were no special votes except the committee voted down the subsidy proposition. The committee were practically unanimously in the view that we could not get anything in the nature of a subsidy through.

Mr. BINGHAM. Would the Senator be willing to listen to a definition of the word "subsidy" from the Century Dictionary? The Senator has denounced this proposal so emphatically——

Mr. JONES. I shall be very glad to listen to the definition, but I do not think it will affect the judgment of Senators in the least. The Senator from Connecticut, I think, understands my position. He does not need to read the definition of a subsidy to me to persuade me under proper conditions to vote for a subsidy, but if he desires to read the definition for the enlightenment of other Senators here, I will be very glad to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. BINGHAM. The only reason I should like to read it is that I feel that while the Senator and I are in perfect accord and are willing to vote for a subsidy to help the merchant marine, the word "subsidy" has a very peculiar connotation in the minds of certain people. As the Century Dictionary says:

> Writers who oppose all uses of public funds [i. e., to aid private enterprise] commonly prefer to characterize them as "subsidies," while those who approve of them commonly prefer the term "subvention."

There is something peculiar about the word "subsidy." If the word "subsidy" is mentioned everybody immediately shuts up and withdraws into his shell and trembles in fear lest he be accused of doing something frightful. That is why I was sorry to hear the Senator use the word "subsidy" in objecting to the proposal which was referred to by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], which would permit a new enterprise contemplating the construction of very large and very fast ships to secure a part of the money needed for those ships through a loan guaranteed by the Government or through money loaned them by the Government at the same rate of interest which the Government must pay therefor. Actually, according to the Century Dictionary, a subsidy is—

> Any direct pecuniary aid furnished by the State to private industrial undertakings, or to eleemosynary institutions. Such aid includes bounties on exports, those paid to the owners of ships for running them, and donations of land or money to railroad, manufacturing, theatrical, and other enterprises.

It does not seem to me that the proposal referred to by the Senator from New York may in fairness be called a "subsidy," unless all the laws that we pass here that are of any benefit whatsoever to private enterprises, by giving them governmental recognition or by giving them governmental approval, may be called subsidies.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] suggests to me that the word "subsidy" had acquired a sort of a political meaning which is not covered by the dictionary. Furthermore, in my opinion, every Senator will be his own judge as to whether a proposition is a subsidy or whether it is Government aid such as he can support. That, I think, has always been the basis upon which different Senators and Representatives have acted on this question. I am not scared at the word "subsidy"; I do not care what Government aid may be called; as an independent proposition I would give any sort of Government aid that would insure us an American merchant marine, and I would stand for it. But, Mr. President, I am not going to be sidetracked with reference to this bill. In my judgment, this is the only possible bill which can be passed which will assure us an American merchant marine. So, while amendments may be proposed that independently I would vote for and would be glad to support, I will not support them as amendments to the pending bill because, in my opinion, it is the only measure that stands any possibility of passage; and, furthermore, it is the only measure which, if passed, affords any assurance that we will obtain any new ships.

Take the proposition suggested by the Senator from New York. I do not question the good faith of the gentlemen who advance that suggestion. I had a talk with them the other day. I do not believe that they would be satisfied with borrowing three-fourths of the value of the ships at current rates of interest. I think they would want mail contracts of special advantage; and, furthermore, I very seriously doubt even if we were to put into force a law under which they could get what they now suggest that they would eventually build these ships. They propose to build such ships as never were constructed heretofore, such ships as Great Britain herself has not constructed. They propose to build ships of 33 and 34 knots, of twenty-five or thirty or forty thousand tons, and run them between this country and Europe. I should like to see such ships constructed; I wish they could build them; but I very seriously doubt if they would be able to do it. However, that is not the question here. We do not know whether they will build them or not, and I am not going to support or permit, if I can prevent it, amendments to this bill at this time.

I will say to the Senator and to the gentlemen who are interested in the proposal referred to, let us pass this bill in the Senate just as quickly as possible; let us get it over to the other body; let the Members of that House suggest their proposals to it, and if they shall add some good provisions along this line that can be harmonized with the pending bill, without inconsistency between them, possibly in conference we can work out some legislation along those lines that both bodies will adopt. I hope we can, and I will do everything in my power to bring it about, but I do not want to have any such amendments put on this bill in the Senate.

I do not think it will be wise to do so from my standpoint of securing legislation under which we would obtain a merchant marine.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWELL. Is it not the purpose of this bill to provide a fleet of cargo ships?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; cargo ships, combination passenger and cargo ships, and passenger ships.

Mr. HOWELL. But is not one of the chief purposes of this bill to provide a fleet of cargo vesels?

Mr. JONES. Yes; cargo vessels that are up to date and will compete with the fleets of other countries.

Mr. HOWELL. Is it not a fact that a subsidy would not be applicable to such vessels because they could not be expected to carry the mails?

Mr. JONES. A particular kind of subsidy might not be. I presume the Senator is talking about mail pay.

Mr. HOWELL. I am talking about cargo vessels.

Mr. JONES. Then the Senator is talking about mail pay rather than a subsidy in general terms. A subsidy in general terms would provide compensation to the slower-going boats.

Mr. HOWELL. But is it not a fact that it has been held unconstitutional, or the view has been generally held that it would be unconstitutional, for us to subsidize vessels that do not carry the mails; that the only theory upon which we can support a subsidy is upon the theory of aiding in the carrying of the mails?

Mr. JONES. I will say frankly to the Senator that such a suggestion has not been brought to my attention, and in all of our subsidy bills heretofore I do not remember that that question was ever raised at all. We have proposed a subsidy regardless of mail pay or anything of the kind. I do not think that I could go quite so far as the Senator goes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. As I understand the Senator's position—and I am pleased to say I am in full accord with it—he considers the present policy of this country toward a merchant marine one of uncertainty; he considers that any subsidy legislation giving opportunity for private interests to develop the American merchant marine would be uncertain; that the bill which he now presents assures a definite, certain, unmistakable merchant marine for the American people, and that is why he is supporting this particular bill, because it is the only way we can end the uncertainty of years in establishing a definite, certain, progressive American merchant marine.

Mr. JONES. That is my judgment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the Senator is discussing one of the most important measures of legislation that we have had before us in many a day. There are but few Senators in this Chamber, and I am impelled to ask for a quorum.

Mr. JONES. I would prefer the Senator would not do that. I know Senators are busy in committees and on committee work, and they can not be both there and on the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, if the Senator objects, I will not insist upon the point.

Mr. JONES. I am not objecting.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator knows that he is discussing a very important matter, and on the other side of the Chamber I see only two Senators. It does seem to me that we ought to have more here to listen to this discussion.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will insist upon his point of order. This is a very able speech, and there ought to be a larger attendance of Senators.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is explaining the matter very lucidly and very strongly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator insists upon his point of order?

Mr. SIMMONS. I insist upon the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I get many editorials from papers and a great many letters from individuals denouncing Government ownership of ships and urging that the Government get out of the shipping business, turn over the ships to private parties, and let us have a merchant marine in private control and under private ownership. I have not seen a single editorial, I have not received a single letter pointing out how this can be accomplished or how it can be done.

I received a short time ago, from a gentleman in Cleveland, a letter taking me to task quite severely for urging Government shipping. He said, "We want private shipping." I wrote back and asked him to tell me how we could get private shipping, and I put this question to him: "There are only two ways to have a merchant marine: One is through private enterprise, and the other is through the Government. Private enterprise, apparently, will not go into it without Government aid. Congress will not provide the aid that is necessary; so the dilemma is, either Government ownership or no shipping." I said, "I should like to know how you stand on this proposition." I said to him, "I prefer Government shipping to no shipping, and I should like to have you tell me whether you prefer Government shipping to no shipping." I received no answer to this letter.

As I say, you read editorials in our papers denouncing a Government merchant marine. None of them points out how we are going to get privately owned shipping.

The Herald-Tribune of New York a few days ago had quite a sharp editorial referring to this as a foolish proposition, and suggesting that we were pressing a very foolish proposition, suggesting that the Government should get out of business and let private capital and private ownership give us a merchant marine; but they did not suggest how we could get it or how it could be done.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to say to the Senator that I was quite embarrassed because of the fact that the Herald-Tribune, to which the Senator refers, spoke kindly of me. It has never done that before, and I quite mistrust myself when the Herald-Tribune praises me for anything.

Mr. JONES. I am rather inclined to think, in view of that editorial, that the Senator is fully justified in mistrusting it.

I do not mind these criticisms. I am glad to have them. I feel that these papers are just as anxious to have a merchant marine as I am; but they ought to realize the situation that confronts us, and if they are opposed to Government shipping they should point out how we can get the aid that will give us private shipping. I should like for them to say, also, whether or not they prefer no merchant marine to a Government-owned merchant marine. Some of our people seem to take that position.

One of the Senators on this floor a few days ago gave me the impression that that at least was his attitude. He said, "Sell our ships; get the Government out of this; abolish the Shipping Board." In my judgment, that means no shipping. In my judgment, that expresses the attitude that rather than have Government ships they would prefer to have no shipping at all. It is all right for any Senator or any newspaper to take a position of that kind if he or it believes it. I would prefer almost any course that will give us a merchant marine rather than to have none at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. A great many ships have been sold or given away, one or another—practically given away, in most instances—by the Shipping Board. In connection with the argument the Senator is now making, I should be very glad if he would tell the Senator and the country what has become of these vessels that the Shipping Board has disposed of and put into private hands after five years. What has become of them? Are they still under the American flag?

Mr. JONES. I do not think the five years has expired in any case in connection with a sale of that sort. I do not think the time is up; but when the time is up these ships can go into our coastwise trade if they are not satisfied with the business that they are doing on the routes upon which they are running. I have feared that with the sale of these ships on a five-year basis, at the end of that time they would go into the coastwise trade.

I am satisfied they will do it if they are not making money. I have heard of no company that purchased the ships under the five-year limitation that is creating a reserve fund out of which to build new ships to replace the ones they are running as they wear out.

Mr. SIMMONS. Permit me to ask the Senator another question. If the Shipping Board continues to dispose of these ships and they all go into private hands, what guaranty has the Government that they will become auxiliaries to the Navy for purposes of national defense?

Mr. JONES. We have none, and, as a matter of fact, we have only probably 18 or 19 ships that would really be suitable for auxiliaries for the Navy. They have all been sold under this five-year limitation. How long they will last, how long they will be suitable, nobody knows, or where they will go at the end of the five years nobody knows. The only limit is that they can not go under a foreign flag without the consent of the Shipping Board. There is nothing in the world to prevent them from going into the coastwise trade.

Mr. SIMMONS. If these ships are built and owned by the Government, as provided in the bill, they will be so constructed as to be auxiliaries to the Navy?

Mr. JONES. We provide that in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is provided in the bill. That will cost the Government something. Does the Senator think that cost will be any greater than the subsidy we would have to pay to private capital, without getting these auxiliaries, or a guaranty of auxiliaries?

Mr. JONES. I doubt that it would cost any more, and it will insure the ships.

Now, Mr. President, I want to note the attitude of some of the big men of the country. Here is a statement from John E. Edgerton, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, in a speech to his organization down in Chattanooga a short time ago, when he said this:

> Shall an aroused citizenship rise up in the majesty of a calmly conscious right and say to the Government: "Get out of our business for which you were not intended and for which you are not qualified, either by experience or natural ability, and go back to where you belong and stay there"?

No doubt Mr. Edgerton is a fine man, no doubt he is an able man, no doubt he is a good business man, and he gives expression to this sentiment because of his opposition to the Government in business. But apparently he does not consider the fact that we have no privately owned American merchant marine, that we have no private capital to which these ships will go, that will run them and replace them and keep the services going, and build new ships, and bring those now in existence up to date; and he does not seem to appreciate the fact that apparently it is impossible to get Congress to pass legislation that will induce private capital to go into the shipbuilding business and the ship-operating business under the American flag.

That phase of it is, in a way, the controlling phase of the case. It is because we can not induce private capital to go into this that we are urging this measure. We believe that we should have this measure to give us a merchant marine, rather than to have none at all.

Mr. SMITH. I want to ask the Senator whether the party who made the statement he has just read, inviting us to go back to where we belong and get out of business, is in favor of a subsidy or not?

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether he is or not. I would guess that he would probably be.

Mr. SMITH. Very well. For 60 years or more we have had no merchant marine, and the advocates of a privately owned merchant marine come to Congress and insist that we shall guarantee them against any loss out of the Treasury of the United States in order that they may compete with foreign countries. That is inviting us to go into the shipping business to that extent, at least, for the benefit of the private individuals who own these vessels, when the proposition of the Senator and those who are advocating his measure is that whenever loss is sustained the Government shall assume, and whatever profits there are the Government shall have them, so that the profits and losses shall be distributed for the account of all the American people, and not private individuals.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have here a quotation from the address of Philip H. Gadsden to the United States Chamber of Commerce at its meeting on May 4, 1927. Mr. Gadsden is very highly spoken of here as a splendid citizen and a fine business man, and I have no doubt that these commendations are fully justified. Yet he does not seem to appreciate what the shipping situation is. This is what he said:

> No special familiarity with the problems of the shipping business is needed by business men of America to pass judgment upon the policy of the Government owning and operating a merchant marine.

Possibly it is true that he understands fully the problem of the shipping business and that he thinks that no special familiarity is needed with reference to it. But he evidently does not know, or at least does not think very much about, what we might term the political situation, if you please, which exists in Congress. He said:

This is only a phase of a much larger question which at this time is giving the business men of the United States concern, and that is, How far shall Government invade the field of business?

Then he said:

As I understand the temper of the business men of this country, we are opposed to Government entering into any phase of business, and we are looking hopefully to the time in the near future when the Government will retire from the shipping business.

Note this statement as showing the apparent unfamiliarity of this great business man with the shipping history and business conditions of the country:

We are looking hopefully to the time in the near future when Government will retire from the shipping business and turn back this great field of American business into the hands of American business.

American business, if it ever had the shipping business, has not had it for at least 60 years. There is no American business that had charge of shipping business to which this could be turned back, as this gentleman seems to suggest, and American business is not ready, it is not willing, it will not take over the shipping business without some Government aid. Mr. Gadsden ought to realize that, and I would just like to know what Mr. Gadsden would say to the proposition, If we must have Government shipping in order to have a merchant marine, do you prefer to have none rather than to have Government shipping?

Then another gentleman who seemed to be quite influential in connection with the Chamber of Commerce of the United States was William H. Douglass, of New York. I know that Mr. Douglass is a very fine man and a very patriotic citizen. What does he say with reference to the resolution then pending before the chamber of commerce?—

As the resolution says, we have got to have something substantial in the way of a mail or a direct subsidy to enable those ships to be run to advantage by the people who take them up and put their money into those operations. Unless you do that, and Congress subscribes to that policy, you will never be able to build up an American merchant marine.

I assume that he means in private hands, and that, Mr. President, emphasizes the attitude and view of the committee. He said further:

We have got to do something for shipping other than talk. The Congress of the United States have got to make up their minds to pay a reasonable subvention to establish these lines and keep them going.

Mr. Douglass, I think, was a Member of the House a good many years ago. He appreciates the political phase of the situtation, and the really practical phase of it. He says that you can not have shipping in private hands without Government aid, and he ought to know well enough the history of this proposition to realize the difficulties and practically the absolute impossibility of getting Congress to extend such aid.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States passed a resolution the logical result of which, as I construe it, as I understand their attitude, is that they would rather have no merchant marine than a Government merchant marine.

Mr. President, I do not favor that position. I think, as I said before, that a merchant marine is of such vital consequence not only to commerce but to our national security that if I can not get it other than by Government, I take it by Government.

I want to note just one objection made to the Government running these ships. They say that the Government should not compete with private enterprise and private shipping lines, and that is one objection that is urged to-day to the action of the Shipping Board. The Government ships are not now being run in competition with private shipping and private lines. The Shipping Board is striving to keep from doing that. It does not desire to put the Government resources up against private enterprise where private enterprise is doing things and actually carrying on the business.

Mr. GEORGE. Is not that the announced policy of the Shipping Board?

Mr. JONES. I think so. I want to call attention to what I might term the flimsiness of this objection. There is only one ship privately owned that was not purchased from the Shipping Board, flying the American flag, that is running across the Atlantic, and that is a ship under the International Mercantile Marine.

Mr. President, there are many objections urged to Government ownership and Government operation of ships. For the sake of the argument, I am going to concede every one of them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not know whether they still have the contract or not, but the International Mercantile Marine, as the Senator will recall, a few years ago had a contract with Great Britain that if war ever broke out all of the ships they had should be turned over to Great Britain.

Mr. JONES. Those things are in the record, and the contracts of those lines with the railroads of the country, by which they were to give a preference to foreign ships, and so on, are all in the record; but I am not going into those things now.

Mr. President, we can build a merchant marine. The Government can do it. We can operate it. We are operating it. In my judgment we can eventually operate it efficiently and economically. We are getting down to an economical basis even to-day with the uncertainties that exist and with the character of ships we have. Just a few years ago we appropriated $50,000,000 a year to make up the deficit in connection with the operation of our ships. For the current year, my recollection is, that we had an appropriation of only a little over $13,000,000 for that purpose. I understand that the estimates by the Shipping Board to operate the lines which it established and its shipping during the next year are only a little over $13,000,000. In a bill which is likely to pass the other body to-day there is an appropriation of a little over $12,000,000. It is very likely that that $12,000,000 will take care of the operation of those ships. Possibly they will get the cost reduced and bring it down to a lower sum. They have been gradually reducing it every year during the last five or six years.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. My information is that the cost of operation this last November was something like 20 per cent less than it was for the corresponding month a year ago. The cost of operation is being cut down and the efficiency of service being built up, because they seem to be now seriously trying to make the operation a success.

Shortly after the war, during the high-rate period, our ships actually made money. There was a profit then of nearly $200,000,000, so that if that were set opposite all our losses it would be found that really the Government operation has cost the people of the country very little, if any, money at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to inquire of the Senator whether the American railroads are still operating under contracts by which they turn to foreign shipping all the overseas trade which they carry to the ocean? I understand that our railroads did not patronize American ships, but carried the freight and delivered it to foreign ships for transshipment across the ocean.

Mr. JONES. My understanding is that those contracts have all been canceled. I have not looked into this phase of the matter for two or three years. At that time there was just one transcontinental road that had an agreement of that kind, but my understanding is that they have all canceled those agreements.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington a question?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Florida suggested and, as I understood, the Senator from Washington concurred in the statement that in the last year they have reduced operating expenses some 20 per cent.

Mr. JONES. That was in one month as compared with the corresponding month of the preceding year.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of what did those savings consist?

Mr. JONES. Probably the Senator may have looked into that matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought the Senator had looked into it.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Florida suggested that saving.

Mr. CARAWAY. There must have been a tremendous waste in the administration of the previous year that could have its overhead reduced 20 per cent in a month. I agree with the Senator from Washington that we have to have a merchant marine. There is an operating loss now of about $12,000,000.

Mr. JONES. That was during the last year. The current year is estimated at about $13,000,000.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does that take into consideration any replacement?

Mr. JONES. No; I think not.

Mr. CARAWAY. No recapitalization?

Mr. JONES. No; it is just the actual operating expenses.

Mr. CARAWAY. About what is the necessary replacement fund for the fleet? If we were going to keep it up to a standard, how much would we have to have for that purpose?

Mr. JONES. I am going to come to that just a little bit later. I have not touched on that yet.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not want to go into the controverted question of a subsidy because that has been gone into. We will be paying and are paying a subsidy of several million dollars. We are going into the Treasury to get money to operate the ships.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is true.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope the Senator will tell us just how much, considering replacement and every other thing, we are paying for the privilege of running the ships.

Mr. JONES. I am going to note the replacement in just a little bit. In connection with this matter, while we are paying out of the Treasury, maybe, $13,000,000 or $15,000,000 or $16,000,000 to make up the difference between the receipts and the expense of shipping, that takes no account of the effect on the shipping and upon the rates that our people have to pay. In my judgment, if our shipping gets off the seas, as it will unless we provide some method of replacement, then our people are going to pay higher rates for the transportation of their products than they are paying now or have been paying in the last few years. In my judgment, the reduction that we can class as due to American ships operated by the Government is many, many times the amount we have had to take out of the Treasury.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not expect to go into that matter. That is always subject to speculation, but I have no doubt it is true. What I was trying to get at is this: I want to find out just what it is actually costing us, and I am sure the Senator has that information.

Mr. JONES. It is about $13,000,000.

Mr. CARAWAY. But that does not take into consideration replacements?

Mr. JONES. We are not replacing anything.

Mr. CARAWAY. It does not take into consideration invested capital. About what would it be if the invested capital cost us interest and if replacement was charged against us? I want to get that information if I can.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator takes the original capital, which is over $3,000,000,000——

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, a lot of that is gone. I am talking about the number of ships actually now in operation.

Mr. JONES. It is estimated that the ships we now have are worth about $150,000,000.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is our invested capital.

Mr. JONES. We may term that our invested capital. There is no interest and no depreciation of our vessels taken into account, and they are depreciating very fast.

Mr. CARAWAY. What would it cost us annually for replacement even to keep that number of ships on the sea?

Mr. JONES. To keep the number of ships we now have on the sea, the number that we have running now of good up-to-date ships, would cost about $25,000,000 a year for about 10 years. That is the estimate of the Shipping Board.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would it end with the expiration of the 10 years?

Mr. JONES. It would depend on what we provide for. That is what we ought to have to replace the ships we have now.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then there would be a sinking fund necessary to replace those vessels over a period of years. What is the average lifetime of a ship?

Mr. JONES. It is 20 to 25 years.

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Senator's pardon for taking so much of his time, but is it not the tendency more and more now to seek much swifter ships to carry freight?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Combination ships which carry passengers and freight?

Mr. JONES. Those are the things in which we are deficient now and which we must have.

Mr. CARAWAY. We can hardly get freight for the slower boats.

Mr. JONES. Just certain kinds of freight.

Mr. CARAWAY. The higher rated freights seek the faster ships.

Mr. JONES. Oh, assuredly. That is one of the imperative things in the adoption of a definite plan now. I will touch on that a little later, but I will say now that our ships are getting out of date. They are not able to compete with the ships of other countries. Great Britain and Germany have now ships of 14, 15, and 16 knots in the place of ships which four or five years ago were running 10 or 12 knots. Most of our ships are 10 and 12 knot vessels. If we are going to compete with their ships, we will have to have ships of equal or greater speed. I would like to see our ships 1 knot ahead of theirs all the time.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then they would build ships 1 knot faster than ours.

Mr. JONES. They probably would.

Mr. CARAWAY. I understand. We have these ships. They are all obsolete or obsolescent. Would the bill make it absolutely impossible to dispose of them if we should adopt it without an amendment? Even though we have to build ships to replace them, would we not be unable to sell our present ships?

Mr. JONES. We have an amendment from the committee, which has been proposed by the committee, providing that these ships can not be sold except by unanimous vote of the Shipping Board.

Mr. CARAWAY. If we adopt that amendment, then, will we not be unable to sell the ships even though we have to build better ships and faster ships to take their place?

Mr. JONES. Suppose we discuss that when the amendment is up. It is an amendment to the bill and will be open to full discussion at that time. I thought I would not discuss the amendment until it comes up.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not know what the arrangement was.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. To make a little fuller reply to the Senator from Arkansas, in 1926 we carried in combination cargo and passenger ships between the United States and north and south Atlantic ports of Europe 1,969,000 tons and only 4 per cent of that was carried on American ships.

Mr. CARAWAY. Under some kind of an agreement that we enter into with the shipping of all other countries, have we not rather gotten the worst of the arrangement?

Mr. JONES. The Senator is talking about conferences, as they are called, and so on?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Really I do not know whether we have or not. It would not surprise me if we have.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does not the Senator think we are making a mistake by appointing our agents from among old shipping concerns which are not American and which are interested in their own ships, ships of their own nationality, and when they undertake to serve our lines and serve those lines we get rather the worst of it?

Mr. JONES. I think so.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it proposed to abolish that?

Mr. JONES. I have that in my notes as the next thing that I shall discuss.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have had that experience myself of being sent to a shipping concern and finding out that it represented the shippers of its own nationals, and that everything we had was absolutely useless and worthless and not fit to travel on.

Mr. JONES. We can build an American merchant marine. We can operate it. It will cost us money, it is true, but the Government is able to do it. What will that likely lead to? The building up of an American merchant marine from the beginning was a tremendous task. We had no experience. We had practically been out of the business for half a century. We had no agents anywhere throughout the world to see to getting cargoes for our ships or to represent or handle American interests. We had no trade connections in the various countries in the world. The British Government, through its board of trade and through its shipping, has agents all over the world to look after especially English business and English ships. It has trade connections all over the world, and in my judgment no more, and no more effective, trade agents anywhere in the world than in the United States itself.

They have connections with our banks; they have connections, as suggested a moment ago, with our transportation facilities and transportation lines. They are in close touch with the business interests and business development everywhere throughout the country. They have men who are primarily interested in British lines and British business and British trade. We had nothing of that kind. We have not yet. That is what we ought to have and is what, in my judgment, we can build up only under a stable system. In my judgment, though it may take time, if the Government gets behind the merchant marine, we would develop agencies with skilled people in charge.

As the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] suggested, much of our business in the ports of the world is looked after now by foreigners, and in many cases looked after by British agents.

I do not blame them. It is the natural thing for them to favor their own people. Whenever they have the opportunity they will do it. What we want to do is to develop American agencies, to place skilled American representatives at least in the principal ports of the world to look primarily after American shipping and American interests, and if we put our merchant marine upon a stable basis, we shall then get that class of men and that class of agencies.

Then we want to assure to our people and to our business interests continuous and regular service. We complain a good deal because American citizens sail in ships operating under foreign flags; there is much complaint about that. We hear also much complaint because American business men ship their freight and bring it in on ships flying foreign flags. I want to see the American people patronize American ships both as passengers and with their freight; but we can not complain, we have no right to criticize our people, unless we furnish them up-to-date and regular service to do those things. In my judgment, if we shall furnish equal accommodations, equal service, equal shipping facilities we shall find Americans patronizing that shipping both as passengers and for bringing in and sending out their freight.

As I understand, it is true that the English merchant insists upon his goods being shipped in English ships and upon his imports being brought in in English ships. That is a fine thing, that is a patriotic thing to do. I am glad to see the Englishmen do it. When we obtain suitable and ample service we shall have a right to criticize Americans if they do not take the same attitude with regard to American ships. When we get the proper shipping, we can insist that the goods we export to any place on the face of the earth shall be sent there in ships flying the American flag, and we can insist, when we have ample shipping, that goods brought into this country shall be carried in American ships.

Of course, we do not seek to drive our British friends off the seas; nobody proposes that we should take all the transportation and shipping business of the world. All we ask is that this great Nation shall have its due part in the world's shipping trade. By the shipping act of 1920 we declared that American ships should carry at least 50 per cent of our trade. That is all we ask; that is all we seek. If we shall have suitable ships to do that, then we shall have ships suitable and sufficient for all of our purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Washington what percentage of our trade is now carried in American ships?

Mr. JONES. Outside of tankers, and of ships owned by companies which operate them primarily to carry their own products and their own manufactures, we are carrying in the overseas trade less than 30 per cent of American trade; I think it is down to about 22 per cent. Before the World War it was down to about 9 or 10 per cent, and since the war the percentage has gradually decreased every year until, as I have stated, in that particular class it is now down to about 25 per cent, a little less than 30 per cent.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is it not likely that if the Government goes into the shipping business, as the Senator proposes, it will force private enterprise out of the very business that it is now struggling to carry on?

Mr. JONES. To what private enterprise under the American flag does the Senator from Connecticut refer? We have crossing the Atlantic Ocean between this country and Europe only one ship under the American flag which is privately owned, and that is one of the ships of the International Mercantile Marine. There are no American ships in the overseas trade between this country and Europe primarily privately owned for us to drive out of business. Of course there is the North Atlantic Line, which is owned by the Government; there are some ships running to different quarters of the world that have been bought from the Shipping Board, if they may be classed as privately owned; but there are no privately owned ships flying the American flag running between this country and Great Britain and continental Europe for us to drive out of business.

Mr. President, what is the situation now with reference to our shipping? We have a large number of ships, aggregating a considerable tonnage, but that shipping was constructed hurriedly; it was constructed under the impetus and the needs of war. It was not constructed for any specific or special service. One great advantage of British shipping is that it was largely constructed for special services, constructed to meet certain special conditions.

Our shipping is not constructed with any such purpose in view as that; it was constructed, as I have said, hurriedly; the ships were practically thrown together and they are now practically out of date. We are falling behind our competitors.

I have here a statement showing the character of our ships and those of our competitors. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that other nations are replacing their ships. Since the war they have been building better ships than they ever have built before; they are building faster ships and ships with better appliances for handling freight, better suited to the trades in which they are engaged. Such ships have been built in large numbers by other nations.

In an article by Alfred H. Haag, director department of international shipping, Georgetown University School of Foreign Service, I find an interesting list of ships built by foreign nations. The article is in the Georgetown College Journal of January 28. I wish to read what the author says:

> Years have slipped by while the question has been argued whether our shipping shall be under Government or private control. In the meantime our competitors have been actively engaged in rehabilitating their shipping, even in the face of their severe economic handicaps.
> What is the result? We have been completely outbuilt by all of them. At the present time we are hopelessly outranked in modern types of ships to meet the keen competition in overseas trade routes. A striking example of a nation retrieving her shipping is that of Germany, which now has a modern fleet of merchant ships of over three and one-half million gross tons.
> Shipbuilding activities of the principal maritime nations from 1922—
> That was after the World War closed—> to 1927 are disclosed in the following table:
> Great Britain—number of ships built, 882; gross tonnage, 4,905,853.
> Germany—192 ships; 1,118,635 gross tons.
> France—104 ships; 630,613 tons.
> Italy—87 ships; 711,499 tons.
> Japan—75 ships; 333,327 tons.
> United States—
> At the foot of the list—
> eighteen ships of 195,191 tons.
> The author then says:
> The above figures show that Great Britain outbuilt us 45 to 1; Germany, 10 to 1; France, 5 to 1; Italy, 5 to 1; and Japan, 4 to 1.

I have not looked into it carefully but, in my judgment, the ships that we have built, or at any rate a good many of them, probably were under contract at the close of the war.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. SACKETT. The Senator has just read figures showing the number of ships built by foreign nations compared to the number built by the United States. The foreign vessels were all built and operated under the stimulus of subsidies from their respective governments, were they not?

Mr. JONES. I think most of the nations referred to pay subsidies and give government aid.

Mr. SACKETT. That has much to do with the fact that they have built up their merchant marines to the extent indicated compared with the small amount of tonnage built by the United States, has it not?

Mr. JONES. I am willing to concede that. I do not know just how far it is true, but I am willing to concede it.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWELL. Is it not a fact that the subsidies paid by Great Britain are very small and would not at all be satisfactory to vessel owners in this country?

Mr. JONES. If we did not give American owners any more than the British now give their shipping interests, I doubt that it would be satisfactory to shipowners in the United States; but we must not overlook the fact in connection with that suggestion that Great Britain is established in the shipping business. What did she do to become established? If anyone will read the history of Great Britain and her shipping, he will find that she took the most drastic measures to develop British shipping. She gave subsidies of a substantial character; she prohibited the trade of her colonies and other dependencies from being carried on in foreign bottoms; she restricted such trade absolutely to British ships. Great Britain took the steps which were necessary originally to build up a merchant marine.

She has, as I said a while ago, her agencies all over the world looking out for her trade. Now she does not need to give so much to maintain that supremacy; but those are some of the handicaps that our people face, and those are some of the handicaps that it is necessary, if we are going to have private shipping, to overcome by Government aid in some way, and those are some of the reasons why, if we can not have Government aid, there is no hope of building up an American merchant marine in private ownership.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Kentucky rose first, and I yield to him at this time.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, can the Senator give us information as to what kind of subsidy Great Britain granted in connection with the building of the Lusitania and the Mauretania and that class of ships? There is quite a story about that.

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that the British Government made loans on very liberal terms.

Mr. SACKETT. Was there not practically a payment by the Government for the entire ship? Did it not amount to that in the long run?

Mr. JONES. I do not know just how far the payments went, but they went a long way.

Mr. SACKETT. They are very fine ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. They were all equipped as naval auxiliaries.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Mr. SACKETT. But the subsidy paid for the building of those ships amounted practically to their construction by the Government, provided the Government was given the right to call them into service as naval cruisers in time of war.

Mr. JONES. I will make all the concessions that anybody wants with reference to aid granted by foreign countries, so far as that is concerned. Other nations, Great Britain especially, have done whatever was necessary to build up and maintain a merchant marine. I admire Great Britain greatly for it. If we could do what she has done, I would be glad to support such a plan; but, in my judgment, we can not do it, and we will not do it, and if we will not do it, then our only recourse is to the action of the Government along other lines.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. A moment ago the Senator spoke about shipbuilding activities abroad at the present time. I should like to add to his argument at this point these facts: In Germany to-day two ships are being built, the Bremen and the Europa, each of which is 928 feet long, with a tonnage of 46,000 and a speed of 28½ knots. They are being built by money loaned in New York for that purpose.

The White Star Line in England is building a ship of 60,000 tons, which will be the largest ship afloat. The Cunard Line has placed a contract with shipbuilders on the Clyde for a $30,000,000 ship to replace the Mauretania. These will be the largest ships that up to this time have ever been built, and they are now actually under construction in shipyards in Europe.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point to permit me to ask a question before he sits down?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator know how much Government aid is being given to the projects in Germany and Great Britain to which he refers?

Mr. COPELAND. I can say that in Great Britain they are getting three-quarters of a million dollars a year for subventions for the sake of having their ships at the disposal of the British Government in case of need. The German figures I expect to give in my own remarks to-morrow.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I say at that point that figures have been printed recently in the newspapers with regard to the merchant marine of Japan, which the Senator from Washington just said has built four times as many ships as we have in a given period, to show that within the next two or three months, if not already, there will be begun the construction of the largest ships on the Pacific Ocean, with the intent of cutting down the time between Asia and the Pacific coast, and that these ships are being built under grants of aid from the Japanese Government, guaranties of interest on the stock, and very large subsidies. That is the kind of thing with which we have to contend; and it is by means of these subsidies, which other countries that are more interested in their merchant marine than we seem to be are willing to give, that we are being driven off the ocean.

Mr. COPELAND. And I may say further that since the close of the war Great Britain has built 5,000,000 tons of vessels, and Japan, France, Germany, and Italy combined 3,000,000 more. Eight million tons of ships have been built by these foreign nations since the close of the war for transoceanic service, and we have not laid down a single keel for that purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. The answer to all that, if the Senator will allow me, is to do just exactly what Canada has been obliged to do—let the Government build and operate these ships.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Canadian Government operate the ships across the North Pacific?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; her merchant marine is considered one of her greatest assets.

Mr. BINGHAM. My information is not like that of the Senator, because the information one gets on the Pacific is that those ships—that is, the Empress boats—are operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. FLETCHER. The railway administration also administers the shipping of Canada. It is all under one control, but it is the Government just the same.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Government own them?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Government owns them. The merchant marine is one of Canada's greatest assets.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does not the Canadian Pacific Railway own the ships instead of the Government?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; the Government owns them, but the administrative agency of the Government that administers the railroads also administers the ships.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Government run the railroads?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, there are two railroad systems in Canada.

Mr. BINGHAM. Surely the Government does not operate the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. NORRIS. The Government owns and operates only one of them.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know that the Senator was drawing that distinction. I know that they have a railway system owned and operated by the Government.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a different line, and it is not that line that operates the famous Empress steamers across the North Pacific. It is the Canadian Pacific Railway, a private concern, that operates those boats across the North Pacific so successfully with Government aid.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Canadian Pacific may have some ships. I do not know as to that.

Mr. MOSES. They have a very fine line running to the Orient and to Australia.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Government line does operate on the Atlantic.

Mr. SACKETT. The Canadian Pacific operates a line of ships from Quebec and Montreal in the summer to England that is owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think it is only the Grand Trunk that is Government owned.

Mr. FLETCHER. It may be that that is the case.

Mr. NORRIS. The Canadian Pacific is a privately owned railroad.

Mr. SACKETT. Privately owned.

Mr. NORRIS. The Canadian National, I think, is the name of the Government-owned railroad. They may both operate ships, as far as I know.

Mr. SACKETT. I do not know whether the Canadian National operates ships or not. The Canadian Pacific does.

Mr. JONES. Now, Mr. President, just a brief reference to the condition of our shipping as compared with the shipping of our competitors so far as the character of the ships is concerned. I have here, from the same article from which I read a moment ago, the speed of the ships of the different countries.

Great Britain has 1,280 ships of 12 knots and over. The United States has 235. She has more than five times what we have.

Of ships of 14 knots and over, Great Britain has 435. We have 101. In other words, she has four times as many as we have.

Of ships of 16 knots and over, Great Britain has 145. We have 37.

Of ships of 18 knots and over, Great Britain has 38. We have 6.

Of ships of 20 knots and over, Great Britain has 12. We have 2.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. How many of those numerous ships of Great Britain that the Senator speaks about are owned and operated by the British Government? Any?

Mr. JONES. I suppose not. How does the Senator suppose that we will get that many under our flag? Can we get them through private enterprise?

Mr. MOSES. We certainly can if we will pay a subsidy.

Mr. JONES. But will we do it?

Mr. MOSES. I will.

Mr. JONES. Of course, the Senator will, but he is not a majority. That is the trouble. I would, too; I would join with the Senator; but we can not do it.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator and I can possibly make a majority.

Mr. SACKETT. I should like to agree to help out.

Mr. JONES. I wish we could; but I pointed out a while ago the fact that for 16 years we have not been able to do it, and I think we have had just about as great men in the Senate and in the House as we have here to-day.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is the Senator's argument this, then: That if we were as small as Japan or Great Britain, and were an insular country, so that more of our citizens could appreciate what was going on upon the ocean, we probably would be willing to do what they are doing, to pay for the privilege of having a merchant marine by granting a subsidy in various forms; but that since we are such a continental country, and such a large number of our people are far distant from salt water, it is useless?

Mr. JONES. No; I have not wearied my mind with trying to find out why men vote this way and men vote that way. I know they do it, and they have done it for 50 years; and I have not any indication that they have changed their minds or that they have changed their attitude, or that we may expect a different vote in the Senate or the House. The Senator was not here five years ago when we sat here day and night, with 22 majority in this body, trying to pass a subsidy bill, and we could not do it. If we could not do it then, is there any man in this body who believes that there is any chance to do it now?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator might refer to the experience that this country had once when we enjoyed a subsidy similar to that which is suggested now. We had a subsidy once in the United States. The worst scandal the country ever went through was experienced at that time, and it got us no shipping.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have taken much more time than I intended to take, and I am going to finish in just a moment.

Some people say, "We do not need any new ships." They say, "We have lots of ships"; but I have just shown you the character of the ships that we have compared with the same kind of ships of Great Britain, our principal competitor. I have here a statement made by General Dalton, who is at the head of the Fleet Corporation, and knows the situation. He says:

> It is essential that America seriously consider at this time the building of a new American merchant marine of vessels unequaled in type and speed on the high seas, so that our merchant fleet can hold its place by sheer merit in the face of foreign competition on every essential trade route, and prove its value as a national asset through the character of the service it can render to our people.
> The formulation of a program for the building of this merchant-marine fleet that can be carried to an early and successful completion can no longer be delayed unless we are to lose all the advantages which we have gained during the past six years of the costly pioneering effort made by the Shipping Board to establish our merchant flag upon the trade routes that are vital to the prosperity of our Nation.

And, Mr. President, in the report made on a similar bill at the last session of Congress, I quoted from the report of the Shipping Board on that measure. This is over a year ago. Some people say, "Oh, we do not need to be in a hurry. We have plenty of ships. We do not need to start on this new program"; but note what General Dalton says.

Then I find this. The Shipping Board said:

> In the present state of world shipping it is practically impossible to sell our vessels for private operation in foreign trade and at the same time retain them in American ownership and under American registry.

And then, as to the declaration of section 4 of that bill, relative to the replacement of vessels, they say:

> The declaration * * * is most timely not only from the viewpoint of our foreign commerce but also from the viewpoint of our national defense. Any business enterprise which fails to make proper provision for replacement, whether it be of machinery or of vessels, not only as these wear out but as they may become obsolete, must ultimately go into liquidation. It is useless to make pronouncements concerning the intentions of the United States to maintain and develop an adequate merchant marine unless such declarations are supported by assurances that new vessels of the most modern type will be supplied as the old vessels depreciate and as our foreign trade develops.

Why, Mr. President, it seems to me that that is a matter of common sense. Everybody knows, every business man knows, that if his tools become inferior to those of his competitor he will be driven out of business; that in order to maintain himself he must get up-to-date tools and up-to-date instruments.

Suppose we do nothing at this Congress. Suppose no steps are taken looking toward a permanent policy. When can we do anything? You can not count on our being able to do anything short of at least two years. The next session of Congress is a short session. We can not pass any controverted legislation with reference to this matter in that session. Then, unless an extra session is called, Congress will not be in session until the next December, two years from now; and then how long would it take to pass legislation? Then, after it was passed, it would take a year or two to build the ships, so we can not count on anything substantial being done inside of three or four years.

Mr. President, in my judgment by that time the fleet that we have will be practically gone. Not only will it be obsolete but it will be absolutely impossible for it to compete with our competitors and maintain our trade and maintain our business.

In my judgment, this session is the critical session for the merchant marine of this country. I may be wrong about it; I hope I am; but if we do not do something at this session the chances are that we will be going right back to where we were when the World War broke out.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] inquired a while ago, "What necessary replacements are required?" I want just briefly to refer to that, and give you the ideas of the Shipping Board, which has charge of this matter; and, whatever we may think about the Shipping Board, it is the instrumentality that is dealing directly with this problem and with our ships.

We hear a great deal of criticism of our Shipping Board. They may have made mistakes, but we must bear in mind that they had a tremendous problem to handle, and they had to handle it under very difficult conditions, and in a very difficult situation. I think, taking it on the whole, they have done a good work. They know what the condition of the fleet is; they know what it requires.

I remember that a few years ago—I think nearly three years ago—a committee was appointed, after very urgent request, to consider the condition of our fleet and devise a program of replacement, so as not only to maintain our fleet, but to put it right in the forefront. They prepared very carefully a program of what they felt was necessary. That was a couple of years ago. The necessity is more urgent to-day than it was then. Possibly the program will need to be enlarged, even. This is what they say. I am going to read it:

> The immediate needs of the Government's merchant fleet are as follows:
> Reconditioning of the steamships Agamemnon and Mount Vernon.

This was a couple of years ago. I understand that in the appropriation bill which will come over in a day or two provision is made for the reconditioning of those two ships. Some of our friends claim that these ships would not meet the situation on the North Atlantic at all. Possibly they will not, but the Shipping Board says that the hulls of those ships are good, that they are in splendid condition, and that the ships can be reconditioned at a cost of $6,000,000 each. That is a large sum of money, but I am not an expert; I do not pretend to say whether they are right or wrong.

I have to take their judgment. They say that if we will recondition these two ships we will have two high-class ships to go along with the Leviathan. They are not the best ships, and they would not be the best ships, but apparently they are the best they feel they can get now.

Mr. COPELAND. Those are German ships, are they not?

Mr. JONES. They are old German ships.

Mr. COPELAND. How old are they?

Mr. JONES. Their hulls, I guess, are probably 15 years old, maybe 20.

Mr. COPELAND. They are 21 years old. Would the Senator advocate taking an automobile of 1908 or 1907 and rebuilding it with a new body and a new outfit, and calling it a new car?

Mr. JONES. Probably, if I could not get anything better, I would.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator wants to build up the American merchant marine?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. So far as I am concerned, if we are going to add two ships to the United States Lines, let us build two good new ships that can compete with foreign ships, and not rebuild these old ships.

Mr. JONES. I would stand with the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. These were German ships, and the Germans had a sister ship, the Hensa, which they reconditioned under the same conditions we are now talking about taking care of the Agamemnon and the Mount Vernon, and they gave her up in two years and put her on the junk heap.

Mr. JONES. There is no controversy between the Senator and me with reference to a proposition like that, so far as that is concerned.

I now read further from the proposed construction program of the Shipping Board:

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

The immediate needs of the Government's merchant fleet are as follows:

Reconditioning of the steamships Agamemnon and Mount Vernon. These vessels were originally German, named, respectively, Kaiser Wilhelm II and Kronprinzessin Cecilie. They are of, respectively, 19,361 and 18,372 gross tons, and had a sea speed of 23 knots. They are in the Government's laid-up fleet. The cost of reconditioning, installing new machinery, and equipping for passenger service these vessels will be approximately $6,000,000 each. Their proposed use would be in connection with the Leviathan and give this country a weekly service between New York and the United Kingdom and continental Europe. A recent dry-dock examination shows that the hulls of these vessels are in good condition and that they will be useful for many years.

For the east coast of South American there is also immediate need of six freight vessels, each of 9,000 dead-weight tons, having a sustained sea speed of 15 knots. They should have refrigerated space for 1,000 tons. These vessels like all other freight vessels contemplated in this replacement program should be built on contracts containing alternative provisions for internal-combustion engines or steam plants. If steam is chosen, the plants contemplated will be high pressure and high superheat. The fuel for the steam plants will be either oil or pulverized coal. Present figures indicate that the installation of a steam plant would make a reduction in capital cost of some 15 per cent, as compared with the internal-combustion engine equipment.

There is also present need of five vessels of 10,000 dead-weight tons and 15 knots speed to ply between North Atlantic ports and the Philippines, China, and Japanese ports. These ships should have cargo tank space of approximately 1,500 tons, and be of the same general type as suggested for the east coast of South America.

Five vessels similar to the last mentioned in size and speed should also be built for the North Atlantic and India trade.

At present-day prices in American yards the foregoing 16 freight vessels, with internal-combustion engines, would cost approximately $1,540,000 each, or a total of $24,640,000.

Unless conditions shall develop so that private owners can assume the task of maintaining these services, which experience shows are necessary for the protection and development of the commerce of the United States, it will be necessary during the 15 years following the commencement of the construction above specifically provided for to replace the balance of our freight fleet, viz, some 275 vessels, as such vessels become obsolete by reason of improved tonnage put into those services by our competitors or wear out.

Should present commercial conditions continue, these proposed vessels will be practically of the same type as the freighters heretofore specifically described, with minor variations to fit the particular service to which a specific vessel is assigned.

The building program should be approximately 15 ships per year. The higher speed of these proposed new freight vessels will make it possible for a smaller number of such ships to do the work now being done by our present fleet. This program for progressive construction will permit of advantage being taken of such improvements and developments in naval construction and marine propulsion as from time to time may occur. The routes upon which these vessels will be placed as they progressively appear will be determined by the character of the competition encountered.

Mr. President, this program of replacement would cost about twenty or twenty-five million dollars a year during the next 15 years. It would furnish us not only an adequate, up-to-date American merchant marine, but it would furnish to us those vessels which would be suitable for naval auxiliaries in time of war. That should be taken into consideration in connection with the appropriation for these vessels. This program would cost about $250,000,000.

There seems to be seriously proposed and seriously urged, and it looks as if we are going to adopt, a naval program involving the expenditure of $750,000,000 for naval vessels during the next five years, and it is even proposed by high authority to spend from two billion and a half to three billion dollars in the building of a navy, they say for the protection of our commerce. Yet if we do not do something for the building up of an American merchant marine, we will not have any commerce to defend or protect.

Mr. President, is it possible that this great country of ours will spend $750,000,000 for vessels of destruction, and refuse $250,000,000 over a period of 15 years for vessels of construction, for vessels of peace, for vessels for the development of our commerce and our trade, and to be used if necessary in defense of our country and our flag?

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. SACKETT. In addition to the construction cost, has the Senator any figures as to what the operation losses of those same vessels, so constructed for $250,000,000, would be to the Government during that period? Is there any way to calculate that at all?

Mr. JONES. No, Mr. President; there is not. I do not know whether the Senator was in the Chamber a moment ago or not when I called attention to the decrease in the operation cost of the ships that we have. That is the only criterion that I have really to go by. It speaks well for the Shipping Board, it seems to me. They have reduced the deficit in the operation of the fleet from about $50,000,000, as it was a few years ago, down to $15,000,000 now. As we build up our personnel, as we get trained agents, and train our officials, give them permanent positions so that they will know that they will be employed in that work and can take pride in it, take pride in developing American trade and American shipping, and with these vessels that proportionately are more economical than the ones we have now, I am hoping that we will get our Government fleet practically down to a sustaining if not a profitable basis. Of course, that is only my opinion.

Mr. SACKETT. Of course, there will probably be some losses to be added to that cost each year.

Mr. JONES. Possibly so.

Mr. SACKETT. And if we take back ships that have been put out to private ownership, as the number of ships increases, the amount of money that will be lost by operation, if it is a loss, will also increase, so that we have to take into account the operating losses, as well as the construction cost, for that 10-year period.

Mr. JONES. Of course, that is true.

Mr. SACKETT. That may amount to a very considerable sum.

Mr. JONES. It may be a considerable sum. We have also to take this into account, that if we do not have a merchant marine, if we do not have ships to ply these routes in competition with our commercial competitors, we may expect, after we get out of the business, that the rates will go up.

Mr. SACKETT. Of course.

Mr. JONES. In other words, the great benefit of this fleet comes in holding rates down to a reasonable degree for the billions of dollars of our exports and imports.

Mr. SACKETT. It has a wonderful nuisance value.

Mr. JONES. Yes, indeed, and a value that can not be disregarded.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will stress, in that connection, the value of having these ships so constructed that they would be suitable as auxiliaries of our Navy in case of war.

Mr. JONES. That is provided in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know it is provided in the bill, and I want the Senator to stress it, because there is no possibility of our securing an auxiliary navy under the administration's present scheme—none at all. If the fleet goes into private hands, we have no assurance that we will ever secure an auxiliary navy through our merchant marine. But if it stays in the hands of the Government, it is certain that the ships will be so built or conditioned that they will be suitable for naval auxiliaries, and if we had a merchant marine, with all the vessels properly equipped as auxiliaries to our Navy, the enormous expenditures that are now proposed would not be necessary at all. This additional strength in our equipment for defense would take the place of much of these appropriations that are now being asked for the purpose of building new ships.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator has emphasized that just as strongly as it could be emphasized.

Mr. President, when we have put up-to-date ships on the routes it is wise to maintain, when we have developed agencies and a personnel in charge of and composed of earnest, skilled, and capable Americans, when we have shown that we are in the shipping transportation to stay, then, if we are dissatisfied with Government ownership and operation, we will have the opportunity to pass such legislation as will lead private energy and capital to take over our ships and services at their true value, and guarantee that these services will be maintained.

Mr. President, I have taken much more time than I had intended, and I am not going to trespass upon the time of the Senate further, except to ask leave to put in the RECORD a brief statement with reference to the magnitude of American foreign shipping, by Mr. Haag, to whom I referred a while ago, and a statement which really covers the important phases of the proposition in a very clear and definite way, by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS]. I ask permission to have that also printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

THE MAGNITUDE OF AMERICAN FOREIGN SHIPPING

By Alfred H. Haag, director of shipping courses, Georgetown University, school of foreign service

The magnitude of our water-borne foreign commerce can best be realized when we stop to consider that 5,761 ships, of almost twenty-six and one-half million gross tons, participated in the carrying of approximately 113,000,000 cargo tons, valued at almost eight thousand millions of dollars, of which the freight bill amounted to about $728,000,000.

Including the United States, 33 countries participated in the carriage of our foreign trade.

Of the total number of ships there were 1,676 American vessels of seven and one-half million gross tons, which carried about 38,000,000 cargo tons.

We commonly refer to our foreign trade as being divided into three classes:

1. The Great Lakes foreign trade.

2. The near-by ocean-borne foreign trade (this includes Atlantic and Pacific Canada; the Caribbean region, which covers Mexico, Central America, the northern portion of South America to Guiana, and the West Indies).

3. The overseas trade—trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific—east and west coast of South America.

In the Great Lakes foreign trade out of a total of about 13,000,000 cargo tons American ships carried about 50 per cent.

In the near-by ocean-borne foreign trade, out of a total of about 30,000,000 cargo tons, American ships carried 55 per cent.

In the overseas trade, out of a total of 70,000,000 cargo-tons, American ships transported 22 per cent.

American-flag ships are carrying at the present time approximately one-third of our foreign commerce. Our goal is to carry the greater portion of it in American bottoms.

It has frequently been stated that our exporters and importers are indifferent toward patronizing American ships. The answer to this is American exporters and importers will need no urging to patronize American ships when the service rendered is on an equality with that offered by our competitors. It is not fair to expect them to accept inferior commercial service under the guise of patriotism.

The plain facts are that we have been outbuilt by our competitors in the last six years to such an extent that we are at a decided disadvantage with but few exceptions, in the matter of competitive types of ships.

In its shipbuilding activities the United States has drifted back to seventh place, with Russia trailing us by the equivalent of only one 10,000-ton ship.

There are only three shipyards active in the United States at the present time that can build the larger types of merchant and naval vessels, and none of them are fully occupied.

This humiliating position in the shipbuilding industry is only comparable to the universally acknowledged humiliating position we occupied in the carrying trade prior to the World War, when we carried less than 9 per cent of our foreign trade in our own ships.

If American shipping in foreign trade is to survive, it is high time that definite and immediate action be taken to render the necessary assistance to the shipping industry to place it on an equality with our competitors.

The shipping and shipbuilding industry is in direct competition with maritime nations whose living standards are considerably lower than ours. We are handicapped in direct proportion to the living standards of the countries with whom we are competing. This handicap must be met if American shipping is to survive.

It is estimated the annual amount necessary to support an adequate American merchant marine would be approximately from one-eighth to one-fourth of 1 per cent of the annual value of our foreign trade.

[From the Detroiter, December 5, 1927]

OUR MERCHANT MARINE—SENATOR COUZENS TELLS ADVANTAGES OF GOVERNMENTAL OWNERSHIP AND OPERATION OF ADEQUATE FACILITIES—SAYS WIDESPREAD DISCUSSION MAKES HEALTHY SITUATION

By Senator JAMES COUZENS

Nearly every day and everywhere where business or Government is discussed the question of the American merchant marine is raised. You will observe that even as high an authority as the President of the United States discussed the matter in a recent public address and you will further observe that many business organizations, public officials, Congress, and others have discussed this very important matter. This is indeed a very healthy situation, because out of all this discussion we will undoubtedly reach a sane conclusion. This even so, much of the literature and many of the speeches and statements are merely propaganda for the benefit of some special interests. Fortunately the American people are able to see through most of this, but, of course, they are sometimes misled.

The slogan adopted by most persons who believe in an American merchant marine is "An adequate merchant marine is indispensable to the prosperity and security of our country." There may be some who do not agree with this, but let us start out with the assumption that this is correct. I believe in such a doctrine, and believe that the majority of our citizens do likewise.

Now, the problem is how best to secure an "adequate merchant marine" and to properly interpret what is adequate. In Philadelphia, on the 17th of November, our President said with a good deal of force that any business the Government engaged in must be a monopoly. He said further that the creation of such a monopoly was destructive of initiative of enterprise of American citizens. I do not think anyone will materially disagree with this statement, and so the question resolves itself largely whether or not the American Government will have to undertake the furnishing of an "adequate merchant marine."

We have had to take control of the post-office service nationally, because service was paramount to profits and even paramount, perhaps, to the highest degree of efficiency, which we will admit for argument's sake is obtained through private enterprise. Are we able to secure an "adequate merchant marine" through private initiative when we are in competition with all the world?

Can we, through private initiative, maintain the American standard of living for our sailors, either aboard ship or at home, and compete with the nations of the world, whose citizens do not, everyone admits, have the same high standard of living that we in America do? Are we to take one group of our citizens, namely, those who man the ships flying the American flag, and insist that they live on a lower standard than the rest of our citizens, so that we may, through private interests, maintain an "adequate merchant marine"?

The President, on November 17, in his speech pointed out that our high tariff was responsible for the development of our country and the high standard of living which we had attained. The tariff prevented us from having to compete with the nations of the world for American trade. No other way could we have competed and maintained the high standard of living without the tariff. What can we do to assure an "adequate merchant marine" unless we subsidize private American ship interests with funds from the Federal Treasury or maintain a governmentally owned "adequate merchant marine"?

Our people repeatedly have disapproved of a subsidy, perhaps all of us, however, not for the same reason. Admitting for argument sake that it is proper to subsidize private shipping, does it give us any assurance of an "adequate merchant marine"? I think not, for the reason that immediately Congress fixes a subsidy schedule for private American shipping the nations of the world are put on notice they only have to slightly increase the subsidies to the ships flying their flags to again almost immediately dislocate the scale that Congress granted to again put American shipping interests in a position to not adequately compete.

In any case it is obvious that whatever deficits accrue to American shipping are taken care of through the Government, either through subsidies or paying deficits in the operation of our ships by the United States Shipping Board.

The question may arise, and properly so, as to which is the most economical, whether we pay less out of the Federal Treasury in subsidies or less in paying up the deficits of the Shipping Board. I do not know and I doubt if anyone knows. I do know that when the United States Government is back of its shipping interests with the full strength of the Federal Treasury they are not going to invite unreasonable competition. They will be less likely to cut rates to a point that they carry the tonnage at less than cost.

It may be said that the United States Shipping Board, a Federal agency, will not operate the ships as efficiently as private interests will. That may be said of the Post Office Department, but really no one knows.

When you consider the profits that have to be taken out of privately operated shipping I think it is safe to say that those profits will be equal to the deficits created by the Shipping Board, so in the end the American public are paying the same, whether the ships are privately operated or governmentally owned and operated.

Of course, I could go into great length in discussing the decline of American shipping in foreign trade. I could point out in great detail how American shipping in foreign trade dropped from 89.9 per cent of the world trade in 1830 to 8.7 per cent in 1910. How, as a result of this terrific decline the Government was required to spend over $3,000,000,000 at the beginning of the war to protect the security of our country.

How, after we did this, the percentage of American shipping in foreign trade jumped to 42.7 per cent in 1920 and has been slipping ever since until now it is down to 32.2 per cent of the world shipping. It required 5,761 vessels aggregating a gross tonnage of 26,330,000 to take care of the American foreign trade in the calendar year 1926, and out of this large number of vessels and great tonnage American ships only numbered 1,678, with an aggregate tonnage of 7,336,000.

Are we proud of America? Are we anxious that it maintain its prestige not only in commerce but in its desire for world business? If so, why should we waste so much time and energy in bickering over the method to be adopted in securing the end which I believe is almost unanimously agreed upon?

It is not that we disagree as to the necessity of an "adequate merchant marine"; it is the eternal bickering as to how we are going to have it. Foreign interests are greatly represented in this country, and they are constantly endeavoring to deter America from maintaining its prestige and the acknowledged position it should hold in world shipping.

Are we to be misled and influenced by the desires of foreign nations and are we to be diverted in our desires, as well as needs, by the selfish interests of privately owned shipping, whether that privately owned shipping is flying the American flag or any other flag? That is the question to be solved.

If we admit that an "adequate merchant marine" is indispensable to the prosperity and security of our country, why is this indispensability to be measured by a few dollars? Do we measure the security of our country or even its prosperity by the saving of a few dollars? We spend hundreds of millions every year for the "security of our country" through our Army and Navy. Now, if we need an American merchant marine for the security of our country, why hesitate to spend a few million dollars to obtain that security, plus prosperity? When the security and prosperity of our country is at stake nothing will induce me to approve of any parsimonious policy that will increase the risk.

If you do not agree that an "adequate merchant marine" is indispensable to the prosperity and security of our country, then of course none of my arguments apply. We then give our shipping to the ships that will carry it at the lowest possible rates, without regard to what flag it flies.

If this is the correct policy, why not take down our tariff walls and say that we will buy where we can buy the cheapest? I am not one of those who believe in building up great bureaucracies in Washington or that the Federal Government should assume responsibilities for service that can be better performed in some other way, but I am one of those who is not afraid of the Federal Government doing the things that seem necessary and unavoidable to obtain prosperity and security for our country.

Mr. JONES subsequently said: Mr. President, it has been suggested that I ask to have printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks the report made by the committee on the pending bill. I ask unanimous consent to do that. I have some other documents here which I also desire to print, and I ask permission to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[S. Rept. No. 1696, 69th Cong., 2d sess.]

FURTHER DEVELOPMENT OF THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. JONES of Washington, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 5792:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5792) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon, and recommend that the bill do pass without amendment.

This bill is reported with the approval of practically every member of the Committee on Commerce. This does not mean that all, or even a majority of the committee, prefer Government to private ownership, construction, and operation of merchant ships. It does mean that the members of that committee believe that, at least for a considerable time, the only way to secure an adequate merchant marine under our flag is through the Government, and that they are willing to sink their personal preferences to attain an object vital to the public good.

We lead the world in every line of civilized development. No people live so well, have so many comforts, or enjoy so many luxuries as we. We can live within ourselves if we have to do so. That, however, we do not desire to do. If we are to get and hold what we should from our wealth, needs, business, and power, we must be in a position to promote as well as to protect our commercial interests. With an ocean on each side and between us and the world's great markets, we can do neither without an up-to-date merchant marine.

No people ever had brought home to them so clearly and so dearly the need of a merchant marine as the people of the United States, and no people have ever appeared so heedless of the lesson as they. This may seem to be a harsh statement, but it is a mild one in the face of the circumstances. When our battleship fleet was taken around the world under the administration of Theodore Roosevelt, it had to be accompanied by foreign-built ships under a foreign flag in order to have the fuel and supplies necessary to keep it going. That situation was a most humiliating one. It should have aroused our people to our need, but it did not. We went on careless and indifferent. Few and fewer ships flew the American flag. More and more did our commerce depend upon foreign shipping.

The World War came. The evils that some had vainly pointed out and all should have foreseen came upon us. Can anyone conceive of a clearer proof of the need of a merchant marine to a country like this than the experience that we had and the danger and expense the lack of a merchant marine brought to us? If we have forgotten it, we have not ceased to pay for it.

We should ponder well the following facts:

The ships that had been carrying our commerce except German ships were taken off the lines of trade and put to carrying troops, ammunition, and war supplies. Our products of farm, factory, and mine were piled upon our wharves and docks with markets crying for them but no way to transport them. Farm products especially rotted on the dock or in the bin. This condition at our seaports brought stagnation and distress in the interior and this was reflected in lower prices in the face of the greatest demand that our people had ever faced. The ships that were available charged enormous rates. In some cases carrying charges increased 2,000 per cent, and this large increase was paid to a great extent by the products of the farmer; and, in my judgment, the lack of shipping at the breaking out of the World War is to no small degree responsible for the condition of agriculture even to-day. It was estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury that because of our lack of ships our people paid in one year in increased charges from $300,000,000 to $500,000,000. The loss to our farmers and merchants because they could not get their products to the markets that were crying out for them and willing to pay high prices is estimated to have been at least a billion dollars. The farmer was the greatest sufferer because of the perishable character of his product. These figures are estimates. They may be too high or too low, but no one can doubt the industrial condition. Here is what was written in 1916:

"In this year of 1916 the United States, without a merchant marine, bereft of ships, is more than half the slave that she was in 1861. What boots it that labor is free if the products of its industry and enterprise are denied their markets?

"Turn where one will and it is to behold the evidence of this vassalage. Leave any one of our glutted seaports, with piers and warehouses and freight terminals burdened to capacity by an immovable commerce, and follow the railroad lines into the interior, across the continent, go north, go south, go east, go west, and there is not a mile that has not a chapter to contribute to the tale. All of the conceivable products of a hundred millions of people lie along those steel arteries arrested by embargoes. What moves is what the warring nations choose to buy and will receive from the railroads at tidewater. All else must bide its time or rot; for as Europe controls the world's deep-water tonnage, so our market is limited to her will. It matters not that there are other markets in which we could sell and intrench ourselves to the advantage of future trade and expansion. We have not the ships to reach them.

"Turn from the railroads and go into the orchards of the West and Northwest and it is to find the fruit of last season mattressing the earth against the shaking down of the worthless crops of the coming one. Hearken for the sound of ax and saw in the lumber regions of Oregon and Washington and California and hearken in vain. An army of labor stands idle; its accumulated product lies shipless in gorged outports. Nor are there cars to move a cutting for domestic use. The Middle West and the South are utilizing the rolling stock of our rails as granaries and warehouses, and New England's depleted forests, the conservation of 25 years, are being slaughtered to supply the needs of the eastern seaboard.

"Turn from field and plain and orchard and forest to the manufacturing centers and it is to find the same paralysis of industry, for industry lives by import as well as by export. Here a factory stands silent because it can not get tin from England; there a silk loom lies manacled because it can not obtain the raw product from China. As Britain controls her shipping so does Japan control hers. Japan has but to say to her merchant marine, "Our ships will carry Japanese exports from December to May and imports for Japanese consumption only from June to November," and that is sufficient. The rest of the world may whistle. What is true of those two nations is likewise true of all others.

"As this is being set down comes news that Britain is promulgating an order in council prohibiting, among other things, the importation of automobiles for private use, fruit, musical instruments, cutlery of all kinds, hardware, yarns, chinaware, fancy goods, and even soaps. And it is explained that this is being done, not as a matter of policy but because of a shortage of ships; that Britain must have American wheat and corn and meat, and that other things can not be permitted to take up the space of her vessels. Yet wheat and corn and meat and munitions of war are but a part of American commerce.

"At peace and neutral though we are, belligerency in the present situation could exact no more of us."

While the demands growing out of the war had greatly stimulated shipbuilding in this neutral country, when we entered the war the need of ships was so great that heroic measures were necessary. We were 3,000 miles away from the battle front. We could get there only by ships. We did not have them. Providence seems to have foreseen that we would get into the war and provided the means for meeting the emergency that we faced.

When the war began some of the finest ships of Germany's merchant fleet were in our ports. As a neutral we interned these ships, and when we entered the war we took them over, repaired them, put them in condition, raised our flag over them, and used them to carry our troops to France. It is said that the Leviathan carried 275,000 of our boys across the sea. Had they not gotten to the front when they did, Germany might have pierced the Allies' battle line, reached the coast, and imposed humiliating terms of peace on France and England and established the rule of autocracy in Europe and thus endangered our own security. These German merchant ships defeated Germany's war lords, won the war, and saved civilization.

These ships did not meet the whole need. The cry came from the Allies, "Ships, ships, and more ships." Our own officials realized the need and called upon Congress to authorize the building of ships for the Government. It responded generously. Shipbuilding plants sprang up overnight and everywhere. Enormous wages were paid and enormous profits amassed. Over $3,000,000,000 was appropriated and spent in building ships. That is more than the estimated value of all the merchant ships of the world in 1914. This was the equivalent of $30,000,000 a year for 100 years. Why was it necessary? Because we did not have a merchant marine to meet the need growing out of the war. I am not saying this as an argument for a subsidy, but if we had paid out $30,000,000 a year for 50 years before the war we would have had an adequate merchant marine of up-to-date ships when the war broke out. It would have saved them hundreds of millions, if not billions, that our people paid in increased carrying charges and would have saved Christendom from the calamity that threatened it from autocracy.

What have we to show for this $3,000,000,000? Hundreds of the ships we built are rotting away at their docks or at their moorings in streams and bayous. Some we have sold for a song, and among those sold are our best ships. Ships costing five or six million dollars have been sold for less than a million. The ships we have left are estimated to be worth no more than two or three hundred million dollars.

These ships were built with borrowed money. No matter how little they have brought upon sale, no matter how many of them waste away and become worthless, the American people will have to pay in taxes the full $3,000,000,000 that is now represented by Liberty bonds, which do not depreciate. It cost us over $3,000,000,000 in actual cash, because we did not have a merchant marine; and the ships we built are not only generally unsuited to meet the competition that faces them but they are actually fast wearing out. We owe $3,000,000,000 and have comparatively little to show for it.

This is not all. Upon the $3,000,000,000 we borrowed to build ships the American people are paying interest each year in the sum of about $120,000,000. I think it is conservative to assume that it will cost the American people in interest alone an average of over $40,000,000 a year for 50 years. What will they have to show for this interest money? Nothing! It will build no new ships; it will not even repair any ships. And in addition, we have paid out during the last eight years deficiencies for running the ships in an amount of over $233,400,000.

To sum it all up, our not having an adequate merchant marine when the World War came on will cost the American people five or six billions of dollars, and we will not only have no adequate merchant marine to show for it but there will be imposed upon us an annual tax of $40,000,000 or more for at least 50 years. With these facts within the knowledge of everyone, with the need of an adequate merchant marine for the expansion of our commerce and so vital to our security and defense in time of war, can any American patriot refuse to support any measure or policy that will give us and maintain an adequate merchant marine?

Our people are lacking in one thing that is not pressed enough. We are not ship minded. The people of our chief shipping competitor know the vital need of ships and are willing to make such personal sacrifice as may be necessary to have a merchant marine. They insist that the goods they import must be carried in the ships of their flag and they see to it that the goods they export are carried in their ships. When our people get to the point where they follow this course, the problem of our merchant marine will be largely solved. We import and export billions of products. Of our overseas exports and imports our ships carry only about 24.89 per cent, and this growing less year by year. If even 50 per cent of our imports and exports were carried in our ships, it would insure us a merchant marine reasonably adequate for our commerce and national security.

Our business interests have been almost wholly dependent on foreign shipping for many years. They very naturally hesitate to forsake those who have been serving them so long. They can not be blamed for not doing so until they can be sure of adequate shipping facilities. While American patronage of American shipping is essential to its success, assurance of sure, adequate, and permanent American shipping is also essential, and so we come to the question, How can we get and assure that service?

We are convinced that Congress will not provide the aid necessary to induce private capital and enterprise to go into the shipping business and give us the merchant marine we should have. Assuming that to be true, there is only one other way to get a merchant marine, and that is directly through the Government.

Whatever the defects of Government ownership and operation may be, if our Government declares that it proposes to build and own a merchant marine and that it will maintain adequate and essential services and authorize adequate appropriation therefor, we know it will be done. Uncertainty will end.

The sale of the ships we have for private operation is a minor matter. The important question is their replacement when worn out. They should not be sacrified in price unless there are satisfactory assurances of replacement.

We are falling rapidly behind, in the overseas commerce that is being carried in our own ships.

The character and service of ships is fast changing. The tramp ship is giving way to the liner; the tramp service is being greatly restricted by regular-route service. Steamships are being replaced by oil burners. Oil burners are giving way to motor ships. If we are to have a merchant marine, we must have ships the equal at least of those of our rivals. The last five years have brought about almost a revolution in shipping. We ought to take the lead, especially in cargo ships. Our cargo carriers should be at least a knot faster than those of our competitors and superior to them in cargo-handling facilities, and the services should be regular and certain.

We have a large ship tonnage. Our ships, however, were built hastily under the stress of war needs. They were not constructed with a view to special services. They are largely out of date and in general far inferior to the ships of our competitors. This is a disagreeable fact, but we must face it frankly.

Our competitors are improving their ships. They are keeping abreast of the needs of trade and the methods of their rivals. We can not hope to succeed unless we do likewise. Slow-going, out-of-date ships can no more compete with the fast, efficient, up-to-date ships than the horse can compete with the automobile.

Is there need of early action? Your committee thinks there is. Our ships are now 8 or more years old. We can not hope for legislation much short of a year. Suitable ships can not be authorized, plans be prepared, and the ships built short of two or three years more, and before this can be done every ship we have will be in age beyond one-half of the estimated life of a ship. Our best ships will be inferior in almost every respect to the best ships of our competitors. We can not maintain ourselves on the sea under such conditions. If we will provide up-to-date ships suitable for certain services the ships now on such services can be transferred to other services for which they are better suited, and thus make our merchant marine more efficient in every way.

The following are the routes with the character of the ships we are now operating. They are deemed the most essential to our commerce. They must be maintained and the service improved. As trade develops new routes should be established.

With reference to the provisions of the bill the Shipping Board says:

"The clear declaration in section 1 that it is the intention of our Government to permanently maintain a merchant marine adequate for our commerce and national defense will dispel the doubts of shippers and importers as to the permanency of the service and will reveal to our foreign competitors the futility of their persistent efforts to block the growth of an adequate American merchant marine. Its declaration that Congress intends that adequate services shall be maintained on the principal trade routes of the world will do much to make our citizens 'ship minded' and encourage them to patronize American vessels. As long as uncertainty exists with respect to regularity and permanence of service by American vessels our merchants are inclined to retain friendly connections with foreign shipping companies.

"The declaration of section 2 will assist the board in properly determining the disposition to be made of ships and ship lines. Two interpretations have been given the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1920, relating to the sales of vessels and lines. There are those of the opinion that the act gives the board full discretionary power to continue the ownership and operation of particular vessels and particular lines indefinitely. Others believe the discretion of the board is not that broad, and that after a reasonable time it is its duty to sell the vessels and lines to private citizens. In the present state of world shipping it is practically impossible to sell our vessels for private operation in foreign trade and at the same time retain them in American ownership and under American registry. The bill is entirely consistent with an intention that the vessels and lines shall ultimately be transferred to private ownership and operation. Pending the time when such transfer becomes practicable the commercial development of our trade routes should be promoted and the physical condition of our fleet maintained and developed; to that end Government operation in the meantime is imperative, and the proposed act will thus contribute materially to the permanent establishment of our merchant marine.

"The declaration of section 4 of the bill, relative to the replacement of vessels, is most timely not only from the viewpoint of our foreign commerce but also from the viewpoint of our national defense. Any business enterprise which fails to make proper provision for replacement, whether it be of machinery or of vessels, not only as these wear out but as they may become obsolete, must ultimately go into liquidation. It is useless to make pronouncements concerning the intentions of the United States to maintain and develop an adequate merchant marine unless such declarations are supported by assurances that new vessels of the most modern type will be supplied as the old vessels depreciate and as our foreign trade develops.

"It was gratifying to observe, at hearings conducted recently throughout the country by the board, that the interest of our citizens, especially those residing in the interior States, in the permanent establishment of an American merchant marine has substantially increased in recent years. The demand was very general, if not, indeed, practically unanimous, that an adequate merchant marine be maintained in foreign trade under the American flag, and if this is not practicable at the present time by private capital, then the Government must maintain it.

"It is not difficult to understand why our farmers and merchants demand a merchant marine of our own; the withdrawal of British tonnage during the recent coal strike in the United Kingdom is an apt illustration. Had the Shipping Board not been in a position to supply vessels the effect of the withdrawal of British vessels from our foreign commerce would have been most serious. Our farmers have had a similar experience in respect to the transportation of their products to foreign markets. In several instances, had the Shipping Board not been in a position to supply required tonnage for the transportation of wheat, cotton, etc., the loss to our farmers would have amounted to hundreds of millions of dollars.

"The merchant marine act, 1920, was a comprehensive piece of legislation in the light of conditions then existing. However, the benefit of the expenditures made under the provisions of that act will be very largely lost unless a constructive and progressive spirit is shown by Congress in the maintenance of our merchant marine. Such a spirit was exhibited in the passage of the act of June 6, 1924, authorizing the expenditure of a large sum of money in the development of motor ships, as fast motor ships are rapidly displacing ordinary freighters in the transportation of the commerce of the world.

"We believe that the pending bill if enacted into law will be a very desirable supplement to the merchant marine act, 1920."

Without at this time urging any further argument we will summarize the arguments for and the benefits to come from this legislation.

The enactment of this bill will be more than a declaration by the American people that they propose to establish themselves upon the seas, there to remain permanently—it will be a day-to-day demonstration of that purpose.

It will encourage American shippers to employ American ships.

It will insure employment of American shipyards for the construction of all Government-owned ships only in American shipyards.

It will stimulate more and more Americans to become ship minded.

It will stimulate a body of adventurous Americans again to become seafarers, assured of a career upon the seas.

It will give the United States an opportunity to build up bona fide steamship agencies in the great ports of the world under the direction of patriotic Americans.

It will tend to discourage Americans from continuing as agents of foreign shipping lines in the United States in competition with our ships.

It should tend to give our railroad men additional confidence in the permanency of American steamship services in foreign trade and so encourage our railroad men to increase their employment of American ships for export and import trade.

Gradually, under the stimulus of this act, the United States will seek to attain, and when attained maintain, maritime rank commensurate with its rank as a world power.

It should be a constant stimulus to the more rapid expansion of our foreign trade.

It would enable the Government to provide auxiliaries at all times ready to meet any emergency that may arise, with trained and experienced seafarers to draw on.

Our agriculturists then would be additionally assured of protection by the Government seeing to it that their products were carried to foreign destinations at reasonable freight rates.

It would make the Government itself a bulwark and shield for its agriculturalists by becoming dependable low-rate carriers of their surplus products to foreign countries.

It would distinctly commit our Government to the building up and prosperous maintenance of a great new American industry, useful in peace and indispensable in war.

It would tend to stifle propaganda against, and should stimulate a keen public interest in, the development of an American merchant marine.

The Government then could and undoubtedly would strengthen its maritime instruments of national defense through its ships and shipyards.

Its early enactment will save our shipyards from the fear of failure by assuring steady employment to them.

Its policy of ship replacement, wisely developed, should eventually make American ships covering each great trade route the type, size, and speed best adapted to the varying requirements of its particular trade.

It will mean the permanency of an adequate merchant marine in foreign trade.

It serves notice to all shippers of American exports that they may at all times absolutely depend upon an adequacy of American ships for the carriage of their exports.

It should and probably will put an end to the doubts constantly stimulated in the minds of American shippers through the persistent statements of agents of foreign ships that the United States is not in foreign carrying to stay.

The American people as a whole, through the direct agency of their Government, will become active competitors of foreign ships in our foreign carrying.

No longer will foreign lines in our trade combine to drive American ships out of business by maintaining ruinously low freight rates.

Operators of foreign lines engaged in our foreign carrying then would realize that they could not ruin the United States Government by any policy of reduced freight rates, however low they may make them or however long they may maintain them.

Competing foreign shipowners then will see that the "losses" suffered by Government-owned ships become a far greater gain to the American people through the low cost of marketing their exports and bringing in their imports.

Competing foreign shipowners will realize that they will contribute to the increase of our foreign trade through low freight rates.

Our foreign trade will be stabilized through the maintenance of overseas freight rates at or near the minimum cost of the service.

It will help to increase the number of Americans capable of handling our ships in foreign trade by giving them knowledge and experience of the ramifications of the business.

It will help make the United States strong upon the seas, where too long it has been weak.

The contributions of the ships and seamen created and maintained under the operations of this act will safeguard the Nation in times of emergency.

It should be a constant stimulus to private citizens to enter into the business of operating American ships in foreign trade.

It will continue to demonstrate, as Government ownership of vessels in foreign trade have for years demonstrated, that Government encouragement and support are essential to our success upon the seas.

It will keep at home the vast and growing earnings of our ships, stimulating the construction of new vessels, attracting young Americans to the business of the sea, and substitute strength for weakness for the Nation upon the seas.

Through this act will be restored the rank of the United States among the sea powers of the world that it once held and to which it is entitled.

[S. 5792, 69th Cong., 2d sess.]

A bill to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the policy declared in section 1 of the merchant marine act, 1920, is hereby confirmed, and the purpose of the United States to maintain permanently a merchant marine adequate for the proper growth of the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States and for the national defense is hereby reaffirmed.

SEC. 2. The board shall not sell any vessel or any line of vessels when in its judgment the building up and maintenance of an adequate merchant marine can be best served by continued ownership of such vessel or such line by the United States.

SEC. 3. In addition to ordinary repairs to vessels incident to their regular operation, the board may recondition and improve vessels owned by the United States and in its possession or under its control, so as to equip them adequately for competition in the foreign trade of the United States.

SEC. 4. The necessity for the replacement of vessels owned by the United States and in the possession or under the control of the board and the construction of additional up-to-date cargo, combination cargo and passenger, and passenger ships, to give the United States an adequate merchant marine, is hereby recognized, and the board is authorized and directed to present to Congress, from time to time, recommendations setting forth what new vessels are required, and the estimated cost thereof, to the end that Congress may, from time to time, make provision for replacements and additions. All vessels built by the board shall be built in the United States, and they shall be planned with reference to their possible usefulness as auxiliaries to the naval and military services of the United States.

SEC. 5. No vessel constructed pursuant to this act shall be sold without the consent of Congress hereafter given.

SEC. 6. The appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this act are hereby authorized.

SEC. 7. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

EXHIBIT 11

REPORT ON THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE REPLACEMENT OF PRESENT MERCHANT SHIPS, TOGETHER WITH ANALYSIS OF THE WORLD'S SEA-TRADE CONDITIONS AND THE AMERICAN MERCHANT FLEET

In facing the shipping future of the United States there are but two points of view:

(a) That the United States shall encourage and develop American ships and shipping, already started, so that this country—a natural maritime nation with over 5,000 miles of coast—will possess an adequate merchant marine and take its due place in the economic development and possibilities of international trade; or

(b) That we abandon the mercantile seas as rapidly and economically as possible and let who will carry goods to us or from us at cheaply as may be done or as expensively as will be done in the absence of adequate competition.

In discarding the latter alternative we believe it is only necessary to point out the historic fact that there is a definite relationship between a nation's progress and prosperity and her substantial interest in the sea, and that those nations that simultaneously developed their industry on and across the seas, as well as at home, have been nations most important not only to themselves but in the progressing civilization of the world. But it may be further emphasized in the fact that the principle of the establishment and encouragement of an American merchant marine has been stated clearly by Congress in the preamble to the Jones law, and it is well known that succeeding administrations have approved this principle.

With the period of the Civil War our shipping was destroyed—some form of basic economic destruction is always one of the penalties of war. And then, too, the days of sail were over. The day of steel ships was arriving. In Europe they had the great iron industries; they were better equipped to fabricate iron and steel ships than we were. And wooden ships with sail could not compete with iron and steam. So shipbuilding passed across the water away from us as our own yards decayed. But we did not trouble ourselves at that time, for in our West stretched an ocean of prairie, and we turned American energy to building a broad Nation and trading with its newly growing domain. To-day railroads network the country so completely that the railroad days of enterprise and development are past; it is for the future chiefly a problem of railroad upkeep and feeder development to trunk systems.

Apparently, in the development of civilization, economic progress marks itself in fairly distinct waves, sometimes overlapping but always each with a fairly definite outline of its own. We are still in the great age of invention—and at the same time there is a developing economic system that is bringing the world closer together and more interdependent. So as we realize the completion of the pioneer railroad era it is reasonable and highly important that we scrutinize the field for our next great and comprehensive economic development.

It would seem natural and inevitable, unless it meets with artificial hindrance, that this next comprehensive economic step will be on the sea, not only by reason of our traditions and the natural instincts of a nation with a huge coast line and great internal productiveness, but because there is on the sea a great field for transportation enterprise and the development of a commerce profitable for both the producers ashore and for the transporters of the sea. We are a great producing Nation with a vast interior and coast production centers; a wonderful system of access to our splendid ports, a geographical position on the globe that, given these advantages and our economic development as it is, means that we must sell more abroad and, as a consequence, buy more from abroad. This means a merchant marine with cargoes both ways—for ships can not steam empty one way and full the other with profit to themselves or their own nation.

Nor does the development of an American merchant marine—or, rather, its redevelopment—mean that the amount of wealth for sea transportation is a fixed quantity and that this Nation can not develop on the seas except at the expense of other nations. There is no fixed volume of wealth in the world upon which nations must prey or go without; the resources of the world are limitless, and trade grows and the wealth of peoples increase as they develop the production and diffusion, or transport, of wealth.

The globe and its contents is our antagonist; there is wealth there for all and the view is fallacious and demoralizing that nations can only achieve by preying upon each others' commerce. Wealth is the reward of productive development. The sea trade of the future, certainly as affecting our national policy, will be along the lines of the development of new wealth—sometimes raw wealth and sometimes wealth advanced in manufacture—and new expansions of trade with foreign peoples. The wealth-producing power of the world is increasing, and so is its potential for wealth consumption. And this wealth consumption is, to great extent, simply wealth that is not consumed in the sense of being destroyed, but simply wealth used in the production of more wealth. Trade grows with the development of uses and desires and, in a survey of the field of development of an American merchant marine, these are some of the factors to be considered.

It is true for the moment that international trade is suffering from the destruction caused in the Great War, together with the loss or disorganization of great areas of peoples whose consuming power has been severely injured. This condition is temporary; all over the world there is restlessness that may in its economic aspect be traced to the fact that many peoples are desirous of becoming greater consumers of the wealth and delights of higher and more comfortable civilizations. And this restlessness for new adjustments—quite as much economic as political—will organize itself with a rapidity greater than it is easy to realize at the moment, and there will be as a natural, inevitable, and normal result a sea trade calling for transportation for which the business enterprise of this country should be adequately prepared in merchant-marine development.

And not only is an American merchant marine necessary for the carriage of a fair proportion of our exports and imports but it forms a vitally important arm of our national defense. Until navies are abolished altogether it can not be gainsaid that an efficient merchant fleet is an auxiliary transport of the utmost, in fact, vital importance. And in time of peace it not only serves a useful economic purpose without waste but it also provides a continuous training for officers and men that gives the Nation a reserve personnel, expertly trained in the operation of ships, that can be called into being as a naval force of enormous potentiality in any time of national emergency. For a specific illustration one may cite the vital functions that airplane transport ships will perform in the future. Yet merchant ships can be, and have been, effectively designed for all the uses of peaceful trade in time of peace, yet readily and quickly convertible as airplane carriers when an emergency arises. There is no economic loss in this line of preparedness.

An analysis in detail will be found as part of this memorandum a little further on, and with tabulations and recommendations in the light of our present and actual situation in merchant-fleet operation.

In the development of an American merchant marine an economic survey of the trade of the world indicates three major fields of ocean-carrying trade in relation to this Nation, i. e., (a) the sea trade of the Atlantic between Europe and the United States; (b) the sea trade of the Pacific with the Orient and Australia; and (c) the sea trade with the continent of South America in both the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans.

THE EUROPEAN SEA TRADE

(1) The Atlantic-Europe sea trade is highly competitive and well developed with a large volume and ratio of highly profitable passenger traffic. All of this produces a situation that must be frankly analyzed and recognized in considering the development of European sea trade on this ocean. The already intrenched and large capital invested in this sea trade and controlled from Europe makes a formidable competitor that must be met with adequate resources and full competitive equality. This should be done and, so far from abandoning the substantial start already made, this initial step should be expanded to become the normal, customary balanced unit for a trans-Atlantic fleet.

There is an economic unit of fleet operation, as well as for any other operation of industry. The United States Lines fleet is away below this economic unit of a balanced fleet, as evidenced and proved by comparison with the existing successful, dividend-paying Atlantic trade. To be below this economic unit of a balanced fleet means that the heavy overhead of operation must be concentrated in a disproportionate overhead charge upon a single part of a unit.

Comparison with the best and shrewdest ship operators in the Atlantic-European trade shows that their balanced fleet unit consists of a basis of three high-power, high-speed, first-class passenger vessels and then a number of subordinate vessels. But the United States Lines have but one vessel in such a class, the Leviathan, and that ship has to carry an overhead that should be proportioned, simply as a matter of established business principles, to say nothing of any national factors of pride or sagacity, among two other vessels of high class.

Without going into too elaborate an analysis of the ocean trade, it may be added that, aside from the present unbusinesslike but unavoidable method of charging a disproportionate overhead to a single subnormal economic unit, there are enormous collateral advantages in the three-ship principle through advertising values, frequency of highest-class service, and national pride in a businesslike method of developing an ocean-carrying merchant marine trade in the Atlantic. It is, however, not necessary for this report to argue a case for the three-ship basis as a means of developing our Atlantic merchant marine, since this three-ship basis is a proven and developed principle regularly adopted by the most successful ship operators that are already established in this Atlantic trade. Moreover, whether this Government fleet is admittedly unsuitable and inefficient to meet the competition it meets in the Atlantic trade as it stands, but also, if it is to be sold to private enterprise, it is by reason of its present unbalanced inefficiency unsuitable for a sale of any advantage to the Government. We have established, in effect, a half-built, unbalanced fleet machine for ocean transport; to abandon it means reckless waste, to finish it and make an effective machine is economy in the end, whether the Government keeps it or sells it to private operators.

Therefore, since the fleet of the United States Lines in the Atlantic is already an accomplished and operating fact, we believe, simply as a matter of ordinary and prudent business principles, that it should be built up to the accepted standard of a three-ship basis and appropriate provision made for replacements to take care of deterioration and obsolescence, as well as to balance the fleet in a normal business way in view of the competition it meets and the trade conditions it serves. Two ships, modern motor ships of the general class of the George Washington, should be added at once, so that, together with the Leviathan, a regular high-class service may be maintained similar to the standards in accepted usage and to meet the needs of that service. These ships should be built with the view to their possible and ready conversion as airplane carriers in time of emergency. And all of this entirely distinct from any question or policy of Government ownership or operation, now or subsequently, for this fleet must be balanced and have provision made for replacement whether in Government hands or private hands.

THE SEA TRADE OF THE PACIFIC

(2) The sea trade and the development of an American merchant marine on the Pacific presents a somewhat different aspect than that of the highly competitive field of the Atlantic. In the Pacific we occupy naturally and by reason of our geographical position on the globe a situation of great advantage to the development of a merchant marine in those seas.

There are two great manufacturing areas or centers in the world—Europe and the United States. The manufacturing centers draw upon the whole world for raw materials, and as they draw and send forth so is sea trade borne and developed. Along the lines of least sea transport will sea trade most easily develop. In other words, where the reciprocal markets are closest, geographically, there will sea trade most easily develop.

It is obvious, from a glance at the map, that the Orient is closer to our Pacific coast than it is to Europe, and by a very great margin. This means less steaming in both directions with cargoes, and also a natural geographical differential in favor of American trade with the Orient that is, or should be, a point of most earnest and thoughtful consideration for the future—both the near future and the general future—for it has a very definite potential for our Pacific and Western and midwestern States. From the Orient or Australia to the Atlantic seaboard of the United States is practically the same distance as from Europe to the Orient and Oceania. So that the Pacific coast has a very great natural advantage in the development of trade with the Orient and Oceania, and the Atlantic seaboard at least an equal opportunity, geographically speaking, with Europe.

Inevitably the Pacific coast and west of the Mississippi generally must feel the effect of intelligent development of oriental trade, since they are likely, in the normal economic progress along these lines and in the course of time, to develop manufacturing industries for themselves instead of allowing raw wealth to be shipped by rail across the country to the factories of the East and, in fact, to bid for this Orient trade against the sea trasport to the Atlantic seaboard or Europe.

Another highly important factor to be considered in this sector of the development of an American merchant marine is the consuming power of the area at the other end of the sea-borne trade. This consuming power is important, for in the last analysis goods must be paid for in goods, and return cargoes are quite as important as outbound cargoes. The outbound cargo is only one-half of the story.

This consuming power is dependent upon the quantity of population and its own wealth-producing powers and production to pay for the outward bound cargoes, and also upon its density. Thus it is important and easier to develop trade with a country whose peoples have in general, and spread throughout the mass desires for merchandise necessities and luxuries and have reached a sufficient advance in economic cvilization to enable them to produce wealth to pay for these desires. There is little here in trading on a large scale, such as the development of an American merchant marine means, with sullen, submerged, inactive, or sparse peoples. The poverty of the mass of the Orient is offset by density and vast quantities of its population; and, also, there is a reason for the general belief that it is shaking off what we have regarded as a supine, submissive fatalism in the mass; and that there is impending a vigorous economic as well as political awakening that the business and producing interest of this country can not ignore and should not ignore.

It is a market for trade and shipping that has a tremendous and active potential.

By reason of the natural location of this continent on the globe American business has before it in the Orient and Oceania an opportunity for a trade and shipping that stirs the imagination. But this opportunity, now in the stage of laying its foundations, can not be developed by imagination alone. It needs ships. And in this connection it might be mentioned already there is being built the largest high-powered ship ever built in this country and which will ply on the Pacific.

THE SEA TRADE WITH SOUTH AMERICA

(3) In the field of South American trade there are two natural divisions that should be considered separately as relating to the sea trade of this country, i. e., the east coast and the west coast of that continent. The east coast sea trade of South America is, generally speaking, substantially the same sea distance from Europe as it is from New York or New Orleans, and thus this country has no natural geographical advantage in relation to the South American trade on the east coast.

This country has, however, a natural geographical advantage on the west coast over European sea trade. This long coast is noted for its few harbors and the great wealth of mineral that lies in the vast Andean Range whose mountains come down almost to the line of the Pacific surf. This west coast of South America is a very appreciably shorter distance to the United States than to Europe.

So that our sea trade with the east coast of South America is substantially on the same natural basis as that of Europe, and only on the west coast is there a natural and shorter sea distance in favor of our sea trade. The sea distance to markets south of the Equator on the west coast of South America is fairly approximate to the distance of the ports of Asia from the United States Pacific coast. In place of the densely populated Orient, however, South America—on its west coast—offers a sparsely settled area and, in the great mass of its sullen, subjugated, Indian population that is, or has sunk, far below its predecessors from the economic viewpoint of either production or consumption, the question of the development of sea trade is then involved with the problem of stimulating or organizing a sparsely inhabited but large area as an economic factor. The great mineral wealth of that coast will furnish cargoes, but the sea trade problem must deal with the factor of adequate cargoes both ways if sea trade is to develop profitably. This trade will reopen naturally in the ordinary course of time, but it is hardly ready for any concentrated development.

On the east coast, with the sea distance substantially the same from this country as from Europe, the competition in selling will be keener and the sea trade dependent entirely upon commercial salesmanship to furnish the cargoes of exports to that coast. The situation in regard to the sea trade of this coast is not essentially different in principle—with the exception of the pressure of passenger carrying and general volume—with the position of our sea trade in the North Atlantic direct with Europe.

THE ESSENCE OF OUR SEA-TRADE PROBLEM

The very essence of the whole problem of the development of an American merchant marine lies in the building of American ships. And this question must be met frankly and boldly and a solution found. Americans can build splendid ships—our splendid American-built Navy proves that.

But American merchant ships can not be built as cheaply as can the ships against which these American ships must compete in the sea trade of the world. Nor is this a question of the cost of operating the finished ship, for as to this field the United States can well feel proud that it has taken a step forward in civilization when she passed laws that abolished abuses of the sea and abuses against the laborers of the sea on American ships; abuses against natural human rights that had existed so long that they had become crusted with sanctity. In no other field of economic endeavor in civilized countries had abuses—virtual peonage and chattel slavery in all but name—continued and sanctified under medieval legal principles as they had upon those who followed the sea as common seamen. Nor was it fair that Americans should ask American seamen to accept as fair competition in their trade competition with the lowest, most ignorant and backward elements or peoples—often still in their tribal stage—in the world. The sea is a splendid calling, dignified by its dangers, and a vital factor in any great nation; and the men who follow it are entitled to protection not only against its traditional abuses but against the effort to keep his wage or conditions in competition with the pittance of the tribal flotsam of the Pacific or the degraded standards of a submissive, unthinking, lower crust of lower or less developed peoples. An American merchant marine should not be, and must not be, built up at the expense of the American manhood which we ask to handle it.

In other words, in the development and building up of an American merchant marine we must frankly accept the conditions of cheaper costs for ships abroad so that a heavier capital expense is immediately charged against an American shipowner, or prospective owner. We must put no portion of this adverse differential upon the backs of American seamen nor drive them ashore so that their jobs may be given to the coolie classes of any people. But if we are to exist as a trading nation we must have our fleet upon the seas, together with such appropriate legislation as will keep it there for our national advantage as a great commonwealth in the world of to-day and the world of the future. For our trade future and the trading abroad of our surplus production depends in large measure upon our proper shipping facilities and the existence and availability of an American merchant marine.

ANALYSIS IN DETAIL

Under the foregoing general conditions and potential of sea trade it is necessary to consider in detail the present condition of American shipping with the necessary problems of development, upkeep, replacements, and the various factors that make up a modern merchant marine.

Before proceeding along this line it will be well to note the following tabulation of the tonnage of vessels by countries of vessels of 12 knots speed, or faster, and of over 6,000 tons:

Comparison of tonnage of vessels by countries

(Over 12 knots and over 6,000 tons)

Tonnage	Great Britain	United States	France	Japan	Germany	Others	Total
Over 25,000	8	1	1		1		11
20,000 to 25,000	13	2	1		3	2	21
15,000 to 20,000	42	6			1	8	57
10,000 to 15,000	117	28	17	12	10	24	208
8,000 to 10,000	165	17	25	10	15	49	281
6,000 to 8,000	318	44	30	51	18	112	573
Total	663	98	74	73	48	195	1,151

The above table indicates the present great inferiority of the United States.

At the present time the fleet carrying on our foreign trade is made up of a majority of Government-owned vessels operated by the Fleet Corporation. Within the last year, however, energetic attempts have been made to dispose of the Government fleet to private interests and some progress has been made, notably the sale of round-the-world and Pacific ships to Dollar and the sale of the fleet of steamers operated by the Export Steamship Corporation to the operator. It is apparent that if this policy is continued, the number of vessels operated by the Government will decrease and the number operated by private interests will increase; but in any case, the vessels being operated are the same and unless measures are taken for the replacement of the vessels as they become unfit for use through depreciation or obsolescence, the American ships in the foreign trade will once again become but a memory.

As stated in a preceding paragraph, it is well recognized that the shipping situation throughout the world has reached unprecedented depths of depression. This has come about through the disorganization of trade, not only in Europe but trade in general, resulting from the war conditions, and it can not improve until governmental stability and restoration of the financial fabric takes place among the nations of the world so that trade may be resumed. We are inclined, after reading the reports of the losses incurred in the Government operation of the American ships in the foreign trade, to feel that the unfortunate result is due entirely to Government operation, but while it is admitted freely that Government operation is not and can not be as efficient or desirable as private operation, at the same time it should not be forgotten that the reports of the foreign steamship lines and the pronouncement of their operating officials indicate that the shipping industry of the whole world at the present time is unprofitable and, as a result, great fleets of vessels are tied up, no business being available to keep them employed.

The gradual increase in foreign trade—which is to be expected from the increasing stability and reorganization of Government finance now going on in Europe—as it increases will make the employment of vessels more profitable and require an increase in the present operating fleet to take care of the increase of trade.

It is fair to assume, therefore, that the American ships which are operated in the foreign trade at the present time in both passenger, passenger and cargo, and cargo services are approximately a minimum necessary to handle a reasonable proportion of our exports and imports and thus meet the announced principles of this country "that an American merchant marine in the foreign trade is necessary."

As noted in the preceding paragraph, we feel that it is safe to assume that the present fleet in the foreign trade being operated by the Government and private individuals is a minimum to meet the requirement that a reasonable proportion of our exports and imports should be carried in American vessels. It is true at the present time that a large proportion of this foreign trade is moving in Government-owned vessels. With the exception of the Government vessels recently purchased by the Dollar interests and the Export Steamship Corporation, privately owned American vessels are only being operated in relatively small numbers on the various foreign-trade routes, principally to South America and the Orient (for the purpose of this discussion, we will exclude the trade with the West Indies which will naturally flow to us by reason of our geographical position and which it is hardly fair to include in the term "foreign trade," in the sense that it is used herein, namely, "world-wide trade").

In order, however, to be amply conservative, we will assume that the combined fleet of Government-operated vessels and those operated by private firms, necessary to handle a reasonable proportion of our exports and imports, equals the Government-operated vessels and those purchased recently from the Government. This is true with one exception, namely, that the passenger and cargo fleet in the North Atlantic will have to be balanced by the construction of certain vessels as dealt with elsewhere in this report. In other words, let us assume that the minimum fleet comprises the vessels at present operated by the Government plus those purchased by Dollar and the Export Steamship Corporation. It would be well to examine the particulars of this fleet and the replacement required under the two categories, (1) passenger and cargo vessels and (2) cargo vessels.

At the present time the fleet of passenger and cargo vessels, including those owned by the Government and those sold by the Government to Dollar, are as per the following list:

Average	1919	------	421,294

Total, 27 vessels.

It will be observed that the fleet comprises 27 vessels with a gross tonnage of 421,294 and an average age of 6 years.

There can be no doubt that the vessels referred to are a minimum to properly carry on our trade at present in cargo and passengers on the routes over which they are now operated. In the case of the passenger and cargo vessels on the North Atlantic, particularly, it is glaringly apparent, for this North Atlantic is a sea trade in which more American passengers are carried than all the other nationalities combined; an ocean carrying trade, in fact, in which the American passengers far outnumber the foreigners, yet it is in this very North Atlantic Ocean in which our American fleet is hopelessly inadequate.

The vessels operated by the United States lines comprise the most unbalanced fleet of passenger and cargo vessels in the world.

It is physically impossible to give with this fleet a passenger and cargo service which compares in frequency and regularity of sailings and type of accommodation to that provided by the great foreign lines.

If our American merchant fleet service in the North Atlantic is to be brought up to a reasonably competitive position, it is vitally important that two economical combined passenger and cargo vessels of at least 20 knots sea speed be constructed to operate in conjunction with the Leviathan to British Channel ports, thus providing a weekly service under the American flag for the transportation of mail, passengers, and cargo.

The construction of these two additional vessels, to enable us to operate on the customary trans-Atlantic three-ship basis, is not adding to our fleet any more than is an automobile maker "adding" to an automobile when he adds two more wheels to the two already on. Without such addition there is no complete unit of effective operation; with such addition a going, effective, competitive machine is completed.

If this three-ship basis were not sound and a proven principle of successful North Atlantic fleet operation, it would never have been developed and maintained by the shrewdest ship operators of European maritime affairs.

These two vessels should be of approximately 30,000 tons each, internal-combustion engines giving a speed of about 20 knots, designed so as to be convertible into airplane carriers, with accommodations for a large number of passengers, and a cargo capacity of about 6,000 tons. Two ships of this type, with the Leviathan, would complete the standard three-ship basis, and would make competition on an even basis—a basis in our favor, in fact—and would show substantial profits from operation. So that if the Government continued to operate it would be at a profit instead of a loss or, if it wished to sell, it would have a complete transport unit to sell.

It should be recalled, in considering this subject, that these are passenger vessels, and there is no reservoir of laid-up fleets from which can be drawn at will vessels to supply any deficiencies.

Moreover, as noted above, unless measures are taken looking to the replacement of these vessels—whether they be owned by the Government or private individuals—the time will come when they will be worn out and scrapped, and nothing will be available to take their place.

The average age of the vessels under consideration is six years. Assuming that the life of the vessels is 25 years and that another three years must elapse before any replacements can be constructed and put into operation, the replacement of the fleet will have to be accomplished within a period of 16 years, which will require the construction of about 26,000 gross tons of passenger vessels per year. This is in addition to the construction of the two combined passenger and cargo liners required for the North Atlantic service, which should be of at least 30,000 tons each. This addition, therefore, means the construction of an average of 30,000 gross tons of passenger vessels per year during the period from 1928 onward.

It will be noted from the above list that there are 231 vessels of about 2,000,000 total dead-weight tons in operation.

It is safe to assume that the average useful life of a cargo steamer is approximately 20 years. It is also safe to assume that the average age of these vessels is at least 7 years, and that 3 years will elapse before any replacement vessels can be authorized and constructed; and it is apparent, therefore, that the 2,000,000 tons will have to be replaced during a period of 10 years, or at the rate of 200,000 tons per year.

It is true, of course, that a certain number of these vessels may be replaced with vessels of the Government now laid up, but at the same time it should also be remembered that the Government fleet as a whole was constructed during an emergency and, due to the inexperienced operation and the long periods of lay-up, it is safe to assume that the value of the vessels, whether withdrawn from lay-up for replacement to the operating fleet, or operated continuously, will not exceed a period of over 20 years.

However, in considering this subject it should never be lost sight of that we are in direct competition with skilled foreign operators. Thus it will be found that, in connection with vessels on the long voyage trades running to the Orient and in connection with vessels on the North Atlantic, we are forced to compete with the cream of the British, German, and Japanese merchant marines and that our competitors on the important liner routes are operating the highest type of cargo liners and are adding thereto.

It is the considered opinion of nearly all who have investigated the subject closely that the possibilities of successful American competition in connection with overseas shipping rests in the development of the cargo liner as opposed to the tramp type of steamer. Speedy transport of commodities as an inducement to shippers is essential and it is, therefore, apparent that, first, as an inducement to American shippers the speed of our cargo liners should be enhanced; and second, to enable them to successfully compete with the highest type of speedy ships of our competitors the speed of our vessels would have to be increased. In considering, therefore, the necessary replacements in connection with the cargo fleet now being operated it would seem sound to limit such replacements to cargo-liner types of vessels with a speed of at least 14 knots and a total dead weight of carrying capacity of not less than 11,000 tons. We can safely assume that at least one-half of the trades on which Government ships are now being operated will require the cargo-liner type of vessel. (See note on last page.)

In view of the fact that we have no vessels in the Government fleet which correspond to the true cargo liner as outlined above, it is apparent that we should concentrate on building a considerable number of these vessels to the exclusion of the smaller and slower ships which may be provided out of the reserve of vessels laid up for the time being, thus enabling us to concentrate on a higher and better type. To replace the cargo fleet of 2,000,000 tons in operation during a period of 10 years would involve the construction of 200,000 dead-weight tons per year. There is no doubt that during the first few years of any replacement program this figure of yearly replacement should be reached or exceeded in order that the cargo liners may as rapidly as possible supersede the less efficient and desirable vessels on the various foreign-trade routes.

As previously referred to, the Government vessels are being sold to private interests. Any plan, therefore, which contemplates the replacement of the present fleet should enable the vessels to be built by private interests as well as by the Government.

It is obvious that some method of equalizing the cost of building vessels in this country with the cost of constructing them abroad will have to be found to enable these vessels to be constructed in the United States. At the same time, it may be found that in the case of certain of the lines which will have to be retained for the time being by the Government, it will be necessary for the Government to order the replacement vessels itself.

In any case the important thing is "that the vessels must be replaced," and that this minimum fleet which we are operating be not allowed to vanish from the seas.

CONCLUSION

From a consideration of the preamble outlining the arguments for an American merchant marine, the announced policy of Congress and the announced policy of our people, it is assumed that we should have an American merchant marine in the foreign trade. It is the only way that we can properly protect our foreign trade during the intensively competitive period which will be inaugurated with the resumption of world trading on a large scale. An American merchant marine is necessary to form a vital reserve of ships and trained personnel against any time of national emergency. It is apparent that the minimum fleet required to accomplish this may be safely measured by the Government fleet and vessels purchased from the Government now in service, together with the construction of two 30,000-ton 20-knot cargo and passenger liners, readily adaptable for airplane carrier conversion to balance the fleet on the North Atlantic.

It is apparent that replacements will have to be made or our fleet will rapidly depreciate and finally vanish from the sea during the latter part of its life, being entirely unable to compete with the foreign lines, as these foreign lines as a customary and sound business policy replace their less efficient tonnage with the larger and faster cargo liners.

It is therefore recommended that the construction of at least 30,000 gross tons of passenger and cargo vessels be undertaken each year and the construction of at least 200,000 total dead-weight tons of cargo liners be undertaken during each year.

It is believed that before this replacement program is far under way, world conditions will improve so that the demand for an increased program will justify the construction of a considerably augmented program. Certainly the program as outlined above is a minimum and merely consistent with maintaining our present position in the shipping world.

W. S. BENSON,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy (Retired),
Commissioner, United States Shipping Board.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—REPLYING TO MISREPRESENTATIONS OF WASHINGTON NEWS AND WASHINGTON HERALD

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I shall only consume a moment or two of the time of the Senate. I want to make reference to an article in the Washington News. This paper in referring to a speech that I made on yesterday, in which I challenged the New York World to have the Democrats of the Senate rebuke me for my defense of religious freedom and free speech, said that I asked the Democrats to pass on the question. I read from that paper:

He asked a vote of Senate Democrats on whether he is right or wrong.

I did not ask any such thing. I read an excerpt from the New York World, and I said that paper was not satisfied with the action the Democratic Senate conference had taken regarding the situation with reference to me, and that the Senate Democrats in conference declined to pass on the position that I took in the Senate or that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] took, and that the action of the conference of the Democrats had no reference whatever to it. I stated that the New York World said the action taken was not a rebuke of me and that it was a spineless performance. Now, the Washington News quotes me as saying:

He asked a vote of the Senate Democrats on whether he is right or wrong.

I am not asking any Senator to pass on the question of whether I am right or wrong. That is a question for me to decide as a Senator. I am a Senator from a sovereign State, sent here as one of two Senators to represent the people of that State, and I, as one of their chosen spokesmen, am to determine whether my position is right or wrong. I repudiate this statement as false, and the writer of it as one who knew he was writing a falsehood when he wrote it.

The News further had me saying in the Senate—and those in the gallery who were here yesterday, as well as Senators present, know that no such remark was made by me:

If you rebuke me—

Speaking to my Democratic colleagues—

I will quit the Democratic Party and millions will quit with me.

I did not say that. I challenged the New York World to have such action taken as it had suggested, and if the New York World could demonstrate a situation like that where the Democratic Party were following Tammany and the Roman Catholic political machine, a nullifier of the Constitution, and a wet, that I would quit the Democratic Party. I wonder why they undertake to misrepresent me in this fashion right here in the Capitol the day following my speech, when so many people present now heard what I had to say and the connection in which I used that expression?

Mr. President, I refer to that merely to let the people know who read the RECORD in the country and to let the people know who are present that there is an effort being made to deliberately misrepresent my speeches in the Senate. This is a part of the propaganda of the Roman Catholic political machine. If these misrepresentations continue I am going to ask the Senate to take some action on certain representatives of newspapers in the Senate press gallery. No liar has a right to sit in the press gallery and deliberately lie about a Senator on this floor, and if the Senate has any respect for itself it will not permit such a thing as that to continue.

Here is an article from the Washington Herald, written by Fraser Edwards, I believe. The headline is:

HEFLIN'S blasphemy shocks Senators.

I was astounded when I was told that such a statement was in the paper, and I could not remember shocking the Senate in that way. I found after coming to the Senate this morning that the official reporter who took down the statement where I was quoting a newspaper man with reference to what I had said in fun about the tarring and feathering in Arkansas and Alabama of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], when Mr. Fraser Edwards asked to see the stenographer's notes of the speech he read it to him and told him twice that a certain statement made by newspaper men was in quotations and that I had quoted it, and yet he went off and published it without quoting it. He suggested that Senators were offended and were going to take some action regarding it. I have been unable to find who the Senator was that told him that. Of course, no such thing is true. They are not only determined to misrepresent me, but they have commenced to lie outright about things that occur in connection with me on this floor.

I want to serve notice on Mr. Hearst, because this is one of his papers, that if this continues I will read some affidavits on this floor which will open his eyes and move some of these little hickory nuts in his employment out of the press gallery. [Laughter.] I had not wanted to do that because I do not care to go into a man's private life, but William Randolph Hearst can not keep his hired agents here in this gallery misrepresenting, insulting, and slandering me.

Now, I want to say for the benefit of this man Edwards that his father was my friend, a fine, manly man, Charley Edwards. He was afflicted in his declining years so that he could not work. He was hard pressed financially, and being afflicted could not earn his living. He did well when he was in health and able to work. He was my friend, and I was his friend. He needed assistance, financial assistance, and I used to help him. He came to me frequently for help and he never came in vain. I would let him have $10 at a time. The last time I ever saw him I gave him $25. I regret to have to mention this, but feel justified in doing it now. This is his son who is joining in with my enemies to misrepresent, slander, and lie about me in the Senate.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a statement made to the President regarding the World Court, together with a list of the signers, and by request of certain of these signers I ask permission to have the statement printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(Issued by the presentation committee representing 432 citizens and signers in 47 States. Irving T. Bush (chairman), Frank H. Hiscock, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Charles H. Carey, Howard Coonley, Kenneth C. M. Sills, Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, Ray Lyman Wilbur)

BELIEVE "WORLD COURT" NEGOTIATIONS SHOULD CONTINUE—DIFFERENCES NOT FUNDAMENTAL—CITIZENS OF 47 STATES CONVEY TO PRESIDENT DESIRE THAT UNITED STATES COMPLETE ADHERENCE TO COURT AS OBVIOUS STEP TOWARD PACIFIC SETTLEMENT

To-day an important communication bearing on the relation of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice reached the President over the signatures of 432 people from 47 States. The communication conveys to the President the belief of the signers that a vast number of people throughout the country are far from satisfied with the present status of the question of the adherence of the United States to the World Court. The letter reflects the view of the signers that the differences between the United States and the signatory States, however troublesome, are not sufficiently fundamental or important to prevent the adherence of the United States to the court. Without suggesting a particular procedure or a particular solution, the signers express the hope that the President will indicate the willingness of the United States to continue conversations in the matter of the court with a view to reaching early settlement.

THE COMMUNICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

The communication as presented to the President to-day is:

"We, the undersigned citizens of 47 States, believe that the differences between the United States and the states signatory to the protocol of the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice are in large part due to misunderstandings which could certainly be resolved in the conversations that normally accompany the negotiation of treaties. May we convey to you our urgent hope—a hope which we believe to be entertained by a vast number of our fellow citizens—that you will indicate the willingness of the United States to continue negotiations with a view to removing the difficulties which stand in the way of consummating the adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court?

"Believe us, with great respect,

"Faithfully yours, etc."

The letter was conveyed to the President through a presentation committee of eight representing the signers. This committee consists of Irving T. Bush, president of the Bush Terminal Co., chairman; Judge Frank H. Hiscock, formerly chief justice of the Court of Appeals of New York State; Franklin D. Roosevelt, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy; Judge Charles H. Carey, of Portland, Oreg., former member of the Republican National Committee; Howard Coonley, president Walworth Co., of Boston, former president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, director, Link Belt Co., of Chicago, and of the National Malleable Steel Castings Co., of Cleveland; Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, member of the Democratic National Committee, Chicago; President Kenneth C. M. Sills, of Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me.; and President Ray Lyman Wilbur, of Stanford University, California.

COURT EXPRESSES AMERICAN IDEAL, SAYS PRESENTATION COMMITTEE

In transmitting the letter to the President the presentation committee said:

"Representing 432 thoughtful citizens in 47 States, we beg to transmit on their behalf and our own the inclosed communication. The United States could, we believe, take no more necessary and no more effective step toward promoting the pacific settlement of international disputes than that of adhering to the Permanent Court of International Justice under proper reservations.

"At the time when the delegates to the first and second Hague conferences, acting under instructions, urged the establishment of a permanent tribunal, the United States announced a clear-cut attitude in favor of the establishment of international agencies for the settlement of international disputes. It is, we think, in pursuance of that tradition that the United States would join the 55 nations which by adhering to the protocol of signature of the Permanent Court of International Justice have formally indorsed the principle of applying the judicial procedure to questions susceptible of legal treatment.

"We are conscious of the many burdens resting upon you, but we feel so deeply the need of clearing the misunderstanding which surrounds this matter that we venture to urge upon you the taking of all reasonable steps to make entirely clear the position of this country, and thus resolve the doubts and, in all probability, the difficulties that have prevented completing the adherence of the United States to the court."

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask that we may adopt certain amendments reported by the committee as to which I think there is no opposition. It is merely desired to perfect the bill so far as we can. The first amendment to which I refer is on line 3, page 1, after the word "policy," to insert the words "and the primary purpose."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 3, after the word "policy," insert the words "and the primary purpose," so as to read:

That the policy and the primary purpose declared in section 1 of the merchant marine act, 1920, is hereby confirmed, etc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES. In line 4, page 1, after the word "confirmed," strike out the comma and insert a period, and strike out the balance of the section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 4, after the word "confirmed," strike out the comma and insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the section in the following words:

And the purpose of the United States to maintain permanently a merchant marine adequate for the proper growth and the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States and for the national defense is hereby reaffirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES. On page 3, line 11, there is an amendment proposed by the committee which we think is really not necessary, but it is offered simply through an excess of caution. It is to insert after the word "repealed" the words "to the extent of any such inconsistency."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 11, after the word "repealed," insert the words "to the extent of any such inconsistency," so as to make the section read.

All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed to the extent of any such inconsistency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I think those are all the amendments that are not controverted, and that is probably all we can do on the bill to-day.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, what did the Senator do about new section 2? Did he bring that up to-day?

Mr. JONES. No; I did not. It is involved in the controversy.

Mr. COPELAND. As I understand it, the first section has been changed to read:

That the policy and the primary purpose declared in section 1 of the merchant marine act of 1920 is hereby confirmed.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. What other matters did the Senator have acted on?

Mr. JONES. On page 3, line 11. That was really not necessary, but the committee out of abundant caution put in those words.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, also, section 5 is stricken out by the committee.

Mr. JONES. We have not acted on that, because it is involved in the other amendment. That leaves yet to be considered all the amendments which are in controversy.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it the purpose of the Senator to leave the matter at this point to-day?

Mr. JONES. I understand there is no Senator who wants to speak now. This is the first day the bill has really been before the Senate, and I do not want to take advantage of anyone.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, while the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is here, may I inquire if there is any understanding as to when the bill is likely to be taken up again? I understand it is the unfinished business.

Mr. JONES. I understand we are going to have an adjournment to-day, so that it will come up to-morrow at 2 o'clock. I hope that Senators will be prepared to go on with the bill. I would like to dispose of it just as soon as possible. I am going to press it as earnestly as I can, without, of course, unduly pressing Senators.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator from New York be prepared to proceed with the discussion to-morrow?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I think I will.

Mr. WILLIS. Then we can probably reach a final vote before the end of the week.

Mr. JONES. I hope so.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Ohio contemplate that the Senator from New York will speak on the bill the remainder of the week?

Mr. WILLIS. He has such a large appreciation of the ability and continuity and eloquence of the Senator from New York that he hopes he would speak that long, anyhow.

Mr. COPELAND. It is only presidential candidates who speak so long.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Washington that we have had now an opportunity to discuss the matter quite fully, and I think we ought to make progress with the bill and ought to have a vote on it some time this week.

Mr. JONES. Oh, I think so.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope we shall not give unlimited time to consider other matters. Of course, I agree with the Senator that we do not wish to crowd other Senators; but we must keep in mind that it is important to deal with this subject this week, because after that we shall have other measures here which may cause delay and we may get no action on the pending bill.

Mr. JONES. I think we really ought to pass the bill in two or three days.

Mr. FLETCHER. We must get action on the pending measure at this session of Congress or it will be too late.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I shall not delay matters at all. I also wish to have a vote, and so what I have to say will not be intended to be obstructive but constructive, I trust, and it can be said briefly.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator having the pending bill in charge that the question was asked here to-day if any of our transcontinental railroad lines have contracts with foreign steamship companies as to the interchange of freight. I recall that in 1921 a resolution went from this body asking for such contracts. I did not know whether or not there had been subsequent legislation looking toward modifying in any way the rights and privileges of the railroad companies. I called up the Interstate Commerce Commission this afternoon and was informed that nothing had been done since that time. That is as far as my information this evening goes. I wish to submit some of those contracts to the Senate during the discussion of the pending bill, showing the nature of the relations of certain of our transcontinental railroads with foreign steamship lines.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from South Carolina would ask the Interstate Commerce Commission if they know if any of those contracts are still in force. There has been no legislation in regard to the matter, and I understand that all those contracts have been abrogated, though I am not sure about it.

Mr. SMITH. I asked that specific question, and requested the commission to send down to-morrow, if possible, information showing the extent of the contracts and the nature of those still existing, and whether or not any new contracts had been entered into.

Mr. JONES. Of course, the contract appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of a few years ago, and its character is there shown.

INVESTIGATION OF SINKING OF SUBMARINE "S–4"

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, as I can not obtain the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider House Joint Resolution 131, providing for a commission to investigate and report upon the facts connected with the sinking of the submarine S–4, I therefore give notice that I shall move to bring it up to-morrow morning immediately after the close of the routine morning business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 25, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, January 24, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy Spirit, come and lift up the toiler; come and clothe the ragged; come and heal the sick; and come and feed the starving multitudes wherever they are found. May we bring our offerings to the very doorway of that humanity for which the Saviour died. The richest, the wisest, and the greatest of men owe a debt to their fellows. O may we not leave duty to the tide of events or be reluctant in the discharge of our sacred obligations. Let the thought of a personal God, who watches over us, become the cheering passion of our grateful souls. May we welcome to the bosom of our country the President of that Free State across the seas. Lord God of Nations, bless that people and give great success and prosperity to that land of sunshine and lovers of freedom. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN NATIONAL LIVESTOCK ASSOCIATION

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have an invitation here from one of the greatest organizations in the world to meet in the greatest city in the United States or, I might say, in the world; a communication from the American National Livestock Association through its able president, Mr. Brite, who lives in my district, in which he extends an invitation in behalf of the livestock men of the West—extends to you, that is, the Congress of the United States, a cordial invitation to attend the annual convention of the American Livestock Association, which convenes at El Paso on January 25 to 27. I read:

AMERICAN NATIONAL LIVESTOCK ASSOCIATION, OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Marfa, Tex., January 15, 1928.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: In behalf of the livestock men of the West I am extending to you a cordial invitation to attend the annual convention of the American National Livestock Association that convenes at El Paso, Tex., January 25 to 27, 1928.

Your presence would be most highly appreciated, not only by the cattlemen and the livestock interest at large but also by the splendid and hospitable citizenship of the city of El Paso, the gateway to our sister Republic, Old Mexico.

Very respectfully,

LUKE BRITE,
President American National Livestock Association.

Now, gentlemen of the House, I want to say to my Republican friends, this is a convention that covers a great deal of territory, and there will be delegates there from practically every State in the Union, including the Dominion of Canada and the Republic of Mexico. Many of you gentlemen will have friends down there, and I have assurance in advance—and I am talking just this minute particularly to my friends on the left-hand side—you will feel perfectly at home at this great convention which meets in my home city, probably much more at home than if you attended another convention which is to meet in a little suburb of El Paso on Buffalo Bayou in June to nominate a candidate who will be the next President of the United States. [Laughter.] Of course, if you can come to the American National Livestock Association meeting we will keep you over there and properly entertain you at our expense until the June convention, and then take you down to the little city on Buffalo Bayou, Houston, our next-door neighbor, and do our best to see that you are properly entertained there.

We will join in with my friends, Bishop DANIEL GARRETT and Brother EUGENE BLACK, whom I see over there from the "Piney Woods," and Senator BLANTON I see before me. Oh, he will be down there, and he will make you a little speech if you insist strong enough. [Laughter on both sides.]

And also the chaparral cock from the lower Rio Grande, JOHNNY GARNER, will be there and do his bit. You know he is our leader, and he leads you sometimes also; and there is

"HEZEKIAH" JONES, from the Panhandle, and SAMUEL RAYBURN, the Jeffersonian Democrat, from Bonham; and my friend HATTON SUMNERS, the philosopher and statesman, from the great city near the head of the Trinity; and affable FRITZ, from the great city where the panther formerly lay down; JOE MANSFIELD, from the rice belt of south Texas; Rev. "MEX" BUCHANAN, the horny-handed farmers' friend, from Brenham; Brother MORGAN SANDERS, from the Elberta section of east Texas; "Parson" LUTHER JOHNSON, from the city where that great statesman, the lion of the tribe of Judea, lived and died; the bold stalwart of the stalwarts, GUINN WILLIAMS, from Decatur, and the young new benedict, "HENRY CLAY" BRIGGS, from the city by the sad sea waves. The entire Texas delegation will all join with our friend DAN and help entertain you at Houston after you have visited the national livestock meet at El Paso, and remain as our guests, which you are sure to do if you go there, until the great Democratic convention convenes on Buffalo Bayou in June.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I am afraid if our Republican brothers get to El Paso first, they will not be able to function at the latter convention.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, let me reply to the gentleman from Texas—lose no sleep over this matter. If they visit my home city of El Paso, we will oil them up to such an extent and feed them those famous beefsteaks so delicious and juicy that will tickle the palate of even my Republican brethren to such an extent that they will function famously and efficiently, no matter where they go, no matter what political brand they wear.

Now, I understand that my colleague, Bishop DAN GARRETT, who, if I am reliably informed, owns a big hotel in Houston, will be watchful of your pleasures. I know he will be. You know what makes me feel sure he owns a hotel—I went into a hotel which runs under the name of the "Rice" last May to see DAN and I asked one of the negro bell boys if DAN was in and the "bell hop" promptly replied "No, sah, he is not at home right now; he is down town conducting a prayer meeting." [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Would a fellow hotel keeper get a special privilege from him?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes. Bishop DAN will see that his fellow hotel proprietor, Brother TREADWAY from Massachusetts, gets the "bridal suite." [Laughter.] I have been reliably informed that Brother DAN has guaranteed to pay the expenses of every delegate to his convention out of his own pocket, and he would not have the convention go there without this ironclad agreement in advance. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman, no doubt, means Mr. GARRETT of Texas?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, yes; "the bishop"; I mean Congressman GARRETT, of Houston. [Laughter.] Now, gentlemen, the greatest city in Texas, the gateway to all the West and South, my city, out on the sunset, never allows any other city to surpass it in generosity and hospitality. I will even say to you Members on both sides, now, that I will pay your expenses to the National Live Stock Association. [Laughter.] While I do not own a hotel, like my friend GARRETT, still he, with his "rural community," can not surpass us El Pasoans in generosity. But, of course, you know they build hotels on a smaller scale in Houston than we do in El Paso, only covering one block, whereas we at El Paso build a brick wall around a whole section, roof it over, and cut it up into small pastures for the convenience of our guests. [Laughter.]

El Paso wishes you all well and entreats you to be our guest on this occasion. I expect the Speaker of this House has more friends in that part of the country than anywhere else except in his home State, and we wish him well and successful as Speaker of this House. My people have heard of him; many call him by his given name; and they know that he is a fair man as he presides over this House. A cattleman naturally likes what we call a "square shooter," whether he agrees with him politically. They wish him well every month this year as Speaker of this House and at Kansas City in June. They wish him well every day in this year except on one certain day in November. [Laughter.] I want to say that to the Speaker of this House, and on that day, of course, he will have their profound sympathy. [Laughter.] We want you to come down to the greatest city in the world and attend this convention. There are a few of the livestock people who still belong to your party—the Republican. But we will meet you with open arms, with a bounteous repast, and with all the "light" refreshments which you gentlemen might desire to partake of. That, of course, includes the Speaker of this House; and I now take pleasure in personally presenting to the Speaker the official badge of our great association. [Laughter and applause.]

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9481, with Mr. DOWELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9481, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the totals of the bill may be corrected by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the totals of the bill may be corrected by the Clerk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: Page 32, beginning with the words "and in," on line 20, strike out the remainder of the paragraph and in lieu thereof, on line 19, after the word "annum," insert the following: "in all, $84,000."

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will explain to the committee that this amendment is necessary in order to make the bill conform to the action taken on the point of order made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. I notice that the gentleman from Indiana is deducting the entire $7,500. Do you not still want to carry the appropriation for the salary of the secretary, which is provided for under the classification law?

Mr. WOOD. No; that will be provided for in the next paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all other expenditures authorized by the act approved September 7, 1916, as amended, and by the act approved June 5, 1920, including the compensation of attorneys, officers, naval architects, special experts, examiners, and clerks, including one admiralty counsel at $10,000 per annum, and other employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and for all other expenses of the board, including the rental of quarters outside the District of Columbia, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and traveling expenses of members of the board, its special experts, and other employees, while upon official business away from their designated posts of duty, and for the employment by contract or otherwise of expert stenographic reporters for its official reporting work, and including the investigation of foreign discrimination against vessels and shippers of the United States and for the investigation of transportation of immigrants in vessels of the United States Shipping Board, $188,250, of which amount not to exceed $165,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the annual estimates of the Shipping Board for the fiscal year 1930 shall include the salaries of all employees whose service with the board has become permanent through detail from the Merchant Fleet Corporation.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: On page 33, in line 3, after the word "compensation," insert the following: "of the secretary to the board."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD and Mr. WHITE of Maine rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the same page, in line 4, strike out the word "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the balance of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And on the same page, in line 18, strike out the figures "$188,250" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$195,750," and on the same page, in line 19, strike out the figures "$165,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$172,500."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition on the amendment. That provides for a salary of $7,500 for the secretary.

That provides for a salary of $7,500 for the Secretary.

Mr. WOOD. It has been deducted from the preceding appropriation.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; but the $7,500 is back in the bill.

Mr. WOOD. If the gentleman will figure this out, he will see we have deducted that amount from one paragraph and put it in the other.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact this is a lump sum, and while we know the purpose of the amendment, I do not think it is subject to a point of order, although it is a subterfuge and an evasion of the rule which prevents the committee from making appropriations without authority of law.

It is well known that positions in the civilian service in the District of Columbia are compensated in accordance with compensation schedules carried in the act of Congress known as the classification act of 1923.

This position has been allocated to a grade in which all other like positions in all departments and services of the District of Columbia have been allocated, and the average salary of that grade is $5,600, and I think the maximum salary in that grade is $6,000. Everybody else in the District of Columbia that is performing like service for the Government is limited to $6,000 annually as compensation.

The committee attempted in the first paragraph of the appropriations for this service, without authority of law, to raise this man's salary $1,500 a year above what the law says he is entitled to get. This went out on a point of order.

They are now seeking by this amendment, by raising the appropriation of $188,250 to $195,750, to put the $7,500 for the Secretary right back in the bill, and for that reason I think the amendment should be modified so that the increase in the appropriation should be limited to the salary of the grade to which this man is allocated.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman is making a great fuss about nothing, and the very thing he is so fearful of hapepning has not happened at all. The change in the figures that has been made is necessary by reason of the point of order which the gentleman made yesterday. We have not raised the total, and we have not raised the salary of the Secretary.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I have gone to school, and I have learned to subtract, and I know that $188,250 subtracted from $195,750 leaves $7,500, which is intended for the Secretary.

Mr. WOOD. There is absolutely no increase in this appropriation at all, and as I have stated, the correction is necessary by reason of the point of order made by the gentleman on yesterday. This makes the amount exactly the same as the amount submitted by the Budget.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph.

I had intended, Mr. Chairman, to reserve a point of order on the language beginning with the proviso in line 20, but the chairman of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee moved a little too fast for me. I was not going to insist on the point of order, although this is manifestly legislation.

I think it is desirable that the chairman of the subcommittee give us a brief explanation as to just what is sought to be accomplished by this proposed change in the law.

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman the purpose of making this change is in order that the Congress may have an exact picture of what these two activities are that are so closely blended at present. Under the present practice a great many of the employees in one of these boards are paid out of the funds of the other. It affects 269 employees and aggregates in money $733,980.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. As I understand the situation, estimates are carried for employees, either for the Merchant Fleet Corporation or for the Shipping Board, as the case may be, and the employees are not necessarily paid out of that particular fund; that is, Shipping Board employees are paid out of Merchant Fleet Corporation appropriations, or vice versa.

The gentleman is now undertaking by this language to make available funds to pay the employees as they are properly allocated.

Mr. WOOD. That is absolutely it.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I think the gentleman's purpose is altogether desirable. I just wanted to call attention to the fact that the subcommittee is legislating.

Mr. WOOD. No; I do not think it is legislation. We are simply segregating and not legislating.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. In lieu of the figure "$195,750" to be put in line 18, I move to amend by striking out that figure and inserting in lieu thereof "$193,850"; and in lieu of the amount provided in the amendment of $172,500, I move to insert $170,600.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LEHLBACH to the amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: Line 18, strike out the figures "$195,750" and insert in lieu thereof "$193,850"; and in line 19, strike out the figures "$172,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$170,600."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I will try to make clear to the committee the purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana and the purpose of my amendment to the amendment. As I said a few moments ago, the secretary of the Shipping Board comes under the provisions of the classification act of 1923, and his salary at the present time is in accordance with the grade to which he is allocated, which is the grade to which every other person working for the Government in the District of Columbia performing work of the same difficulty and value is allocated.

It was attempted by the provision that went out on a point of order yesterday to increase his compensation from $5,600 to $7,500 without authority of law and contrary to the provisions of the classification act of 1923.

Now, if you are going to have a classification act make it applicable to everybody who comes under its provisions. If you do not you are doing an injustice to those not peculiarly favored by special legislation.

After this went out there is now proposed an amendment increasing the total for salaries generally by the salary of the secretary which, before the point of order, was carried as a separate item. By what? By the salary he is getting now? No. They increase the total by $7,500 and give it to him, notwithstanding it is unlawful and that the point of order has been sustained. For that reason I ask the support of the amendment I have offered.

Mr. WOOD. The prejudice of the gentleman from New Jersey has blinded his vision.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know this man and have never seen him in my life.

Mr. WOOD. By reason of the point of order made on yesterday the salary fixed by the committee was eliminated and was deducted. The estimate by the Budget was $195,750. The salary of this secretary is $5,600, which is exactly as it was before.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey is not passed, will not the present law prevail?

Mr. WOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the way I look at it—the present law will prevail and they can not raise his salary.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman from Texas is right; the gentleman from New Jersey is far afield. We have corrected the figures in accordance with the Budget estimate. I will say to the gentleman that I give my word of honor that this salary will not be increased unless it is done under the law.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The total for expenditures of the Shipping Board was $188,250.

Mr. WOOD. That is right.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The salary of the clerk of the Shipping Board was $5,600. Now, it having been taken out and inserted here, will the gentleman explain why he makes it $195,750 instead of $193,850?

Mr. WOOD. For the very reason that for the current year the salary of the secretary is carried under the United States Shipping Board in the paragraph of general expenses. That is where it was estimated for. We took it out of there and put it where we thought it ought to be. The gentleman raised the point of order, which has been sustained. We have corrected the figures so the amount of the estimate made by the Budget will be carried out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD SHIPPING FUND

For expenses of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, for administrative purposes, the examination of estimates of appropriations in the field, miscellaneous adjustments, losses due to the maintenance and operation of ships, for the repair of ships, and for carrying out the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1920, (a) the amount on hand July 1, 1928, but not in excess of the sums sufficient to cover all obligations incurred prior to July 1, 1928, and then unpaid; (b) $12,000,000; (c) the amount received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, from the operation of ships: Provided, That no part of these sums shall be used for the payment of claims other than those resulting from current operation and maintenance; (d) so much of the total proceeds of all sales pertaining to liquidation received during the fiscal year 1929, but not exceeding $2,225,000, as is necessary to meet the expenses of liquidation, including also the cost of the tie-up and the salaries and expenses of the personnel directly engaged in liquidation: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for the payment of claims; (e) all interest earned on the funds of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation is to accrue to these funds and is made available for the purposes hereinbefore set forth subject to the limitations herein established.

Mr. WHITE of Maine and Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky rose.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language appearing in lines 8 and 9 on page 34:

the examination of estimates of appropriations in the field.

I reserve the point of order also against subparagraph (e) appearing on page 35.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I concede the first point of order, but I deny the second one.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I have not made the second one; I just reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order to the language in lines 8 and 9 referred to was ruled upon when the last appropriation bill for the purpose was under consideration, and was held to be out of order. The Chair feels the ruling was correct and sustains the point of order.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I concede that, but I deny the second point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The second is a reservation of a point of order, and the gentleman from Maine is recognized.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I am reserving the point of order for the purpose of asking from the chairman of the subcommittee an explanation of just what he seeks to accomplish by this language, which is new language appearing, I think, for the first time in one of these bills.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, in explanation and in answer to the gentleman, heretofore the interest earnings upon the deposits of the Shipping Board in some 80 or 90 banks all over the world have been turned into their operating fund, and the Comptroller General has held that under the law they should be turned into the Treasury as part of miscellaneous receipts. In order not to disturb the arrangement whereby the Government is saving in exchange very nearly half of this $350,000 that otherwise would be wasted, we are reappropriating this amount of money and adding it to their operating fund, but we have subtracted from their original estimate the amount which this approximates.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I renew the reservation of the point of order if the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is yielding, and I call the attention of the committee to the fact that the language of subdivision (e) is broader than is necessary simply to cover this operating fund and is as a matter of fact in contravention of law. Under the act approved March 4, 1927, reported by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and passed by both Houses of Congress and receiving the signature of the President, an act entitled "An act to amend section 11 of the merchant marine act of 1920," and so forth, we find the following language:

SEC. 2. The construction loan fund shall be a revolving fund. All repayments on loans from the fund shall be credited to the fund. Interest on such loans, however, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

That provision of law was written only last year after careful consideration by the legislative committee, and I suggest that the gentleman so modify subsection (e) as to be in accord with section 2, which I just quoted; otherwise it is subject to the point of order which I shall feel compelled to make.

Mr. WOOD. This item has nothing whatever to do with the construction loan fund.

Mr. LEHLBACH. But it says:

all interest earned on the funds of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Marine Fleet Corporation—the construction fund being one of such funds. Will the gentleman accept an amendment on line 2, page 35, after the word "funds," to insert a comma and the words "excepting the construction loan fund"?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; I have no objection to that.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then I withdraw the point of order and offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEHLBACH: Page 35, line 2, after the word "funds," insert the words "excepting the construction loan fund."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: Page 34, line 15, after the word "unpaid," strike out the figures "$12,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$13,000,000."

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, my amendment proposes to increase the appropriations carried in this bill by $1,000,000. I consider it a very, very important amendment. While agriculture, one of our great basic industries, has been in deep distress, and I have always supported measures intended to relieve that distress, yet the soft-coal industry of this country is in even greater distress than agriculture. We built up a great merchant marine fleet during the war at a cost of something like $3,000,000,000. Under the merchant marine act of 1920 hundreds of these ships have been reconditioned and put into the business of carrying passengers and cargoes of all kinds to all parts of the world. We still have about 490 of these ships lying in the bays and harbors of this country, and have been idle since the war. It requires considerable money to look after them and they are rusting and rapidly deteriorating in value. The purpose of this amendment is to recondition at least 10 of these idle ships and place them in the coal-carrying trade to the West Indies, Cuba, Central and South America, and to the ports bordering on the Mediterranean Sea. I am advised by Mr. O'Connor, chairman of the Shipping Board, that if this sum is appropriated that the Shipping Board will place at least 10 of these ships in condition and put them into the coal-carrying trade, provided, of course, if sufficient cargoes of coal are furnished to use that number of ships, and the remainder of this million dollars is to be used to take care of any loss that may be sustained in operating this line of ships.

Our chief competitor in the coal industry is Great Britain. We produce annually about 520,000,000 tons of coal. Great Britain produces annually about 220,000,000 tons of coal. These overseas markets to which I have referred are as near, and in many instances nearer, to our ports than they are to the British ports. We can successfully compete with Great Britain in these markets with our coal, because we have the better quality of coal, and on the average it costs about $1.50 per ton less to produce coal in the United States than it does in Great Britain. There is no good reason why we should not develop these markets in foreign countries and thereby relieve in a large measure the distress of the soft-coal industry of this country. These new markets will absorb our overproduction.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How would the gentleman's amendment bring that about. I understand that it simply increases the total amount of the appropriation. Has the gentleman made any arrangement?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have taken the matter up with Mr. O'Connor, chairman of the Shipping Board, and he advised that the entire membership of the board favors this additional appropriation of $1,000,000, and, if it is appropriated, that they will put into the coal-carrying trade a number of our idle ships.

We have 491 idle ships belonging to our Government tied up in the various ports and rivers that should be equipped and placed at the service of the foreign commerce of this country. This country of ours with 120,000,000 people, with a national wealth of $350,000,000,000, with American ability, American ingenuity, and American industry, will continue to produce a surplus on the farms, in the forests, in the factories, and in the mines; and we should build up a real merchant marine, and thereby create new friends and new markets for American products throughout the world. I desire to see American products carried on American ships, flying the American flag on the seven seas of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it not true that the United States produces three times the number of tons of coal that Great Britain produces, and that there is 70,000,000 tons going into their export trade? During the last three years England has shipped 96,000,000 tons to foreign ports, while the United States has shipped only 3,000,000 from this country?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes. We produce about 520,000,000 tons of coal annually, and Great Britain about 220,000,000, and except as to the coal we shipped to foreign ports last year on account of the strike in Great Britain, our shipments of coal to foreign countries have been practically neglible. The coal and coke carried in the ships of the United States Shipping Board for the month of April, 1927, was only 105 tons. But last year when we sent over the seas more than 19,000,000 tons practically none of that coal was carried in American ships, but ships of other countries carried this American coal from our ports to foreign ports, and received from $8 to $10 a ton for carrying that coal.

When these foreign ships were taken out of the business of carrying American wheat and cotton and other products we were threatened with a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars on American products until the Shipping Board called into action about 100 of our idle ships and put them to carrying American products. Yet foreign ships were carrying our coal and reaping large profits at rates from $8 to $10 a ton.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it not true that when the coal strike was on in England our ships carried grain and cotton and everything else but coal? Is not that a fact?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That is what I am talking about. But we repaired and reconditioned nearly 100 American ships and put them to carrying American cotton, corn, and other products at low rates. But our ships were not carrying American coal.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the gentleman know why the Shipping Board, when it put into commission ships for carrying corn and cotton, did not also commission ships to carry coal?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I do not know why.

Mr. HUGHES. England was using all the possible facilities she could command, and she was carrying coal at $8 to $10 a ton.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There was a shortage in the market at that time.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS. I am not unfriendly to the gentleman's amendment, but if the amendment is included in the bill, how much tonnage capacity will that carry?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The Shipping Board estimates that it will cost about $200,000 to recondition 10 ships, and these ships will carry 80,000 tons per ship. This million dollars will not only recondition these ships, but will take care of the loss incurred in the operation of the ships. Members of the House know that last year on every ton carried by American ships there was a loss on the average of $1.48 per ton, but there would not be more than about half that loss, the Shipping Board advises me, on the carriage of American coal.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman says that an expenditure of $200,000 will result in carrying 80,000 tons per trip?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. That would mean 80,000 tons with an expenditure of $200,000. An expenditure of a million dollars would mean the carriage of only 400,000 tons.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That is 80,000 tons for the ships for one trip.

Here is the Cuban market and the Central American market and the South American market and the Mediterranean countries clamoring for and demanding American coal. I can show you letters from big concerns that have demands for our coal. In the Argentine a single customer desires as much as 40,000 tons, and customers on the Mediterranean want American coal in large quantities. We desire to carry American coal in American ships, as well as American cotton, corn, wheat, and manufactured products. Why should we discriminate against American coal?

When this vote is taken I want to know whether this House is earnestly in favor of a real merchant marine. I want to know whether the East, which is in favor of a merchant marine for the purpose of carrying its manufactured products, and the West is in favor of carrying its agricultural products, are in favor of an American merchant marine which will carry American coal to these same ports?

Now, just this thought. If we are to have a real merchant marine this country must find friends and new markets throughout the world for America's surplus along every line. The way to do it is to build up a merchant marine and not play at it. Let Great Britain and every other country know that we are on the seas to stay, and will not depend upon foreign ships to carry American products, and when you do that you will get some concessions in rates. [Applause.] You will get some arrangement, then, for American rates on coal to these foreign ports. We can carry this coal to the Mediterranean, because it is about as near to our ports as it is to English ports. We can carry it to Cuba and Central America, because the ports of those countries are nearer to our ports than they are to English ports. Let America take this great step to relieve this great industry and help American miners, American railroad men, and American business men. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether he has made any investigation or has gotten any information from the Shipping Board as to whether or not they can carry this coal at a profit. One of our troubles has been that when we go out with a load of coal we come back without any cargo and have to come back with water ballast.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The reason for that is that we have not had a real merchant marine. When we do have a real merchant marine we shall go out with a cargo and come back with a cargo. Our other products have been carried at loss until we could build up trade. As far as coal is concerned, the thing that has kept us out of the markets of the world is the fact we have no coal ships and the railroad rates are very high. Although it costs Great Britain $1.50 a ton more to produce her coal than it costs us to produce our coal, she can get her coal to the various ports at from 60 to 75 cents a ton, whereas thus far the best rate the railroads will give on coal to American ports is $2.52 a ton. But I understand that some of the great railroads which will put this coal to the American ports are willing to enter into an arrangement which will so cut down the rate on coal that we can put it to our ports and compete with English coal either in the Atlantic or in the Mediterranean ports.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman stated there was a loss of $1.48 a ton?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I did not say that. I said that for the freight which was carried in American Shipping Board vessels last year we had to take out of the United States Treasury, on the average, $1.48 a ton. In other words, we lost $1.48 per ton on an average; but to start with American coal you would not have more than about half that loss, even though we had no return cargoes. If we are going to carry cotton, wool, and other products at a loss of $1.48 a ton, why should this House deny to American soft coal the right to use the American merchant marine when the loss would not be half as much, and when these arrangements are made with American railroads the loss will likely not be anything on American coal?

30,000,000 TONS

The markets that are available for American coal represent in the neighborhood of 30,000,000 tons. We know the condition that destroys the market in any commodity is the surplus. We know this is true of agriculture, lumber, and manufactured products. It is equally true in coal.

On account of the British coal strike last year we shipped overseas about 20,000,000 tons. This absorbed the surplus to a very large extent and provided one of the best markets the soft-coal industry has had for some years.

Our Government owns more than enough ships that are lying idle and rapidly becoming worthless which if put into the coal-carrying business to foreign ports could develop a coal market representing from 15,000,000 to 30,000,000 tons annually. This would absorb our surplus soft coal and strengthen the coal market. It would mean the employment of tens of thousands of miners and railroad men and bring prosperity to the soft-coal industry.

MINERS IN DISTRESS

Some of my colleagues may feel that I am showing great zeal for the adoption of this amendment. Kentucky last year produced about 60,000,000 tons of soft coal. About one-half of this tonnage was shipped to the lake ports. In the latter part of 1927 the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled that the rate on coal from Pennsylvania and Ohio to lake ports was entitled to a reduction of 20 cents per ton. This action of the Interstate Commerce Commission paralyzed the coal industry in Kentucky, and especially in eastern Kentucky. My congressional district has been producing about 20,000,000 tons of coal annually. I spent some time in visiting various sections of my district during the months of November and December and the holidays and I found many splendidly equipped and carefully managed coal mines idle and thousands of miners out of employment. In order to relieve this situation the Louisville & Nashville, Chesapeake & Ohio, and other railroads proposed to the Interstate Commerce Commission that they would themselves reduce the rates on coal from Kentucky, West Virginia, and other points to the lake ports 20 cents per ton, but the Interstate Commerce Commission denied these railroads the right to reduce their rates.

These are among the richest railroads of this country. Each one of them has been making a greater sum than is provided by the transportation act. They say that they can afford to make these reductions. It would result in great benefit to the producers of coal, to the miners, and to the railroad men in those districts and on those railroads, and would result in the saving of about $6,000,000 annually to the consumers of coal served through the lake ports. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been expended in equipping mines and bringing railroads to serve the mines in Kentucky, West Virginia, Tennessee, and Virginia under the rates heretofore fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Cities, towns, and villages have been built; churches, schools, business concerns, and other institutions have been established.

Unless there is some relief granted hundreds of millions of dollars of property will be destroyed; towns and cities will become desolate; churches and schools will be abandoned and will become the hiding places for owls and bats; and tens of thousands of honest, industrious men will be thrown out of employment and more thousands of men, women, and children become destitute. It is for the sake of these honest American toilers in mines and on railroads and for these needy women and children and to protect and save, if possible, the schools and churches, the cities, towns, and villages, and the investments in mines and railroads that I am urging you to-day to grant this appropriation of $1,000,000 to equip American ships that are lying idle and going to waste and place them in the coal-carrying business that they may carry American coal, flying the American flag, to the people across the seas who need and who want American coal.

I am here also appealing to the owners and managers of railroads that connect mines with American ports to get together and appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant them such rates so that they may cooperate with the United States Shipping Board and enable the producers of American coal to compete in foreign ports with British coal. Such action will not only promote the welfare of the railroads and the coal mines but will likewise bring prosperity and joy to a great army of American miners and American railroad men.

We grant preferential rates on our railroads from the interior to the Pacific coast in order to enable American producers to compete in the markets of the Orient—China, Japan, and so forth. Why should not the same policy be worked out to enable American coal to compete in foreign ports with British coal? British railroads grant a rate on coal from their mines to her ports of from 60 cents to 75 cents per ton. Why should the Interstate Commerce Commission or American railroads cling to a rate of $2.50 and higher per ton on American coal to American ports?

Prosperity for the coal industry will be reflected in all industries. Unemployment or poor wages of the hundreds of thousands of men employed in the coal industry will be reflected in the decrease of their purchasing power of the products of other industries.

Agriculture and the soft-coal industry are in distress, and this Congress can not set itself to any greater task than in bringing relief in every way possible to these great basic industries, and I am firmly convinced that the adoption of this amendment will mean the beginning of the revival of the soft-coal industry, and I urge its adoption with all the earnestness at my command. Your favorable action, in my judgment, will cause many thousands to rise up and call thee blessed.

Mrs. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mrs. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, my section of eastern Kentucky is vitally interested in the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague [Mr. ROBSION]. I wish to thank my distinguished colleague from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] for granting me the courtesy of speaking first on this amendment. I want to commend the constructive, farseeing, and far-reaching policy of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] in reconditioning the merchant marine fleet, and to express the thought that Mr. VINSON will serve most ably as a member of this subcommittee.

Representing, as I do, one of the two mountain coal-producing districts of my State, I want to bring you this message from the heart of the hills. Kentucky, as you know, ranks as one of the foremost coal-producing States of the Union and it is, therefore, vitally important to her interests that coal dug from her mountains by those stalwart and sturdy miners should have an outlet to the markets of the world. [Applause.] The difficulty with us in Kentucky is not so much the lack of a market for our coal as it is a means of transportation to that market. I feel justice and enlightened self-interest demands that every legitimate and promising endeavor be put forth toward finding proper means of transportation, and the rebuilding and use of the merchant marine will, in a measure, greatly aid and benefit the coal industry of Kentucky as well as all over this country of ours.

Coal is one of the most necessary products of this country, and, just like every other commodity, needs to be carried into other ports of the world. It gives to the people at large credit facilities throughout the world. Lumber, cotton, sugar, grain, and petroleum are all recognized as necessary elements to be exported, and I plead with the membership of this House to let coal be placed upon that same basis and not forgotten.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR COAL

I do not know whether there will ever be developed a fuel substitute for coal. That problem yet remains for American genius to solve. Certainly it will not occur in your lifetime or mine, and not until some remote period when the uncounted billions of tons of coal yet undeveloped approach exhaustion. Most assuredly in our lifetime coal will remain the king of energy, and by every right deserves protection.

In my section we have the very finest by-product coal in the world. I speak of the Big Sandy and Kentucky River fields containing the Elkhorn, Millers Creek, and Yellow Jacket seams, and its adaptability to commercial and domestic uses is unexcelled.

Last year, as has been stated, 20,000,000 tons of coal were exported, and out of that tonnage only a small proportion was carried on American ships flying the American flag. I believe that every Member of this House feels with me that each wants to live to see the day that every product produced on American soil shall be carried abroad in American ships carrying the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.]

America has organized with astonishing rapidity a system and campaign of distribution. A huge absorbing power for needed products has been created. The stupendous output of coal enables us to meet not only our own need but the requirements of Europe and the other continents. To fail in ability or willingness to meet this outside demand impedes our own prosperity, and prevents us from rendering those services which are our privilege, our duty, and our advantage to render. With the ever-widening diffusion of prosperity and the ever-advancing standard of living our need for expansion is imminent. It seems to me that it is our duty to do what we consistently can to facilitate our return to normal conditions in the coal industry.

The mines in Kentucky are being forced to run only three or four days a week.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] on Friday of last week gave you a vivid description of the distressed coal conditions in Tennessee. I do not want to take the time of the membership of this body to go into that any further except to say that Kentucky finds herself in that same distressed condition, and the suffering that is to-day in thousands of homes in my section impels me to state to you the situation as it exists with us to-day.

If you have ever been in a coal-mining community or lived in one, you will realize the absolute necessity of every miner being constantly employed. Fellow Members, lack of employment brings an added distress in that when the earning capacity of the fathers of these homes is reduced the children must remain away from school. This brings about dissatisfaction, oftentimes unrest and disintegration, and I feel it is well for us to think of this side of the question as well as the commercial side.

Heroic efforts are being made to keep our coal industry going, but production is languishing until the operators can not meet their problems. We are possessed of vast domains, with their treasures of untold wealth and fertility, but this can only be developed where the individual is protected in his endeavors. Does it not follow that, endowed as our great country is with an abundance of natural wealth, we should take advantage of the merchant marine to get proper shipping facilities for the same, instead of forcing ourselves to depend upon the ships of foreigners to export our coal? We should build up a fleet of American ships, with such rates that would put us on an equal basis in the markets overseas with British coal. Our Navy should be as every other thing in our beloved America—second to none.

I would also like to mention that the miners, officials, and operators in my section cooperate with each other to the fullest extent, and by that means the efficiency of coal production will be maintained at its present ratio. Our companies have orders for thousands of tons of coal for overseas shipment but can not secure ships to carry them on. Is this a fair proposition to them, as well as to the country at large? Is it right that commerce be cut down for this reason and thus lessen the prosperity of us all, from the miners up to the higher officials?

I have personally seen hundreds of miners go out in the early morning hours with their dinner pails on their arms and brave the dampness and dangers of the coal mines and come out in the eventide to go home to their blessed wife and little ones in the cabin homes close by; and so, my fellow colleagues, to-day I earnestly plead that you favorably consider this amendment, and I want to say to you that I feel it is in behalf of that man whose grip is a little tighter, whose smile is a little brighter, whose faith is a little whiter. That is what we call a mountaineer down in old Kentucky. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

As a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and one who has been most carefully considering the suggestion of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, as well as the so-called Jones bill, I am very much in hope that something may this year come from one or the other of these proposals.

Now we are being asked to authorize an appropriation of an additional million dollars for new operations and additional losses.

Since 1920 the country has been waiting for the time when we can put an end to Government operation and arrive at some solution of the merchant-marine problem. We are all agreed, of course, that we want an efficient merchant marine, but it should, if possible, be under private operation.

I wonder how many other businesses might approach the Shipping Board and be told, "Go to Congress, secure an appropriation of a million and a half or two million dollars to cover our losses by operation, and we will recondition some more of our old ships and set them to work taking care of your particular industry." If this were to happen—and I think that it would—shall we ever terminate the United States Shipping Board?

Regarding the suggestion now under consideration, it seems to me that we might do well to wait a while and see if something better does not come out of the several plans now being considered, and then under a deficiency bill toward the close of the session we can provide funds to cover such proposals as may have been enacted into law.

As much as we dislike to seem to be against the upbuilding of a strong merchant marine or the relief of any particular industry, I feel that we should oppose this appropriation at the present time.

I know nothing about the soft-coal industry, but if that business is to receive such assurances as these how many others are there to be baited by the United States Shipping Board and when shall we ever get back to the plan which, in 1920, it was intended that we should follow? By all means let us have a merchant marine, but not one in competition with our private citizens. Let us have private ownership, perform the actual carrying on of business, with the aid of the Government and assisted by loans from the Government, if necessary, but not with the Government engaged in business. An advance along this line is what I believe the country is expecting of us, rather than such increases of expenditures as have just been advocated.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky and Mr. REECE rose.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I can not answer any questions relating to the soft-coal industry, as I am not familiar with it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I was not going to ask the gentleman about the soft-coal industry. I have a report in my hands from the United States Shipping Board, dated in 1927, and it shows we handled 521,000 tons of manufactured articles, as well as cotton, phosphates, lumber, grain, and flour. Is the gentleman in favor of handling the products of New England and other sections and denying the facilities of the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation to the soft-coal industry of the country?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as I have stated, I do not know anything about that particular industry. What I do say is that we ought this year to establish a principle with some determination of a policy. Let us have a real merchant marine. Let us come to our senses and help our merchant marine as other nations help theirs, but let us not continually keep coming here for the purpose of increasing Government operation under the plea of aiding this industry or that.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. One other question. How can the gentleman from Massachusetts, whose State depends upon the Navy and a merchant marine, expect to carry on a Navy and a merchant marine and deny this service to the industries of the interior of the country?

Mr. REECE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. REECE. I am wondering if the gentleman, who has manifested a great interest in the Cape Cod Canal, would be willing to give us for this purpose the first $1,000,000 profit out of the operation of the Cape Cod Canal? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not see just how the parallel fits in this discussion, but that does not matter. I would repeatedly state that I am willing to indorse such a measure as the Wood bill and give the merchant marine all the aid it needs, lend it all the money it requires, and have as great a merchant marine as any one of you would care to picture; but do not let the Government get any further into competition with private industry. Government is not established for such a purpose and can not do it successfully.

Since 1920 it has been our intention rather to get out of business, and this is the basis of the objection which I have tried to present.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one more minute, as I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think the best way to build up a merchant marine is to have the shipping interests of the country behind that merchant marine [applause]; and does not this amendment to this amendment do this very thing?

Mr. GIFFORD. I think that question answers itself. Everyone must agree that the country ought to get firmly behind the merchant marine, but the country wants to get out of the business of operating a merchant marine.

Mr. BLAND. I said the shipping interests of the country—the interests which have the commodities to ship. Is it not necessary that these people, who will furnish the cargo, shall be behind a merchant marine in order to build up a merchant marine properly?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking of any one particular industry. What would the end be if the Shipping Board could say to the various industries, "We can look after your business if we are allowed to lose millions enough"? I say that the argument that we should increase the appropriations in order to help a particular industry is an appealing one, but how are we ever going to terminate the United States Shipping Board and its activities if that sort of thing be continued?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I was disappointed in my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], who ordinarily follows through. I regret to have the gentleman, representing a great industrial State which has been blessed with the merchant marine service since its birth, a period of almost 10 years, deny the coal sections of this country an opportunity to be benefited by the merchant marine. This distinguished gentleman made a gallant fight in the last Congress and has secured several million dollars from the Treasury to take over Cape Cod Canal, a private enterprise. It was then argued that this would be safeguarding life and property on seagoing vessels; that the shipper and the shipping industries would be benefited by this purchase. He has just stated on the floor that the merchant marine was a great benefit for his section; that it was a benefit to the entire country; and yet in his opposition to this amendment it seems to me that he wants to sectionalize it. I regret that this spirit has been evidenced upon the floor.

I submit to my colleagues that if the merchant marine has been a benefit to Massachusetts there is no logical reason why Kentucky's paralyzed coal industry should be overlooked. When I say that the coal industry is in a paralyzed condition I merely state a truth. I do not represent what might be termed a coal district. Of the 19 counties in the district which I represent only 3 produce coal, and that in not considerable quantity. But my district is the gateway for two large coal fields—the Big Sandy field and the Kentucky River field. I am thoroughly familiar with the conditions in the coal fields, and I know that the industry is prostrate. I grant you agriculture and other great industries are far from a prosperous condition, but their impoverished condition accentuates rather than diminishes the condition of the coal game.

The conditions which confront the coal industry is not confined in effect to the people who are actually engaged in coal operations, but it affects various other business in the coal country; it affects many other sections of the State in a widespread financial depression.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The amendment increases the appropriation from $12,000,000 to $13,000,000. There is no direction in the amendment to bring about the reconditioning of the ships. Just how will the increase of appropriation of $1,000,000 bring about the proposition which the gentleman is seeking?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I took up the matter with Mr. O'Connor, chairman of the Shipping Board. Not all of the ships will have to be reconditioned. A few of them will. Some of them are now in condition to operate. During the past year the total loss per payable ton was $1.48. The chairman of the Shipping Board informs me that in the carrying of coal it will be something around a dollar. By way of comparison he puts it in the same category with grain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Then the proponents of the bill had the assurance of the Shipping Board that if you increase the appropriation by a million dollars, that million dollars will be used for the purpose that the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is correct. The carrying of the coal, so far as the profit or loss is concerned, if the information furnished by the Shipping Board is correct, is in the same category as the carrying of grain.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LOZIER. Not in the spirit of controversy because I favor every appropriation which will help the Shipping Board in carrying out the program for the maintenance of a national merchant marine, but I am wondering, in view of the attitudes of the railroads of the country, taking into consideration the fact that practically every transcontinental railroad has a working agreement or contract with English shipping firms by which tonnage originating far from the coast when it reaches the shipping port is transferred to and carried in English ships.

It seems to me that this opposition of the railroads is striking directly at the efficiency of the merchant marine, and unless we can devise some means which will prevent the railroads from entering into these contractual relations with foreign ships, we will make exceedingly slow progress in building up the American merchant marine. I am wondering if the gentleman has a remedy or has thought of some method by which this opposition of the American railroads could be curtailed.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I wish to say this, that a number of leading railroads have expressed their willingness to cooperate.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. There is a good reason why they will cooperate. When they lose money, and big money through loss of freight shipments, because of failure to sell the surplus coal, if American bottoms are furnished to carry their coal, there will be a real reason why they will get together and give lower rates for the transportation of coal to the port of shipment; and in that connection, I might say that in England the railroads enter into the spirit of the thing and give preferential rates to the shipment of coal to the various ports from which coal is carried in British bottoms.

Mr. LOZIER. I make the point not only with reference to the coal, but with reference to all commodities. These railroads have working agreements with foreign steamship companies by which their tonnage, instead of being transferred at tidewater to American bottoms, is transferred to British bottoms.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It seems to me that the railroads of the country, particularly those built for coal-carrying purposes, would hasten to give a preferential rate on coal to the ports for foreign shipment, because thereby they would keep the wheels of their own business running. The Chesapeake & Ohio and the Louisville & Nashville run through my district. They tap these coal fields. The depression in the railroad centers is marked. They are cutting men off every day because the coal operators do not have a market for their coal, and because of that it seems likely that the preferential rates would be given.

According to Chairman O'Connor the cost of reconditioning will approximate $150,000 to $200,000. It is the purpose, as I understand it, to place at least 10 boats in the coal trade to the South American and Mediterranean countries. Mr. O'Connor informed me that the tonnage of coal that would be carried would be around 400,000 tons per year. While this amount is small as compared to the total of our Nation of more than 500,000,000 tons, it will be the initiation of a movement that may mean much to the entire coal-producing sections of our country. If the railroads serving the coal-producing sections will join in, this movement may develop into one of magnitude and benefit for a crippled industry. I trust that the amendment of my colleague from Kentucky will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McDUFFIE to the amendment offered by Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: Strike out the figures "$13,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$13,400,000."

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment seeks to put back into the bill the amount actually recommended by the Budget. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] simply seeks to regain the million dollars of the amount that was taken off by the Committee on Appropriations. Oh, it is all right to be wise and judicious in the expenditure of public money and try not to waste it, but the Congress is making serious error and the committee is making a serious error in not providing this activity of the Government with at least the amount of money recommended by the President's Budget. The committee says that it gave the Shipping Board all that it appeared they needed. It is true that the Shipping Board was enthusiastic and the Merchant Fleet Corporation was enthusiastic in showing to this committee the actual savings that might be made; but I challenge any man on this floor to point out a single word in the hearings wherein it is shown that a single member of the Shipping Board has said that they could get along with less than the Budget actually estimated as necessary for them. There are some savings to be had, we hope; but why should we stint, why should we hunt for some place in which to cut down a few dollars here and a few dollars there in providing funds for what to-day is the most important activity of all Government activities? They said that they would save some on oil, but that is conditioned upon the sale of some ships on the west coast. I am ready to say now that this administration has shown a determined effort to get these ships out of the hands of the Government all too quickly. This saving is conditional. The board tells the committee where they might save some dollars here and there, but the last word that the chairman said was, "Please give us the money the Budget has estimated for us," which was $1,100,000 less than the board estimated as necessary to carry on this work for another year. Here I quote Mr. O'Connor's exact language:

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want to say to the committee, before we leave, that we believe we have never asked the committee for an appropriation in the last four years that we were not absolutely justified in asking for. We have not wasted any of the money that has been granted to us. Not a penny of the Government's money has been wasted. We are well checked up; we know that.

Mr. WOOD. I think you are doing pretty well.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We are not asking for anything for this year except what we believe we are entitled to. If a million dollars is left over, that is going to go back to the Treasury. We are not going to waste it. This year is a peculiar one in a way, and we would like to get all that we are asking the Government Budget officer for.

Mr. CULLEN. I think that the chairman expressed our opinion a moment ago when he said that you have done very well this year.

I submit that in dealing with this problem we should be more liberal. This amendment is going to carry. This Congress is going to respond to the wishes of America and give sustenance and support to this merchant marine until legislation comes in here properly providing under the Wood bill or the Jones bill, or some other bill, some means by which we can permanently establish a merchant marine and have the Government get out of the field. The policy of the board, I am informed, is not to compete with private enterprise. The board and merchant fleet have made a wonderful showing last year, and why not carry all or a major portion of the tonnage of this country in our own bottoms? When we come to deal with this problem, let us not be penny-wise and pound-foolish.

Let us show the world that until we do have legislation the American Congress believes in properly supporting this great governmental enterprise, and we are not doing it now if we cut down the funds. What greater club can you give to our competitors? I want to know what you think of the psychology of a situation wherein it appears that Congress, representing the American people, who everywhere demand that this Government institution be supported properly, has cut the estimate approved by the President by $1,400,000. Here is where you get a part of the savings. Is it not the interest on money now owing the Shipping Board and that has just gone out on a point of order?

Mr. WOOD. Oh, no; it did not.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I understood that it did, with an amendment excepting the loan construction fund. That is the money they have loaned. It is about $9,000,000, and that is where the $300,000 plus comes in.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It did not say anything about the loan fund. It is the interest on other funds.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But that has been eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I ask the gentleman from Indiana if it is not a fact that the point of order just sustained means that you eliminate just that much money which might be available under the language of your bill for the general operation and functions of the Merchant Fleet?

Mr. WOOD. No; the gentleman is mistaken. There was no point of order sustained. There was an amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, which did not make this apply to the construction fund. There is no part of this amount that is to be used as an operation fund. It is to go to the construction fund.

Mr. McDUFFIE. How much is the Shipping Board to get from this source involving interest on its funds? Is not that interest on money loaned with which to build ships as well as on other funds?

Mr. WOOD. No. It is interest accumulating on money on deposit in various banks throughout the world. It is not upon the construction fund. It is upon the moneys deposited for the purpose of operating expenses at these various places. It is just a time deposit. The interest is not upon the construction fund at all.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The subcommittee, judging from the hearings, was casting about to see how they could cut down this appropriation. This same thing has been done for the last eight years here in Congress. Every time a bill comes in every effort is made, it seems, by those charged with responsibility, to withhold funds from the Shipping Board for the operation of merchant ships. But when you refuse to give the amount absolutely necessary to carry on this business you are saying to the world, or you are having our competitors on the high seas, say to the world, "The American flag will fade from the seas; and why? Because Congress, the representatives of the people fail, year by year, to give it proper sustenance."

That is the situation presented here. You are not giving such support as is necessary to have the flag remain on the high seas. That, I say, is the serious proposition here. So far as the money lost on operation is concerned, you gentlemen know that hearings were held all over this land and the American people said, "Continue to operate under Government operation until we can have legislation otherwise."

The comparatively small sum of $16,000,000 or $18,000,000 lost annually in the cost of operation of these ships is paid back a thousandfold to American producers and American consumers by reason of the fact that we have something to say about the prices to be paid for placing our goods in all the markets of the world. If we are to compete for world business we must deliver the goods. I submit, gentlemen, that you could not do a finer thing for this country than to give the entire amount required, not a million dollars, but a million four hundred thousand dollars, to the Shipping Board to carry on this activity. I do not care whether it is coal or not that our ships carry. But let us try, until we have proper legislation, to furnish the board and Fleet Corporation with funds necessary to operate the fleet as it should be operated, and not make ourselves the laughingstock of the great shippers of the world. Let us notify the world that our merchant flag is on the high seas to stay. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. In the general debate that we had here on this bill the question of the adequacy of this appropriation was entered into very fully. At that time it was stated that there would be a saving of $1,400,000 on the sale of the line that is now being advertised. There would possibly be a saving of a million dollars in the difference in the cost of oil. I then stated that I felt it would be entirely within reason had we reduced this appropriation $2,000,000 instead of $1,000,000.

What has occurred here this morning demonstrates the position taken by the committee as being a correct one in this: The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky of $1,000,000 is for what purpose? An entirely new and independent purpose. There seems to have been some sort of understanding between those who are interested in the coal-mining regions of this country—and I am entirely in sympathy with them—and the Shipping Board, that if they were given $1,000,000 in addition to the appropriation provided for in this bill, that $1,000,000 will be expended in reconditioning ships for carrying coal, thus proving beyond peradventure that they would have, without that additional $1,000,000, plenty of money to conduct the other operations they then had in contemplation.

Unfortunately we have a diversity of opinion in the Shipping Board. Unfortunately all the members of the board are not in favor either of executing the spirit or the letter of the Jones Act. They are not in favor of a privately owned merchant marine. They have always indicated, when an opportunity offered itself, their intention to keep the Government in the business of operating the merchant marine. If the spirit of the present merchant marine law were carried out, these ships long ago would have been in the hands of private owners. Opportunity has offered time and time again for the sale of ships, but somebody threw a monkey wrench into the machinery at an opportune time to prevent the sale, and we see the spectacle repeated now.

A resolution introduced on the other side is for no other purpose than to prevent the sale of the three lines that are advertised for sale. Their proposition in regard to these interchangeable ports is for the purpose of blocking and making impossible the selling of these ships. Why? Because they want to continue the Government in the business of running the merchant marine.

It is not my purpose or intention here to criticize the motives of the gentleman who introduced that resolution, because that would be against the rules of this House, but I can not for the life of me understand what has come over the spirit and the dreams of the man who is supposed to be the author of the present merchant marine law, which provides that as soon as practicable the fleet shall be placed in the hands of private owners.

He is now trying by every move—and by two distinct ones made within the last three weeks—to block the carrying out of the letter and the spirit of his law. So I say that just as long as we keep this divided policy as to whether we are for or against a Government-owned merchant marine or a privately owned merchant marine, just so long are we playing into the hands of our competitors across the sea, and just so long are we contributing to their desire, which is to see the ships we have decaying and decadent and fading off the sea, as happened after the Civil War. So I say that we who are honestly in favor of a privately owned merchant marine should agree upon some sort of a policy. If we are not to have a privately owned merchant marine, then let us have the courage to say we are going to have it run by the Government.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is it the policy or the view of the gentleman that the way to bring about that very much desired result of the private operation of the ships is to withhold the funds necessary to properly operate the Shipping Board for the present? Does the gentleman think that withholding adequate funds is going to force them to sell the ships, and is that the gentleman's idea?

Mr. WOOD. It would not, and we have not done it. We stated upon the floor the other day and made the same promise that in the event it is necessary to appropriate more money to cover the losses resulting in the operation of these ships that a deficiency will be provided for that purpose, and that is entirely satisfactory to the board. It has been demonstrated here the committee is right, and that gentlemen who are trying to increase this appropriation are wrong, because if they have $1,000,000 more and use that $1,000,000 in the reconditioning of freight ships for the purpose of carrying coal they do not need it for the operation of the general business they are doing now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I am very much interested in this subject, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana this question: Will there be any hope or any prospect of the Shipping Board reconditioning ships for the transportation of coal if this amendment is not agreed to?

Mr. WOOD. Well, I would say I do not think there will be, but I am speaking in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. The very amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, with the understanding they have in the Shipping Board, demonstrates the fact that they do not need this $1,000,000 except for the purpose of reconditioning boats in which to carry coal.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I suggest to the gentleman that if they need the amount, I am trying to add to the amount suggested by the committee for the actual operation of their business, then they will certainly need more than that if they are to use any money for the coal business. They will need $1,000,000 more if they need $1,000,000 for the coal business, and this House is hamstringing the Shipping Board if it fails to provide it with that amount of funds.

Mr. WOOD. The Shipping Board has not been hamstrung up to this time, and there is no intention on the part of this subcommittee to hamstring it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. This $1,000,000 is to be used in reconditioning where necessary and to take care of whatever losses may be sustained during the next year in carrying coal.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe in the Government subsidizing any industry, but if we can slightly increase this appropriation and contribute in any degree toward building up or improving the merchant marine and at the same time stimulate a very important and essential industry in this country, it seems to me it would be the wise course to take. The bituminous-coal industry is one of the most important industries in the country. It is a basic industry upon which many other industries must depend and with which the health and happiness and prosperity of millions of our people are closely connected. The Government could make no better investment at this time than one that would open up the bituminous-coal mines and put idle coal miners back to work.

I have been very much impressed with what has been said about the coal industry. It is very vital to the people I represent. I know a town in southern Illinois where there is a building and loan association that now has on hand more than 200 houses. It is engaged in the business of loaning money to workingmen and others to build homes. I know a number of other towns in southern Illinois where similar building and loan associations have as many, or practically as many, houses on their hands. Why has all this come about? Because the coal industry has become prostrate and thousands of men employed in that industry have been out of employment for a year or two years. They have been unable to earn any wages or make any money and could not meet the payments on their homes, so that the building and loan associations have had to take their homes away from them, and now they can not even collect rent on them, and hundreds of the former homes are standing idle. Those men have been driven out of the coal-mining industry and are either being supported by contributions or are attempting to get into other industries.

The soft-coal mining industry, especially in Illinois, Kentucky, Indiana, and, perhaps, in some parts of Ohio and western Pennsylvania, is prostrate because there is no market for the coal. They can not sell it in this country.

If we can recondition some of our idle ships and find a market for this surplus coal in foreign countries, it is going to be a wonderful thing for those sections of the country. It has not only affected the welfare of the men employed in the mines but it has seriously affected the merchants, professional men, and banks and other lines of business. Banks are even in some places embarrassed in those sections of the country; grocerymen and other merchants in many instances are going into bankruptcy, and the mining industry in the soft-coal sections are becoming more and more prostrate because they can not sell their product. Millions and millions of dollars are invested in that industry.

Many of the coal companies themselves are going bankrupt, and if we can make a slight increase in this appropriation and give the Shipping Board funds with which to recondition some ships to use for the transportation of coal to foreign ports and thereby give us some additional markets for this important industry, it is going to do a great deal of good to a great many people. There is no doubt about that, and I think this is a wise amendment.

It may not accomplish what it is intended to accomplish. But I know of no great industry in this country that is in as serious a condition as the bituminous coal industry. I know of no class of people in this country that has suffered and is suffering for the necessaries of life like the coal miners and their families in sections like southern Illinois. I want to do something for them if there is anything the Government can do. What we need and have to have is a market for our coal, so our mines can resume work and our miners earn a living. This additional appropriation to furnish ships to transport coal to foreign markets offers at least some hope, and it may bring us some relief.

Mr. HUGHES and Mr. ABERNETHY rose.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in seven minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it is apparent to me this committee will favor the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] and I feel that they should. There is no measure that has been put before this House at this session that I think is more important to the people of the country than this amendment.

I come from the State of West Virginia, the largest producer of coal of any State in the Union. Our people are now suffering for a market for this coal. We have the coal, we can produce it, and all we need is a market. This relief that the Shipping Board can give us, in my opinion, will afford a market for the coal, not only of West Virginia, but of the neighboring States that so badly need a market.

I feel this House is going to adopt the amendment and I am not going to take any further time of the committee, but will ask the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am going to vote for this amendment. We hear that during this Republican administration one great industry known as the coal industry is absolutely prostrate. We hear this from Republican authority, and our Republican friends should not want any industry during this so-called progressive and prosperous administration to be prostrate. I am going to support the amendment so they can claim that the coal industry is prosperous along with the balance of the industries of the country. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana and the action of the gentleman from California, who believes in a 12-hour day, precludes my presenting——

Mr. FREE. I resent that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You do? You have introduced a resolution to that effect.

Mr. FREE. The gentleman has no right to make the statement that I stand for a 12-hour day when that is not true.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I intend to offer an amendment increasing this amount by $300,000 so as to make it $12,300,000, of which $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used to install three watches in the deck department of cargo vessels operated by the Shipping Board. They are now working them in only two watches a day, each of 12 hours, one man on watch and one man to steer the vessel. Formerly this was done in three watches of eight hours each. My amendment proposes to restore that eight-hour system.

I was glad to vote, some years ago, for what is now the law known as the Clayton Act and which contains the statement that the labor of a human being is not a commodity or an article of commerce. The amendment is in accord with this statement in the law.

Twelve hours a day was the rule until a short time ago for thousands of workers in this country, especially in the plants of the Steel Trust, and it took a letter of a President and constant and protracted agitation to do away with it. But a decision of the Supreme Court has construed the shipping law as mandatory, and as requiring the establishment of two watches of 12 hours each in the cargo vessels of the Shipping Board.

I introduce the amendment only to correct this hard, deplorable situation.

My time has almost expired, and I now ask permission to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD two letters, one from Mr. T. V. O'Connor, chairman of the United States Shipping Board, and the other from Mr. Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

DECEMBER 9, 1927.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,

Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: With further reference to your letter of November 7, 1927, I want to place the situation before you, so that you will understand the merits in the light of further consideration by our operating unit.

The law requires that the sailors shall be divided into at least two watches. Before the Supreme Court decision it was customary on our cargo ships to divide the sailors or deck crew of 12 men, including the boatswain, on the day-men system. This meant that 6 men were selected for wheel and lookout duty, who worked on 3 watches, 4 hours on and 8 off, making 8 hours' work in the 24. The balance of the deck crew, 1 boatswain and 5 men, were assigned to day work of 8 hours a day, excepting Sundays and holidays, and also giving them every night off. This gave the ship a deck working force during eight daylight hours of the day for the upkeep and maintenance of the vessel. The system was entirely satisfactory to the men and gave everyone an eight-hour day.

However, in a case which got to the Supreme Court (O'Hara v. Luckenbach), the court interpreted the law to mean that the sailors or deck crew must be divided into at least two watches, and that the watches must be equal in time as well as number of men. The decision had the effect of making the day-men system illegal, and the Fleet Corporation was obliged to instruct its district operating officials to comply with the law as interpreted by the Supreme Court, i. e., at least two equal watches in time and number of men.

The two-watch system is not as satisfactory from an operating point of view as the day-men system. The latter system, while dividing the wheel and lookout men into three watches, did not divide the balance of the deck crew, but worked them eight continuous hours, except for meal time, and they were through at the end of the day. But it gave the ship the service of six men, including the boatswain, for painting, scraping, repair, and general work in connection with the physical upkeep of the ship. The two-watch system divides the 12 men, including the boatswain, into 2 watches, and after selecting 2 men out of each watch for wheel and lookout duty, left 4 men for deck work, and during the night watch those particular men would be either idle or attempting to do what they could in darkness.

The alternative is the three-watch system. This implies, of course, a division of the deck crew into three groups, four men to each watch, and after the wheel and lookout watches are assigned the result is two men on deck at any one time, four hours on and eight off.

In order to give the three-watch system, one man would have to be added. The average cargo ship of the board carries in the unlicensed deck crew 8 able seamen, 1 ordinary seaman, 2 deck boys, and 1 boatswain.

Mr. Furuseth contends that the establishment of the three-watch system would require only one additional man. Based upon the number of our vessels now in active service this would mean an increase in the wages and subsistence of approximately $289,000 per annum. We are inclined to believe, however, that we eventually would have to make increases beyond the one man in order to provide for an equal division, one leading man in charge of each watch, and thus, of course, still further increase the handicap in operating costs which the American ships are laboring under in competition with foreign-flag ships. If we are to make this change advocated by Mr. Furuseth we would necessarily need at least $300,000 increase in our present estimate for ship operation, now in the hands of Congress.

One viewpoint is that regardless of cost the two-watch system is wrong and should be rectified. On the other hand, various steamship owners and associations have wired in urging no adoption by the board on its vessels of the three-watch system, in view of costs and further demands following this concession. The two-watch system is recognized by law as legal.

I assume that you are aware that this matter of sea watches has been before the last Congress in a bill which Mr. FREE introduced (H. R. 9399), on which no action was reached. It is understood that it will be brought up again at the present Congress.

I am attaching copies of telegrams received from private operators, which explain themselves.

We are urged to let the matter be decided by Congress. While it is contended that the eight-hour day in principle never was meant to apply to ships, and while I am in general an advocate of the eight-hour day, I feel that in this particular case it might be left until after action by the Congress.

Very truly yours,

T. V. O'CONNOR, Chairman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 13, 1927.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,

Secretary of Labor, Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In the letter which Mr. T. V. O'Connor, chairman of the Shipping Board, has sent you in re hours of labor at sea there are sundry statements which need explanation and elucidation.

He first describes the hours of labor as they were prior to the efforts made by the Department of Commerce to have section 2 of the seamen's act enforced, as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of O'Hara v. Luckenback. He says a crew of 12 is divided by running three watches in the wheelhouse and on the lookout, 2 men on the watch and that the other 6 men of the crew of 12 work on deck during the daylight to keep the ship sanitary and to keep the ship and all her appliances and gear in a seaworthy condition.

When there are two men on the watch, one at the wheel and one at the lookout, there is a necessary violation of the international sailing rules, which provide that there must be one man on the lookout from sunset to sunrise. Unless some of the day men are called out this is impossible with two men. It means four hours at the wheel and four hours on the lookout, and since there is no one to relieve either of them it becomes an absolute necessity, unless some one of the day men is called out, that the man on the lookout must relieve the man at the wheel whenever such relief must be had; and since there is nobody to relieve the man on the lookout there are at least three occasions upon which there will be no lookout; first, if the man at the wheel must be relieved; secondly, when the man on the lookout must call the watch below; thirdly, when the man on the lookout must answer a call of nature. Beyond this the lookout is deserted, while the lookout man does anything that had to be done.

Thus we get into a condition in which there sometimes is a lookout and sometimes not. It was this condition that resulted in the sinking of submarine 51. Wheel and lookout duty on sailing vessels was two hours. This work, both at the wheel and on the lookout, requires concentration to such an extent that any more than two hours was not considered safe. Steering and lookout are much more important in steamers than in sailing vessels, therefore concentration and extreme watchfulness are more needed.

In passing it may be said that if one of the Shipping Board vessels was to run down a privately owned vessel it would not make any difference where the real fault might be found; the fact that the Shipping Board vessel had no lookout would make her guilty, and therefore subject to pay all the damages.

The two-watch system operates as follows: Let us call the two watches A and B and begin at 8 p. m. and we will have the following:

	Possible sleep Hours
A. Resting:
8 p. m. to 12 midnight	3½
4 a. m. to 8 a. m.	2½
12 midday to 4 p. m.	2½
6 p. m. to 8 p. m.
B. Resting:
12 midnight to 4 a. m.	3½
8 a. m. to 12 midday	3½
4 p. m. to 6 p. m.

You will note that A has during the 24 hours 8½ hours sleep, divided into three sections, and that B has 7 hours sleep, divided into two sections. On the next day B takes the position of A and gets the 8½ hours sleep, and A takes the position of B and therefore gets 7 hours sleep, divided as above stated.

In an average sailing vessel, the men were on deck ready to obey orders, but some of them could get some sleep on deck during their watch on deck. This is not possible under the law, as it exists at present, if the men on watch are to be ready for immediate obedience to orders at any time. The speed with which steam vessels may meet, even during the greatest visibility of lights, is so much increased from the time of sailing vessels that in the interest of safety everybody must be ready. The greatest visibility of a mast-head light is 5 miles. Let us assume that one vessel is moving at 20 miles an hour and the other at 10; this gives 2 minutes to a mile, or 10 minutes for the 5 miles, but such visibility is rare. It is much more likely to be 6 minutes or 4 minutes.

It is stated in the letter that the men work 8 hours and they like it. No wonder. They get 6½ to 7 hours sleep after 4 hours duty, or they could sleep the whole night, and as long as God was merciful enough to prevent a collision or a disaster, such arrangement might be well enough, but it is contrary to international sailing rules and contrary to the Supreme Court decision, which holds the law to be a safety measure. From the shipowners' point of view it is also, in most instances, agreeable, because, first, they have the limitation of liability under which they are not responsible to the traveling public for loss of life, limb, or health caused by disaster. They have the so-called legitimate insurance from which they receive the full value of the vessel and the shipper receives the full value of the cargo. They also have the protection and indemnity insurance, through which they are insured against any losses and accidents arising from carelessness or inaptitude, whether it be a collision, a fire, or a delay. The premiums paid are, of course, added to the overhead expense and charged into the cost of operation, thus giving the public an opportunity to pay the damages, which, if they were really paid by the owner, would result in a larger, better trained, and generally more efficient officers and crew.

It is claimed that the letter suggests that they need the men on deck in the daytime in order to keep the vessel in order. Under a system such as was operated, they will get 48 hours' labor for the upkeep of the vessel from the six-day men. They will, however, get 56 hours in all, because there are no men on the lookout in the daytime, unless the visibility is so low through haze or fog that a lookout is needed on that account, so let it be conceded that they get 56 hours.

Under the three-watch system they get eight hours of work from each man of the deck crew. In the nighttime there is one man at the wheel, one man at the lookout, one man to relieve either of them, so that they may have two hours on the lookout or at the wheel instead of four; and there is one man to do such other work as he can, and there is plenty of work to be done on board of a vessel in the matter of splicing or overhauling blocks, making strops, etc., which can be made by lamplight in the boatswain's locker or some other place, which leaves the fourth man ready for any kind of order that may come. Between 8 o'clock in the evening and 4 o'clock in the morning the vessel gets eight hours of work for the upkeep of the vessel from him. Beginning at 5 o'clock in the morning for the washing of deck and cleaning of ship, there are 3 hours' work of three men, making 9 hours; from 8 to 12 there are three men to work at 4 hours each, making 12 hours; from 12 to 4, three men at 4 hours each, another 12 hours; and from 4 to 7, three men at 3 hours each, another 9 hours, making a total of 50 hours in 24 for the upkeep of the ship.

If the ship can not be kept sanitary and seaworthy in that time, it is either because the ship was unseaworthy to begin with or the men are incapable of doing their work or the crew is insufficient in number. The first contingency may be dismissed, because we must assume that the inspection department will do its duty, so that it is either a question of the crew being insufficient in number or inefficient in skill.

It is stated in the letter that two watches are unsatisfactory to the shipowners, but more so than three. This can be readily understood because under the system of two watches they will get less hours of labor for the upkeep of the ship, unless the old practice of the sea as to when men shall turn to work and quit work is to be disturbed while the two watches are being kept.

Now, as to the cost which is also mentioned. It is perfectly possible to divide a crew of 12 into three equal watches, 4 on each watch, and there is no addition at all to the cost, but it leaves no special man to organize and superintend the work. For that reason, I suggested that they may hire one more man, which would not cost any more than at most $300,000 for the whole fleet per year. To this, however, the Shipping Board demurs, because they say they will have no one to lead the other two watches, the boatswain being on one. In other words, they confess that the men employed have so little practical knowledge of their work that they need constant watching in everything they do. If this be so, it will to a large extent account for cost, because unskilled sailors very often waste wire, cordage, and other gear to a greater extent than their wages amount to. Marine firemen may, and often do, waste sufficient amount of coal or oil in one watch to pay their wages for a week, and both together through lack of skill may be and are responsible for delays and cost of repairs in harbor that amount to more than all their wages put together.

In stating that the men like it, it should have been added that they like it better than the two watches but not as good as three watches. The fact of the matter is that men who have sea experience will not sign on vessels with two watches unless they are for one reason or another compelled to. The result is a decrease in efficiency and an increase in cost. I will not say that the Shipping Board consciously is assisting the shipowners in driving the efficient men from the sea, but I will suggest that they are permitting themselves to be persuaded to use their authority and the United States Treasury to bring about a condition which the shipowners evidently desire, and which it would cost them a good deal to attain, if they could not throw the responsibility and cost upon the Shipping Board, and so upon the Government and the administration. That they are in some way conscious of this seems to be indicated by the fact that members of the crew who complain about the violation of the law are placed on the deferred list—black list—and officers of the union who report matters to the local inspectors are promptly deprived of their right to come on board.

The letter contains protests from shipowners, but it should be noted that there are amongst the shipowners quite a number who are obeying the law by dividing the crew into three watches; amongst them are practically all the oil vessels, beginning with the Standard, quite a number of the intercoastal vessels and the coastwise vessels on the Pacific coast, except the Matson Co. As to the number on the Atlantic I have no personal knowledge, except it may well be noted that in order to get away from the three watches they are undertaking to carry what they call maintenance men, the legality of which is now on appeal to the circuit court of appeals sitting at New Orleans from the decision by the district judge at Galveston, Tex., who held that it was nothing but an attempted violation of law.

Hoping that this will serve as an addendum of an explanatory nature to the letter which you received from Mr. T. V. O'Connor, I beg to remain,

Most respectfully yours,

ANDREW FURUSETH,
President International Seaman's Union of America.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, when there has been a vote taken on the Robsion amendment I shall offer the amendment to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, may we have both amendments reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the two amendments.

The Clerk read the amendments referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I now offer my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 24, line 15, after the letter "b," strike out "$12,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$12,300,000, of which sum $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used to install three watches in the deck department of the cargo vessels operated by the Shipping Board."

Mr. WOOD. To that I make a point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, was the amount carried in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky which the committee adopted a $1,400,000 increase?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Alabama and the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky was agreed to, increasing the amount to $13,400,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask to modify my amendment by making it $13,700,000.

Mr. LEHLBACH. To that I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is simply that the text of the original bill which read "Paragraph (b), $12,000,000," has been amended, and the amendment itself was perfected, and the amended text now reads "$13,400,000." It is not subject to further amendment. Any change should have been made before the amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order by the gentleman from New Jersey is well taken, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That portion of the special claims appropriation, contained in the independent offices appropriation act for the fiscal year 1923, committed prior to July 1, 1923, and remaining unexpended on June 30, 1928, shall continue available until June 30, 1929, for the same purposes and under the same conditions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 35, line 11, after the word "conditions," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of the sum appropriated in this act shall be used to pay dues, fees, expenses, or disbursements for membership in any conference or committee controlled by foreign steamship companies."

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order, or I will reserve it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think it is subject to a point of order; it is a limitation.

Mr. WOOD. I think the very reading of the proposition of the proposed amendment shows that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There are at least three such limitations right in this appropriation bill referring to the Shipping Board. One is the employment of counsel; the other is on the salary; and the other is on rents for buildings. All that this amendment does is to limit the appropriation from paying for disbursements, fees, or dues, or expenses in connection with any steamship conferences controlled by foreign companies.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. In effect that is a prohibition against any steamship conference.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that this is a limitation only, and is within the rule and not subject to a point of order. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Now, Mr. Chairman, on the merits of the amendment. We heard the most startling statement made a few days ago by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], who recited conditions which the Shipping Board and American ships had to meet and told of what had happened right here when the Shipping Board were informed that they would not be permitted to schedule a certain number of sailings from India.

We have in New York what is known as the North Atlantic Association, made up of British, French, and Italian steamship companies engaged in the passenger trade. The Shipping Board has been cajoled into joining that conference. I will tell you gentleman what they do. They adopt certain terms and conditions at a conference, and no sooner is the conference over than they go to the telephone and tell their agents to disregard them.

They have adopted rules as to the commission to be paid to the steamship agents, and every foreign steamship company is disregarding those rules and paying excess commissions to the agents all over the country. Of course the United States Government can not put itself in that position, and officials of the Shipping Board can not go to a telephone and say to an agent, "Forget that rule, and we will give you an excess commission." The result is that all of the steamship agents will naturally plug for the lines from which they receive the excess commissions.

The matter of sailings and schedules are fixed by this conference. Membership in this conference is made up by the Cunard Line, the White Star Line, the Compagnia Navigazione Generale, the Compagnie General Transatlantique, the Lloyd Sabaudo, the Anchor Line, and one or two other lines, I believe, and the Shipping Board, the United States Lines.

What chance has the United States Lines when they go into that conference? I state now on my own responsibility, because agents have told me so, that they get larger commissions from foreign steamship companies than they do from the United States Lines, because they get an excess commission over and above that fixed by the conference. If we are going to run ships, we must compete with foreign steamship companies, and if they threaten to get into a rate war, and they will do that sooner or later, we might as well do it; we can meet that situation when we come to it. But we are at a very great disadvantage as long as we join their conference or any other committee and agree to be bound by their decisions when the United States Lines have not a chance. The purpose is to control the North Atlantic and the Mediterranean traffic. I do not know whether the Mediterranean and the North Atlantic traffic are all in one conference, but it is the same control, and this North Atlantic Conference is so controlled and conducted to be most disadvantageous to American shipping. We have no business forming a part of it. We might, if necessary, confer with one or any foreign steamship company, but we should not enter into a combination or become part of a conference that is going to give the United States Lines a raw deal. It is our interest to remain on the outside and confer with them on equal terms; our lines should not be bound by any condition or terms or rules that this conference wishes to lay down. I submit to the House that we have absolutely nothing to lose and everything to gain in obtaining the Atlantic and Mediterranean trade if we keep out of the conference, instead of going in and letting the conference constantly put things over on the United States Lines operating passenger ships.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. The gentleman is offering this limitation because of the fact that the conference entered into by the Shipping Board or its representatives with the other shipping lines may be violated. The same character of reasoning would apply to our entering into treaties with foreign countries. We might say that we will not enter into any commercial treaty because that treaty might be violated.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We did not enter the League of Nations for that reason.

Mr. WOOD. Yes; we did not enter the League of Nations, and perhaps we have entered other things that we would better have kept out of, but the United States has always had the reputation, at least, of acting in good faith in any conference it ever has entered into or in making any treaty to which it has ever been a party.

There is a very great advantage if all of these conferences are honest in fixing a schedule of rates. They make them, as I understand, two or three times a year. Some of them are seasonal, and I expect most of them are seasonal. We are now engaged in a rate war with England, very much to the detriment of the Treasury of the United States, and possibly to the detriment of future disposition of some of our lines. My information is that they are going to cease that rate war; that a conference is to be had whereby a new schedule will be made, and they will endeavor to carry it out in good faith. I think it would be disastrous if we were not permitted to participate in this conference.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. My amendment would not refer to any conference between the companies. I am referring to such conferences as are an established institution, that the United States Lines pay dues to belong to.

Mr. WOOD. I do not know of any institution of that character to which we are paying any dues. Of course, there is some expense had in going to those conferences.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am referring to the North Atlantic Conference, and not conferring with these various companies.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. We have intrusted this great enterprise and these hundreds of ships to the Shipping Board to operate, and they have their experts, and they devote all of their time and they have the merchant fleet organization devoting all of its time to the study of these problems. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to allow the details of operation to be decided on by those boards and their experts rather than by the expert testimony of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] and by Congress, which has no adequate knowledge of it at all?

Mr. WOOD. Perhaps the gentleman's solution might be the correct one; but I do not want the Congress to commit itself to a policy which forbids the Shipping Board from entering in these conferences.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Perhaps the gentleman from New Jersey can give us some expert testimony on what the English and other steamship companies are doing.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I know no more about it than the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the gentleman from New York knows enough to know that the gentleman from New Jersey does not know anything about it. The gentleman is correct in that statement.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, much that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has said commends itself to me. I think those of us who have been on the Merchant Marine Committee over a period of years, and have had occasion to look somewhat into the workings of these conferences, have not been altogether satisfied at all times. If I understand the effect of the gentleman's amendment, it is to preclude the United States as such from participation in any conference whatsoever, because, of course, these conferences are with those who constitute a majority. We are one, and these conferences are made up of several foreign nations, and in every conceivable instance the foreign nations constitute a majority.

So that the amendment as framed precludes us from participation in any of these conferences.

Now, so far as I go, I want the representatives of the Shipping Board, when they enter into these conferences, to proceed with exceeding caution. I want them to consider with the greatest care the provisions that are worked out with respect to all matters of transportation, including rates. But I for one am not willing that there shall be held anywhere conferences vitally affecting the maritime interests of the United States without a representative of the United States at least having the right to be there on the ground and to participate in the discussions and in the conclusions that are arrived at.

It may very well be that there are conference agreements now in existence or which may hereafter be held—conferences which it would be altogether to the interest of the United States not to be a party to—and I can conceive much more easily that there may be others that it would be altogether to our advantage to be a party to, but I can not reconcile myself to the thought that these international groups can get together and lay down rules regarding ocean transportation, as these conferences are seeking to do, and not have some one there to speak for and act for the United States. I hope for that reason that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is all right to have some one present there and participating, but when you get into it you are bound by it.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. You are not bound by participation in the discussions, but if you sign up at the conclusion of a conference you are bound. But I think that in all of these conferences there is a clause providing for denunciation and withdrawal, and if there is no such a provision for denunciation and withdrawal, there certainly ought to be one. I think the Shipping Board should attend these conferences and on proper occasions to be members of the conference agreements; and I submit that in these matters of detail we must defer to the judgment of the official representatives of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA.]

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the reconditioning of the steamships Mount Vernon and Monticello at a total cost not in excess of $12,000,000, not to exceed $10,000,000 is made available from the construction loan fund and shall be reimbursed to such fund with interest at such rate and within such period as the board may determine, but not exceeding 10 years after the date of commission of such reconditioned vessels.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the language appearing on lines 12 to 18, inclusive.

Mr. WOOD. I concede that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being conceded, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS: Page 35, line 11, after the word "conditions" insert: "For the reconditioning of the steamships Mount Vernon and Monticello, $10,000,000: Provided, That the total cost of reconditioning shall not exceed $12,000,000: Provided further, That neither of said steamships shall be sold for less than the cost of reconditioning, less a deduction of 5 per cent per annum for depreciation from the date of completion of such reconditioning to the date of sale: And provided further, That such vessels shall be operated only in the foreign service."

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like the gentleman to state his point of order.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I concede that there is authority in the Shipping Board for the reconditioning of vessels whenever funds are appropriated by Congress. But the authority with respect to the sale of vessels of the United States is by existing law vested in the Shipping Board under definite limitations set out in full in the merchant marine act of 1920. This amendment, as I understand it, in its latter part seeks to limit and circumscribe the authority of the Shipping Board with respect to the sale of these vessels. It seems to me that is clearly legislation changing existing law and modifying and limiting the existing authority of the Shipping Board and that that legislation vitiates the entire amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, the merchant marine act of 1920 has a section authorizing the sale of Shipping Board vessels. Section 5 of the act provides—

That in order to accomplish the declared purposes of this act and to carry out the policy declared in section 1 hereof the board is authorized and directed to sell as soon as practicable, consistent with good business methods and the objects and purposes to be attained by this act, at public or private competitive sale after appraisement and due advertisement, to persons who are citizens of the United States, except as provided in section 6 of this act, all of the vessels referred to in section 4 of this act or otherwise acquired by the board. Such sale shall be made at such prices and on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe, but the completion of the payment of the purchase price and interest shall not be deferred more than 15 years after the making of the contract of sale. The board in fixing or accepting the sale price of such vessels shall take into consideration the prevailing domestic and foreign market price of, the available supply of, and the demand for vessels, existing freight rates and prospects of their maintenance, the cost of constructing vessels of similar types under prevailing conditions, as well as the cost of the construction or purchase price of the vessels to be sold, and any other facts or conditions that would influence a prudent, solvent business man in the sale of similar vessels or property which he is forced to sell.

The provision of my amendment, to which the criticism of the gentleman from Maine is directed, is simply a somewhat more specific statement of the original act itself and is certainly not in conflict with it. The committee of which the gentleman from Maine and I are both members and the Congress, at a previous session, amended the merchant marine act of 1920 so as to authorize the expenditure of $25,000,000 for reconditioning vessels owned by the Shipping Board through the installation of Diesel machinery in those vessels. In view of the fact that we were expending this amount of money or were to expend this amount of money in reconditioning, it was felt by our committee and by the Congress that it should not be done without some specific limitation being placed upon the Shipping Board in the resale of those vessels.

The act to which I refer—and which, I will state to the Chair, is Public Act No. 205, Sixty-eighth Congress—provides this:

Any such vessel hereafter so equipped by the board under the provisions of this section shall not be sold for a period of five years from the date the installation thereof is completed unless it is sold for a price not less than the cost of the installation thereof and of any other work of reconditioning done at the same time plus an amount not less than $10 for each dead-weight ton of the vessel as computed before such reconditioning therof is commenced.

This was an amendment to the merchant marine act of 1920 and is now the law. It not only refers to the Dieselization reconditioning but to any other work of reconditioning done upon the ships, and it provides that such ships can not be sold for less than the cost of reconditioning, plus $10 per dead-weight ton of the ships. It also provides, as I do in my amendment, that there may be deducted from that a depreciation of 5 per cent per annum.

I respectfully suggest that this is not only in keeping with the terms and spirit of the merchant marine act, as amended, but that it is certainly not in conflict with it. It is in keeping with the previous policy of the Congress and certainly is in keeping with the public interest, because I assume that no Member of this House wants to expend $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 upon these ships with the possibility that they will be sold for a song, as some of the ships have been sold, upon which millions have been expended. I further assume that no Member of the House would want to spend this much upon these ships and then take a chance of them being transferred to foreign registry.

So I respectfully submit that when we take all of the legislation upon the subject into consideration the point of order is not well taken.

And one thing further. This is a limitation upon the appropriation. In other words, it is a limitation in that it provides that it can only be spent upon certain conditions, and those conditions are of such a character as to protect the Public Treasury.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to say with respect to the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] that it should be borne in mind that this is an appropriation bill and that no legislation is in order upon an appropriation bill except in certain cases, the exceptions being well within the knowledge of the Chair. This does not purport even to be a limitation upon the appropriation because the legislative provision can not possibly take effect until the appropriation has been expended and its purpose accomplished.

The provisions under which the Shipping Board may sell these ships are set forth in section 5 of the merchant marine act of 1920, and the provisions under which they may sell these ships that have been Dieselized are set forth in the amendment of the merchant marine act of 1924. Those are the only limitations on the power of the Shipping Board to sell ships. It is now proposed, through an amendment on an appropriation bill, to add a further limitation to the discretion of the Shipping Board with respect to the sale of ships, and it is clearly out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment submitted is not a limitation but is clearly legislation placing restrictions upon the Shipping Board not now provided by law. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the funds of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation shall be available for the rent of buildings in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1929 if suitable space is provided for said corporation by the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS: Page 36, line 20: After the word "commission" insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of the funds of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation shall be available for the maintenance of a sea service bureau."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I think my record upon this floor is evidence of the fact I am strongly in favor of the maintenance of an American merchant marine and that I am heartily in favor of supporting the Shipping Board and Merchant Fleet Corporation and making all needed appropriations for that purpose.

I have just offered an amendment, which was ruled out on a point of order, which would have carried an additional appropriation, but which, I think, would have resulted in a most valuable addition to the American merchant marine as well as a most valuable benefit to the American people.

I have now offered an amendment which, if adopted, will effect a substantial saving, and without impairing the services or in any manner injuring the work of the Shipping Board and Merchant Fleet Corporation.

The sea service bureau was organized during the war when we were increasing our American tonnage by purchase and construction manyfold, and when American seamen or other seamen, for that matter, were not available to man these ships as they were launched. So this sea service bureau was established to train seamen and it rendered a necessary and valuable service; but the time for its usefulness has long since passed, and it is being maintained, as many other activities are maintained, because of the difficulty of applying the pruning knife.

I want to state that the select committee which investigated Shipping Board affairs sometime back entered into a full investigation of this subject and I know that I reached the conclusion, and I believe that other members of that committee reached the conclusion, that this sea service bureau should be eliminated.

If I had time to go into details and explain many of the things that were shown with respect to this bureau at those hearings, I believe the distinguished gentleman from Indiana and his colleagues upon the Appropriations Committee would reach the same conclusion which I have reached. I believe that in their effort to economize and to save every dollar they can—which I commend—they would see that undoubtedly here is one opportunity to effect a saving.

I do not know just exactly how much this sea service bureau cost during the last calendar year, but it has been ranging all the way from $100,000 per annum to as high as $400,000 some time back.

Chairman O'Connor, of the Shipping Board, appeared before the select committee and was questioned with regard to this sea service bureau, in part, as follows:

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. O'Connor, you are the member of the Shipping Board who has jurisdiction over the sea service bureau, are you not?

Commissioner O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. As I understand, that was a bureau that was established during the war, primarily in order to train seamen to be placed upon the Shipping Board vessels that were being acquired and constructed?

Commissioner O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. At the present time, and for some two or three years past, the sea service bureau has amounted to only a recruiting or seamen's employment service, has it not?

Commissioner O'CONNOR. That is practically all; yes.

Now, Mr. Joseph E. Sheedy was the vice president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the director of operations, and the one directly in charge of this sea service bureau, and I want to call your attention to what he had to say upon the same subject. After asking in a general way about it, this occurred at the same hearing:

Mr. DAVIS. Do you think that the bureau performs a successful function?

Mr. SHEEDY. Frankly, I have never been able to find out.

So he goes on, somewhat in detail, and states that if it serves any good purpose he supposes it is with a view to Americanizing the crews on our Shipping Board vessels.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. On this point there was a good deal of testimony taken to show that instead of this bureau having Americanized the seamen the opposite has been true. I shall not take time to go into details about this, but I want to read just one question and answer:

Mr. DAVIS. Well, it has been charged that you have employed a good many I. W. W. seamen; is that true or not?

Mr. SHEEDY. We have had a great many on our ships. There is no question about that; in fact, for several months we had representatives of the investigation bureau traveling on our passenger ships, particularly between here and Germany, but particularly on the North Atlantic routes, where we had a good deal of propaganda spread about. Whether it was coming west or going east I never did know.

Now, here is another feature to which I wish to direct the attention of the members of the committee, and particularly the members of the Committee on Appropriations. In peacetime this sea service bureau is nothing more or less than an attempt at duplication of the work of the shipping commissioners who serve under the Commissioner of Navigation in the Department of Commerce and for which appropriations are made annually.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I will.

Mr. WOOD. Suppose this appropriation was limited so as to take away the support of this bureau. I understand the bureau collects seamen in the event that seamen are asked for. Suppose you abolish the bureau, then what?

Mr. DAVIS. The same service would be performed by the shipping commissioners authorized by existing law to perform all the functions that this bureau is now performing, and there is a shipping commissioner in every port of entry and more shipping commissioners than there are port offices of the Sea Service Bureau.

Mr. WOOD. Who is the shipping commissioner responsible to?

Mr. DAVIS. To the Commissioner of Navigation under the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. WOOD. Who are the seamen selected from, who decides in reference to them?

Mr. DAVIS. They are selected like they are selected for the owners of private ships. The private shipping companies do not avail themselves of this bureau, and the only reason that the Shipping Board operators avail themselves of the bureau is because they are required to do it. If it was worth while, why would not the private owners avail themselves of it when they are privileged to do so? They have discarded it.

Mr. WOOD. The question which the gentleman raises is quite new to me. There is an expenditure of $350,000 or $400,000 a year for this service. If the gentleman is correct, it looks like we have been derelict in providing for it so long. There must be some advantages from it else our attention would have been attracted to it long ago.

Mr. DAVIS. I am not surprised that the matter has not come under the observation of the gentleman, because the ramifications of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation were so widespread and comprehensive that those of us who have been upon the committee dealing with that subject for many years have been learning something new all the time, and to which we have been devoting more time than the Appropriations Committee could devote to that problem.

I want to say further that some of the gentlemen that were on that select committee are here present—the gentleman from Alabama, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the gentleman from New Jersey, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. I do not believe that they will take issue with me on this matter. Without presuming to speak for them, my opinion is that if they express themselves they would reach about the same conclusion that I have come to, and the same conclusion, in substance, that Mr. Sheedy has stated in his testimony which I have read to you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. WOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. The public that is traveling on these vessels is interested in knowing that the ships are manned by proper seamen. I take it that the function of this bureau is to select men properly qualified to occupy the important places on these ships. If this bureau is abolished, what I am interested in knowing and what the public would be interested in knowing is who is going to recommend the qualifications of the men who are to take the places on the vessels?

Mr. DAVIS. There is a surplus of seamen. The condition does not exist now that formerly existed. I am informed that there are plenty of seamen who follow the sea as a profession. One thing this bureau has done a good deal of—and it is all right in its way, and yet from the standpoint of obtaining a sea personnel it is all wrong—and that is they have recruited innumerable school boys who would go on a ship for one or two trips and go back home. They went on the trip as a lark. No man can learn to be a seaman in that way. These temporary fellows have kept off the sea those who were willing to ship as seamen and continue it as a profession. The best evidence of that is that for the past several years, ever since the creation of the bureau, there has been a 50 per cent annual turnover.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CULLEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLEN. In regard to what the gentleman says about shipping college boys, that may have been done a few years ago, but the gentleman is aware that that has been suspended and that they are not making a practice of doing that thing now.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman from New York will agree with me that that was a practice that was followed to a large extent by the bureau we are talking about. They announced during the past year that they would discontinue the practice.

Mr. CULLEN. I find myself in the same position as the chairman of the subcommittee. This is the first time that I have known anything about what this service was other than to supply men to the Shipping Board in the different capacities to make up a crew.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; and the Shipping Board operators and the ship captains were required to take the seamen sent to them by this sea service bureau. If this is abolished the operators and the captains of the ships will employ their seamen upon their own judgment, just as the officials of all of the private shipping concerns do now, and have always done.

Mr. CULLEN. Where are they going to get those men?

Mr. DAVIS. There is no difficulty about getting them at all, and besides you can not train seamen in an office or on land. They have got to start in as boys and work up by actual experience. That is the way the other nations of the world have built up their sea personnel, and it is the way that we will have to do it in the long run, and as I say it was never established to begin with upon any basis or excuse except as a war emergency, just like we had to create many other emergency organizations during the war.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The sea service bureau of the United States Shipping Board does not attempt to train seamen in the office or anywhere else. It is the agency of the Shipping Board through which the crews that operate the ships belonging to the United States Government, operated under the Shipping Board by managing operators, are manned. If each operator were to select his own crew, he would have knowledge only of those who have previously sailed on his ships, and it would be a hit-or-miss recruiting along West Street, and a signing up and getting of crews of which they knew nothing. The ship is responsible for its crew, and it is responsible for workmen's compensation if they are disabled.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Does this apply to officers as well as crew?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think it is crew, because the officers are commissioned. The sea service bureau throughout the year is supplying crews to all the managing operators throughout the United States Shipping Board service, gradually acquiring a roster of thousands of names, and keeps tab on these men to a certain extent. They know the trouble makers; they know the chronic deserters; they know the pretenders of being A B's when they do not know anything about a ship, and they gradually eliminate from the crews of the Shipping Board those who do damage to property or incur expenditure to the board by reason of damage to themselves because of their inexperience and negligence. The sea service bureau maintains a medical examination and a person who is sure to be a liability by reason of the responsibility of the ship in case of disability is not accepted. Managing operators can not maintain any such medical supervision of their recruits. That service alone very largely compensates for the cost of maintaining the service. I think that the Shipping Board would have curtailed or restricted or abolished the service if it was not rendering good returns. The managing operators, as far as I know, are very well satisfied, and are getting better crews than they could recruit themselves. We have reduced very largely the cost by reason of injuries to sailors or disabilities incurred by reason of their physical unfitness at the time of their enlistment. I do not think it is wise here, with no knowledge of the subject, and with simply a few statements read at random out of the hearings held four years ago, when this service was comparatively new, and had not developed to the point at which it is carried on at the present time, to absolutely abolish it. I think it is unwise to do that. I think that if there is any question about the value of this service that the legislative committee ought to look into it, and if it is not paying its way in value of service rendered we can abolish it or at some future time the appropriations for its maintenance may be curtailed.

But I think, sight unseen, to abolish a valuable service which has been functioning as long as we have had the Shipping Board would be very unwise and an inadvisable thing to do.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is the legislative committee now looking into this problem?

Mr. LEHLBACH. We look into them as they are brought to our attention. This is the first time in my life that I have ever heard a word of criticism of the sea service bureau, and I have been a member of the Merchant Marine Committee for 10 years.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the following title:

H. R. 9022. An act to authorize the town of Alderson, W. Va., to maintain a public highway upon the premises occupied by the Federal Industrial Institution for Women at Alderson, W. Va.

The committee resumed its session.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1929

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] suggested, I happened to be one of the select committee on the part of the House to give very extensive consideration to all these questions affecting our merchant marine, and, as has been indicated by the gentleman from Tennessee, when we were engaged in that service we had occasion to examine very carefully into the operation of this sea service bureau as run by the Shipping Board. From my observation and study of that question and from the information that I have received upon it since the discharge of that committee, I think we are agreed with the conclusion reached by Judge DAVIS that the amendment he offers ought to prevail. It ought to appeal to the committee primarily from the standpoint of an absolute saving to the Treasury of a large sum of money. From $200,000 to $300,000 a year is being paid out of the Shipping Board fund appropriation for this service bureau. It is being paid for a service that, under existing law, is absolute duplication. The United States shipping commissioners, who have representatives in all the ports, are now invested by law with authority to assist captains of vessels in getting competent men for their sea service. We ought to do one of two things—either approve that jurisdiction or else adopt this amendment and abolish the United States seamen's bureau now existing in the Shipping Board.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. In this connection I call attention to the fact that there is a specific legislative act establishing the shipping commissioners to perform this service, but there is not one word in any legislative law providing for the establishment or even mentioning the sea-service bureau.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In other words, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] has said, under the emergencies of the war the Shipping Board was hard put to provide enlistments of seamen, and this bureau was established strictly as a war emergency proposition for the purpose of enlisting the proper personnel to man our ships. Now that function is exhausted. There is no necessity for it and it is an absolute duplication of expense. Why is it that operators of private vessels under the flag do not use the service of this bureau? No doubt it is because they have found that the old method of going to the United States shipping commissioners and taking their own judgment as to the selection of their own men is the best possible method of selection. There is opposition to this bureau from men who are engaged in promoting the welfare of the seamen of the United States. I do not know whether you care to enter into a discussion of that phase of the matter, but the American Federation of Labor, as a fact, in their last national convention passed a resolution on this particular problem, asking the Congress of the United States to abolish this bureau, because it was performing no good service to the American merchant marine and was, in fact, standing in the way of building up in America a desire for real sea service on the part of men desiring to engage in it. For these reasons, gentleman, after trespassing on your time, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will prevail. I hope you will vote for it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why has not this matter been brought before the legislative committee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Because the legislative committee has never provided for this service. It is merely an institution developed by the Shipping Board, and not in response to any substantive law enacted by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It can be discontinued without legislation, can it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It can be discontinued by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Does not the gentleman believe it should be investigated by the legislative committee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I will say that rather extensive hearings were had upon it by the subcommittee.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of too much importance to be determined without more consideration than we have had here. We are having all sorts of accidents on the sea, and I am not ready to take the responsibility. Perhaps there are other gentlemen here who would take the responsibility of doing something rashly that we might hereafter regret doing. There will be plenty of opportunity for the facts of this case to be developed. This measure, when it passes this House, will go to the Senate, and if there is no authority of law for it, as the gentleman seems to think, it can be developed there, and the fact as to whether this is or is not a good agency can be developed there, and the matter can be taken up in order. I move that the debate now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the debate do now close.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman from Texas has been very good to-day, and I will withhold my motion.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I never have believed in passing the buck or shifting my own responsibility. The responsibility of either keeping up or abolishing this instrumentality of the Government that costs $400,000 a year devolves first upon the House of Representatives. If it is an improper instrumentality, if it is useless, if it is nonserviceable, if it is not worth the money to the taxpayers it is our duty to stop it ourselves and not depend on the Senate to do it for us.

I have been here 11 years, and I have been watching the rapid increase of useless Government bureaus and commissions and independent establishments of the Government. When you once create them and put them on the pay roll there is no chance on earth of getting them off. They have always had enough personal friends in Congress to speak in their behalf and delay action.

When I first came here one of the most valuable men in this House was the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. There was not a man here then who watched the appropriations more closely than he did. He was watchful then of the people's interests. But now, since he has become chairman of a big subcommittee of the big Committee on Appropriations, he has become a little careless; he, too, has his personal friends to protect; he is looking out for their interests, and he is not so enthusiastic about the public Treasury and the taxes that are put upon the shoulders of the already overburdened people of the land.

I think that the Davis amendment is a good one to stop it, which we will do if we refuse to appropriate this money. I think the position of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] and the like position of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is unanswerable, and if we ought to stop it now, we ought not to send it over to the Senate and expect it to do something that we ought to do here ourselves. You are not going to have the Senate stop any extravagance. You are not going to have the Senate stop any waste. What does the Senate care about waste or extravagance? Why, they are adding to these appropriation bills instead of cutting from them, and if we want to stop it this is the time to stop it and the place to stop it and the opportunity to do it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield first to my distinguished friend from Maryland, the distinguished House leader of the wets. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. I congratulate the gentleman from Texas on his running for the Senate as the exponent of the drys. I think the gentleman will not have any trouble either from the drys or the wets.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentlemen who are behind the gentleman from Maryland are not backing him up in what he is doing here or he would have more success.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman a real question.

Mr. BLANTON. I am now talking about saving $400,000 for the people of the United States who pay the taxes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] suggests that we leave it in the bill. I say if it is not necessary, cut it out. Why not cut it out here?

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what I say. For once we seem to be in accord. Will the leader of the wets vote to cut it out?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman can get his wet friends to follow him it would be well to have them follow him on this occasion, although they do not usually follow any one leader.

Mr. LINTHICUM. If I vote for it, will the gentleman vote for light wines and beer? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. No; I will not; I will not vote to debauch the Constitution of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I have watched the work and career of the distinguished chairman of this subcommittee in the House of Representatives for nine years, two years less than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] who has just taken his seat. I want to say to him and to the country that there is no justification, in my opinion, for the charge, even though it was spoken somewhat in a jest, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has at all diminished his labors, his enthusiasm, and his influence in this House in the work of economizing the expenditures of this Government. The remarks which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has just made, doubtless without much premeditation, would lead one to infer that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has changed his attitude since he became chairman of this subcommittee. I say that is not so. There is not a man in the House who has shown greater solicitude for the economical management of this Government than has the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. I rose to say that first.

Secondly, I think the Members of this House ought to consider seriously whether, upon the consideration of an appropriation bill, we should adopt an amendment which will entirely revolutionize the method by which the Shipping Board has been conducting a very important part of its business. Let us not forget that the United States Shipping Board operates ships which travel throughout the world; that they are not in the ordinary sense a steamship line or a steamship organization, and that they do not have the opportunities for organization and management that have the private lines. We provide them with the methods, the means, and the facilities by which they must conduct the business that is intrusted to them. Here is a proposition which at one fell swoop, after a debate of 30 minutes, would take away from them an important service which has been developed in the Shipping Board during all these years and has been the means by which they have secured that very important part of the complement of their ships. The crews who operate the ships and who are responsible for the safety of the vessels, for the lives of the passengers, and for the protection of the property that is carried as cargo.

Here we propose, after a discussion of a few minutes, to deprive the Shipping Board of an important organization which has been established during long experience simply because a motion is made that no part of the appropriation shall be expended for that purpose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the subcommittee itself, as shown by the hearings, made a rather exhaustive examination into this subject?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the subcommittee makes no recommendation upon the subject.

Mr. WOOD. If the gentleman will permit, I will state that there was no recommendation made by the Shipping Board and no evidence at all adduced from the Shipping Board, but the gentleman who is in favor of abolishing this business testified at some considerable length just as we were closing the hearings.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is no recommendation from the Shipping Board, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and this subject has not been considered by the legislative committee. For four years I was myself a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and served with the distinguished gentleman from Alabama. That committee has a splendid membership and that committee is willing and anxious to consider legislation relating to the operations of the Shipping Board.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will include the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee. It was my pleasure to serve with him on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and does not the gentleman think it is a little precipitous to come here at this moment and ask for the abolishment of this service, which has been in operation all these years?

Mr. DAVIS. No; I certainly do not. If it did not involve some jobs there would not have been 10 minutes' discussion. We pass over a $10,000,000 proposition almost without discussion, but when it comes to saving $300,000 or $400,000 through the abolishment of some jobs, of course, gentlemen are aroused.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is no question. The gentleman has not asked me a question.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to ask the gentleman this question: The gentleman knows, when he refers to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, that that committee has never reported any legislation and Congress has never enacted any law authorizing the establishment of a sea service bureau, so that there is no occasion for the repeal of anything that has not been authorized.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, the law does not go into detail as to how the Shipping Board shall operate its business, but everyone will concede that there must be some method by which the crews and the men who are working on the ships must be secured.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], that this does concern jobs; it concerns every single man who works on these ships, and it concerns every member of the crews that work upon these ships. This service has been established during all these years and has succeeded in an admirable manner, at least in the opinion of the Shipping Board, and at one fell swoop to throw the selection of those men elsewhere is wrong. You are not telling them where, nor are you telling them how these crews shall be selected. You are simply asking that this organization, which has operated effectively and efficiently during all these years, shall be abolished by refusing to appropriate for this work during the next year. You are not abolishing this service, but you are simply refusing to appropriate for one year; and you are leaving the Shipping Board in the air for the year beginning July 1, in the matter of selecting the crews for its ships.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIS) there were—ayes 44, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McDUFFIE: Page 36, line 20, after the word "commission," insert "For the reconditioning of the steamships Mount Vernon and Monticello, at a cost of $12,000,000."

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regretted to see the chairman of the subcommittee fail to make any move to take care of this item in the bill when a point of order was sustained against it.

I think the chairman of the subcommittee, as well as the subcommittee and the entire Committee on Appropriations, would like to see these two great liners put into service. Why? Because it is said it would cost, in the first place, $25,000,000 to build ships to take their places in the trans-Atlantic trade. We can now get this work done for $12,000,000, and while the language of the bill proposes to take this money out of the construction and loan fund and use it, after all it is simply taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another. It is, after all, the funds of the Treasury.

I want to see what this Congress thinks about the proposition of putting these two ships in the trans-Atlantic trade.

The chairman will recall that the evidence before his committee proved conclusively that these two hulls were in splendid condition, one boat a little better than the other, and that we can use them for 10 or 20 years and that they would balance our trans-Atlantic fleet and would make the fleet more salable.

This is the testimony before the committee and the committee brought this item in with language attached to it which made it subject to a point of order, beyond question. Now, since it has gone out on a point of order I hope the chairman will see fit to have this House appropriate money enough to let the work begin now. If they want to tie on the strings that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] would like to have in such an appropriation, let the legislative committee get busy and enact such provision; but we can get this construction under way, and the evidence showed that if we will prepare these boats now, we can get some of the summer trade for the year 1929 and we will balance our fleet and will make more money on this service than we have made in the past, and it is the one service operated by the Shipping Board that is making money.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Does the gentleman think it worth while, really, to recondition these old, second-hand German ships unless we are prepared to go a step further and provide for new construction so that the American flag will fly on American ships on this North Atlantic lane?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I have not investigated these ships. I am not an expert on ship hulls, but I know a telegram came to every Member of this House urging against the reconditioning of these two ships; that telegram came from some concern, probably the International Mercantile Marine, I do not now recall the name, that is operating foreign boats and evidently does not want this Congress to put two more ships into the trans-Atlantic service. Has the gentleman ever thought of that?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I will say to the gentleman that is not my point at all. It may be a good thing to recondition these ships, but that is merely a temporary matter. We ought to go further and provide for the construction of new ships for this line.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It is time, if you please, to take advantage of this situation and do something, even if it is temporary, rather than say to the world, "We are abandoning the idea of keeping up this trans-Atlantic line."

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I will say to the gentleman it is furthest from my idea that we should abandon this line. I think there should never be a day when we do not have a first-class passenger and freight liner in this lane under the American flag.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Then the gentleman agrees with me that we should have a first-class trans-Atlantic line.

I submit to the chairman the merits of this amendment; I submit them to the committee, and I do not know what you will do with this amendment, but I want this committee to go on record. I want to know whether you are going to respond to the wishes of the people of the country in an effort to build up this service across the Atlantic Ocean or are you going to let this matter lag along much to the delight of the chief competitors of the ships under the American flag?

Mr. CULLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULLEN. I think I can answer the question of the Member from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT]. The American Board of Engineers and Surveys inspected the hull of both of these vessels and reported back that they were in first-class condition, and that the life tenure, under ordinary circumstances, of both vessels would be 10 years.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I will say to the gentleman in my judgment this is only temporizing with this important proposition. The time has come when we should face the issue of whether we are going to have a first-class line in the North Atlantic lane and not stop with reconditioning two old German ships.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I agree with the gentleman, but we have no legislation to that effect before us now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am sorry to detain the committee and I do not want to burden you, but the evidence shows that experts, not the gentleman from New York or myself, have visited these boats and say they are in good condition.

I want to call your attention to the fact it will cost $25,000,000 to build the same ships in this country now, whereas we can recondition these ships for $12,000,000.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky and Mr. WAINRIGHT rose.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky first, sir.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I would like to insert the statement that charging 4½ per cent interest on the total amount invested for reconditioning and fully amortizing this cost, you have a net profit of $400,000 per annum if these boats are put into this trade. There is $1,348,000 of Uncle Sam's money waiting to come to these boats for carrying the mail, and as a business proposition it is a good one.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Are we going to respond to a telegram from some great concern, doubtless a concern that would like to see our flag get off of the seas entirely, and fail to recondition the two ships, or are we going to say we will spend the $12,000,000 so as to balance the trans-Atlantic fleet, which will make the fleet more serviceable and salable than before? Will not the Congress respond to the wishes of those who are trying to build up the merchant marine? Let us spend the $12,000,000 for the trans-Atlantic fleet, so that it will continue to make more money and be more salable in the long run.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Does not the gentleman think it is humiliating that this one line we have got shall consist of six old German boats that came to us by conquest, that cost us nothing, rather than starting the shipyards and building the best vessels that can be built for that line?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. In expending appropriations or portions of appropriations contained in this act for the payment for personal services in the District of Columbia, in accordance with the classification act of 1923, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, and in grades in which only one position is allocated the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade, but not more often than once in any fiscal year, and then only to the next higher rate: Provided, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service; or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act; (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade in the same or a different bureau, office, or other appropriation unit; or (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by the classification act of 1923 and is specifically authorized by other law.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the subcommittee, if there is any appropriation in the present bill for the Veterans' Bureau that will consolidate the veterans' hospitals in the South and East and abolish the hospital at Lake City, Fla.?

Mr. WOOD. There is nothing in the language of the bill that would affect that matter. That is a matter for the management of the Veterans' Bureau. They are going through a process of consolidation of hospitals now. I do not know what hospitals in the South or anywhere else that they propose to consolidate, but it is the purpose to consolidate them and reduce them when and where practicable.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment. On page 82, line 21, add the words "nothing in this act shall authorize the discontinuance of veterans' hospitals."

Mr. WOOD. To that, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and clearly out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 42, in line 21, strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following words: "Nor in expending such appropriation shall any part thereof be available for purchasing bituminous coal for use within the District of Columbia unless the President shall first declare that an emergency exists which prevents the obtaining or use of other coal."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FORT. It seems to me it is a limitation on the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the McDuffie amendment, increasing the Shipping Board appropriation from $12,000,000 to $13,400,000.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, in line 15, strike out the figures "$12,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$13,400,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McDUFFIE) there were—ayes 40, noes 49.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is evident that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 214, nays 118, answered "present" 1, not voting 100, as follows:

[Roll No. 16]

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR TO-MORROW

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] to preside at the opening of the House to-morrow.

ADDRESS OF HON. RALPH F. LOZIER

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting copy of a speech made by my colleague, Mr. LOZIER, of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the matter indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to include the following address of Hon. RALPH F. LOZIER, of Missouri, delivered Saturday, January 7, 1928, at the thirty-sixth annual Jackson Day banquet, of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Williamsport, Pa.

It is indeed a privilege to address this large and intelligent audience, representative of the highest ideals and best citizenship of the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. While Pennsylvania has formed the chronic habit of "going Republican" by tremendous majorities, the militant and progressive Democrats of the Middle West have not forgotten that the Pennsylvania Democracy has maintained a compact and cohesive organization under the most unfavorable and discouraging conditions, and within the boundaries of the Keystone State approximately 600,000 Democrats have not bowed the knee to the god of special privilege or offered incense at pagan political altars.

I count myself happy to speak to this magnificent gathering of Pennsylvania Democrats, typical of those who, in season and out of season, steadfastly adhere to the principles and policies of Jefferson and Jackson, unawed by overwhelming Republican majorities, unbribed by enormous Republican slush funds, uninfluenced by the virus of special privilege, and uncorrupted by the spoils of public office.

The sincerity of your political convictions can not be questioned, because for many years you have "carried on" the battles of Democracy in spite of the discouraging fact that your party is in a hopeless minority. You are Democrats from principle and not from expediency. Although greatly outnumbered, you nevertheless believe that the principles and policies of the Democratic Party will best promote the welfare and prosperity of the masses, and because you do not believe that the Federal Government should grant unlimited bounty to a few favored classes and deny the same consideration to other vocational groups.

In this connection I call to mind the fact that in the person of Judge Jeremiah S. Black, Pennsylvania furnished the Nation a Democratic Attorney General who for legal ability and erudition had no superior among those who served in that exalted position. For a considerable part of our national history Pennsylvania was the bulwark of the Democratic Party, and if I can read aright the signs of the times, I believe the people of Pennsylvania will ultimately turn from the altars of Baal and give wholehearted allegiance to the Democratic Party, which is the party of the common people and the party committed to the doctrine of equality of opportunity for all men and all vocational groups and for equal rights to all and special privileges to none.

I have no illusions as to the immediate return of Pennsylvania to the Democratic ranks, but among the voters of Pennsylvania there is a very strong progressive element that frequently asserts its power and sanctions progressive reforms. Twice the voters of Pennsylvania elected Robert E. Pattison, a Democrat, governor of this Commonwealth. In 1912 the progressive element in the Republican Party carried Pennsylvania by an overwhelming majority. In the 1926 senatorial election William B. Wilson, a progressive Democrat, carried 57 of the 67 counties in Pennsylvania. Wilson's majority over VARE, outside of Philadelphia, was 59,422. The Vare machine in Philadelphia rolled up a majority in that city of 232,929 for VARE. But it is very significant that the voters of Pennsylvania outside of Philadelphia gave Mr. Wilson a majority of 59,422. Undoubtedly the political pendulum in Pennsylvania is swinging away from the doctrine of greed, graft, and slush, and within the next decade it is not unreasonable to expect a disintegration of the present corrupt Pennsylvania political machine and a realignment of the political forces in Pennsylvania which will more evenly balance the political parties in your great Commonwealth. In so far as I am able, I want this evening to deliver a message that will stimulate your faith in and devotion to Democratic principles and policies.

THE REIGN OF PRIVILEGE

One of the outstanding issues before the American people is the substantial limitation of governmental favoritism. The greedy lords of special privilege are taking no thought for the morrow. Having ruthlessly seized the executive and legislative departments of our Government, they arrogantly control the economic activities of the Nation. They dictate the enactment of discriminatory legislation to unreasonably increase their already excessive and artificially stimulated profits and unconscionably augment their unearned bounties. Their unsympathetic manipulation of commodity markets has brought the small tradesmen, shopkeepers, and agrarian population dangerously close to bankruptcy. They have strangled legitimate competition, and under the shelter of gigantic monopolies, made possible and inevitable by class legislation, they reap where they have not sown and gather where they have not strawed. They have voraciously appropriated practically all of the immense stock of new national wealth that has come to the American people in the last two decades.

On the tacit invitation of President Coolidge and his mercenary satellites, a few favored groups have practically taken possession of our institutions and exploited them for their own sinister and selfish purposes and profit. In violation of ethical principles and well-established business practices they have wrongfully circumscribed the activities of other vocational groups, withheld from them the legitimate fruits of their labors, and denied them equality of opportunity in the race for gain. The present national administration formed an open alliance with big business and is operating under a bilateral covenant with special privilege, the reciprocal obligations of which are quite definite and well understood by the contracting parties. This has resulted in a commercialized, ignoble, and sordid administration of our public affairs. National ideals have seldom fallen to a lower level. Social justice has been denied the masses and the cries of a great vocational group, neglected and discriminated against, have gone unheeded and unhushed. Enjoying the fruits of business methods and legislation manifestly inequitable, they have, with supreme indifference, ignored all petitions for a redress of economic wrongs, unawed by public scandal, and unmoved by appeals from the common people for a "square deal."

Many grave abuses of this character have grown up under the present national Republican administration that has not only tolerated but openly encouraged and promoted these inequitable conditions, and used its every influence to accentuate class distinction and strengthen the citadel of special privilege. It is the mission, duty, and purpose of the Democratic Party to correct this maladministration of public affairs and restore a proper balance between the several great basic industries, to the end that each may share equitably in our national wealth and prosperity, and that no one industry may enjoy excessive and unconscionable profits at the expense of any other industry.

The connection between the Coolidge administration and big business is as intimate and as well defined as that which united Eng and Chang, the Siamese twins. The predatory interests, intoxicated by their mastery of the forces that control our national life, not satisfied with enormous profits, dominated by limitless greed for greater and greater gains, while seemingly sitting squarely and securely in the saddle, are nevertheless recklessly riding, booted and spurred, to disaster. Reason and human experience should suggest to them that a stern reckoning is inevitable, a day of judgment close at hand, and that this wholesale debauchery of the American electorate, this shameless corruption of voters, this purchase and sale of seats in the United States Senate, this debasement of national ideals, this sacrifice of principle to expediency, this onward march of bureaucracy, this domination of State and national administrations by a selfish and self-constituted governing group, this reign of party machines and corrupt political bosses, this surrender of governmental activities to predatory private agencies, this national disregard of social justice to the common people, this contemptuous indifference to the fundamental doctrine of equality of opportunity to each and every vocational group, this false economy, ding-dong, this poll-parrot chatter about efficiency, this incessant beating of discordant prosperity tom-toms, this wild economic delirium, this big business extravaganza, this special privilege phantasmagoria, this insatiable gluttony for graft, tainted fortunes, and embezzled power, this conscienceless exploitation of the many for the benefit of the favored few, can not continue forever. If they have read understandingly the history of our civilization, they should and must realize that they can not indefinitely continue to plunder and exploit a free people without inviting radical reaction, social unrest, civic disorder, and ultimate confusion and calamity.

The Coolidge big-business administration has done more to widen the gulf between the prosperous and nonprosperous, intensify class hatreds, and create an aristocracy of wealth than any preceding administration, because it has avowedly made dollars—sometimes dirty dollars—the standard or yardstick by which governmental policies and national ideals are to be measured. There is less justification for an aristocracy of wealth and special privilege than a political or social aristocracy, and ultimately all aristocracies are doomed to destruction. According to that wise old Frenchman, Chateaubriand, every aristocracy has three ages: "It is founded in its age of violence, it degenerates into its age of privilege, and in its age of vanity it is extinguished." In the United States those who by the grace of the Republican Party constitute the aristocracy of special privilege are, like Louis XV, saying, "Let the good machine run itself; it will last our time; after us the deluge." These beneficiaries of governmental favoritism in the United States realize this era of graft, greed, and special privilege will end, but they think it will last their lifetime, and what care they for the catastrophe and deluge of economic woe that will surely come after they have gone to that region where they will no longer enjoy special privileges.

The few groups who have been excessively favored by our Government are carrying their demands entirely too far and recklessly bending the bow of privilege dangerously near the breaking point. But the Coolidge, Mellon, Hoover forces proceed on the theory that they can by mechanical processes or artificial respiration keep alive the present brand of sectional, jug-handled, lopsided, make-believe prosperity beyond the 1928 presidential election, which they think will enable them to install a puppet of big business and special privilege in the White House for another period of four years, to their inexpressible delight and the exceedingly great profit of those who make merchandise of patriotism and avariciously plunder the public.

Before we can have economic stability, social justice, and nation-wide and enduring prosperity, the highly prosperous and much-favored industrial East must make reasonable and substantial concessions to the agricultural West. This will not in the long run work any hardships on the East or involve the surrender of any honestly acquired vested rights. No one section should monopolize our national wealth and prosperity. In all good conscience, a few favored groups should not be permitted to appropriate to themselves substantially all the new wealth that accrues annually to the American people.

The supreme purpose of all law is to establish social justice. The basic problem in all enlightened governments is an ethical problem, and when economic equality and social justice are secured for all citizens and vocational groups, the ultimate end of government has been accomplished. Our business, economic, and governmental policies should be so impartial, ethical, and equitable that they will not create on the one hand an oligarchy of wealth and privilege, and on the other hand produce a "sullen mass of rags and misery." The great gulf fixed between the ultra rich and the ultra poor can and should be bridged and narrowed by sound and just business policies and a more equitable distribution of the benefits and burdens of government.

By reason of its basic principles and past accomplishments in statecraft, the Democratic Party is best qualified to inaugurate and carry to a speedy consummation these much-needed reforms. On the other hand, the Republican Party, having created these intolerable conditions, and being the chief beneficiary of these abuses, is powerless to correct them, because it has neither the ability nor willingness to reverse its traditional attitude of favoritism toward those who use the instrumentalities of the law to serve their sinister and selfish purposes. Mr. Coolidge, though an honest man, is so completely under the overpowering enchantment of big business that it is absolutely impossible for him to free himself and his administration from its cynical control.

Those who are so unsophisticated as to expect him to correct these abuses are doomed to experience a rude awakening and bitter disappointment. Easier for the fox to forget his cunning, easier for the famished wolf to show mercy to the helpless lamb, and easier for the jungle leopard to change his spots than for the President to throw off the controlling influence of organized privilege. The President is such a devotee of the New England school of political thought that he honestly believes in the divine right of privilege, and no doubt thinks he is promoting the benevolent purposes of the Almighty in using the agencies of government to tax the many for the enrichment of the few.

To establish economic equality and social justice it is not necessary to "kick the fat into the fire," adopt drastic or revolutionary methods, confiscate or divide our national or private wealth, or apply such legislative or economic pressure as would unsettle business or destroy vested rights, for such measures would not produce the desired results. It is only necessary to hark back to fundamentals and apply the formula that all men are equal before the law and entitled to the same consideration, unhampered by legislative handicaps or unethical business practices. I am not an impractical idealist when I assert that the Golden Rule has a place in governmental activities and in the economic life of a righteous and progressive people.

The strength and glory of the Democratic Party lies in its opposition to and its contempt for policies that are essentially sectional, selfish, and fundamentally unethical and unjust. Like all other political parties the Democratic Party has made mistakes—sometimes blunders; but in its long and historic career of nearly a century and a half it has at no time lost its national character or departed far from the eternal principles of right and justice on which it is founded. It has never ceased to be the party of the people and the aggressive champion of the poor and lowly.

Whether in power or out of power, in victory or in defeat; whether enjoying the honors and discharging the responsibilities incident to success or suffering the disappointment and humiliation of the vanquished; whether on the high hills of public confidence and favor or in the dark valley and shadow of nation-wide disapproval—in all the vicissitudes of its long, unrivaled, and glorious history it has never for one time denied its faith in the principles and policies of its founders; never sold its birthright for a mess of special-privilege pottage; never abandoned its defense of the rights of the individual citizen from the unwarranted encroachments of the State; never exalted the rights of property above human rights; never cast down the goddess of liberty or enthroned in her stead the tainted dollar; never sanctioned the pernicious doctrine that certain favored classes are of right entitled to governmental bounties; never sold its organization or soul to mammon or the predatory interests that prey on the public; and never recognized wrongfully acquired fortunes as the standard by which character, citizenship, individual success, and national progress must be measured.

A party that has held firmly to these lofty ideals, exalted principles, traditional purposes, and wholesome policies, though it makes mistakes and commits blunders, has nevertheless performed a worthwhile service that should command the respect of mankind, even if we forget the glorious contribution in the way of constructive statesmanship made in its long and illustrious career.

I am a Jeffersonian Democrat because I devoutly believe in the wisdom, justice, and all sufficiency of the principles and policies formulated by Thomas Jefferson and given by him as a priceless heritage to the American people. I am convinced that the Jeffersonian formulas, when accurately interpreted and intelligently applied, will afford a correct solution of every governmental problem that now confronts the American people, or that we may face in the future. The great truths he enunciated are age-lasting and peculiarly adapted to our scheme of government. They are not transitory or temporary but will function efficiently under all conditions and readily adjust themselves to every phase of our rapidly changing and complex civilization as long as we are a free people. This is because they are grounded in reason, justice, common sense, and sound public policy.

The genius of Mr. Jefferson for free government has no counterpart in all the annals of time. His devotion to human liberty, his advocacy of human rights, his relentless opposition to every form of tyranny over the body, mind, or conscience of man, his mastery of statecraft, his passionate defense of the rights of the individual citizen, his eloquent appeals for religious freedom, his ability to comprehend problems of government and furnish a formula for their proper solution, his farseeing vision and lofty patriotism—these and many other outstanding qualifications mark him as the seer of the ages, the sincerest friend and ablest champion of man, and the greatest builder of free institutions since the curtain went up on human history.

Thomas Jefferson planted and Andrew Jackson watered the tree of liberty and just government. Jefferson laid the foundation of our free institutions and reared thereon a Republic that safeguards the liberty of the body, mind, and conscience of its citizens, insuring them the blessings of civil and religious liberty and the peaceful enjoyment of the just rewards of their labor. Jackson buttressed and tremendously strengthened the temple of freedom and wisely applied the Jeffersonian formula of government. Jefferson formulated and established the most wholesome and beneficent system of laws the world has ever known. Jackson was probably the most successful administrator of the Jeffersonian theory of government. They were laborers together for the good of humanity. Other foundation can no man lay than was laid by Thomas Jefferson. His work abides. His principles underlie, permeate, and vitalize our free institutions.

In harmony with the political philosophy of Thomas Jefferson, the Democratic Party makes no war on wealth or property. It only demands that it be honestly acquired and lawfully employed. Democracy does not seek the destruction of big business, but would have its operations conducted along proper lines that would not result in the destruction of legitimate competition. Democracy would curb the wrongful activities of big business, prevent its arbitrary control and manipulation of commodity markets, gradually curtail its special privileges, and forbid its exploitation of the people and their natural resources.

I do not begrudge to the industrial, commercial, financial, and transportation classes the phenomenal prosperity with which they have been deluged in recent years, except in so far as such prosperity is the direct result of unreasonable privilege, unwarranted governmental favoritism, or unethical business practices, but I do assert that this so-called prosperity can not long continue unless a reasonable degree of prosperity comes to the 30,000,000 people in America who depend, either directly or indirectly, on agriculture for a livelihood.

Mr. Lincoln, in one of his debates with Judge Douglas, said: "This Government can not endure permanently half slave and half free." May I paraphrase this truism and say: This Government can not endure permanently half prosperous and half bankrupt; half pampered and petted and half hungry and homeless; half revelling in luxury and half pinched by penury; half enjoying the rich fruits of privilege and half staggering under an unbearable burden of economic and legislative handicaps.

Wisdom and prudence suggest that we return to the old paths and landmarks of our constitutional fathers and reestablish the wholesome but now discarded doctrine of equal rights to all, special privilege to none. By continuing present policies we are sowing dragon's teeth and inviting ultimate disaster at no distant date.

Agriculture is the greatest of all basic industries, on the prosperity of which the welfare of all other occupations depends. Its financial distress must inevitably be reflected in reduced profits in all other branches of business. The agrarian population, handicapped by the arbitrary manipulation of economic laws, bled white by discriminatory legislation, and beset on every hand by the cross currents and rip tides of special privilege, languishes as it helplessly drifts toward the rock of insolvency.

It will not do to say that no legislative relief is possible and that the farmer must solve his own problems. Our Federal lawmakers managed, without much effort, to find legislative methods to stabilize manufacturing, banking, transportation, organized labor, and big business, advance the prices of their commodities and substantially increase their profits. With the same interest, industry, and intelligent effort, Congress and the President can find a formula that will bring to agriculture the same stability and improved conditions that legislation has brought to these other great basic industries. The reason Congress and the President have not found a solution for the agricultural problem is because they have not approached it from a sincere and sympathetic standpoint, and because the beneficiaries of similar legislation are unwilling for Congress to grant to agriculture the same governmental consideration and favors they now enjoy.

My observations lead me to the conclusion that this is rapidly becoming a government of the masses, by the classes and for the classes. The great bulk of our population has but little participation in the activities that control our economic system or shape our national life. Year by year the governing groups tighten their strangle hold on the masses. "The self-torturing sophist, wild Rousseau, the apostle of affliction, he who threw enchantment over passion, and from woe wrung overwhelming eloquence,"—Rousseau, the morning star of political freedom, gave expression to a great truth when he said: "Man was born free, but he is now everywhere in chains." While his philosophy wrought a political revolution and modified the structure of every civilized government on the globe, it has not yet established economic equality or social justice. The outstanding need of the world to-day is a modern Jean Jacques Rousseau, who will preach and establish an era of social justice, and bring economic freedom to the common people; an apostle of the "square deal" to all vocational groups; a champion of the exploited proletariat in their revolt against intrenched privilege.

We need a new birth of freedom, an awakening of the long-sleeping public conscience, and an elimination of corruption and graft in departments, bureaus, commissions, and all branches of government. I plead for a healthy and militant public sentiment against the selfish and sordid ideals that dominate our economic system and poison the fountains of our national life.

The dollar is worth while, but its acquisition is not the supreme purpose of human existence nor is it the correct measure of character, individual success, or national progress. In the language of John Ruskin: "No nation can last—above all, a nation can not exist as a money-making mob; it can not with impunity, it can not with existence, go on despising art, despising nature, despising compassion, and concentrating its soul on pence" or dollars. This quotation is from Sesame and Lilies. How forceful and apropos. I am wondering if we will ever appreciate its truth or heed its admonition. Are we not very rapidly approaching the point where we as a people are concentrating our souls on the dollar? Are we not rapidly becoming a money-making mob, despising the nobler and finer things of life? May I venture the suggestion that a people, prosperous and wealthy beyond the dreams of avarice, may be spiritually bankrupt?

As a loyal American and lover of my country I protest against the President's servile submission and surrender to the dictation of the predatory financial, commercial, and industrial overlords, the ultimate effect of which will be to transform the American dollar into a national god. The traditional principles that gave life and virility to our free institutions are being forgotten in our mad race for swollen fortunes and in our worship of wealth and power. The present administration is essentially sordid, in that, seemingly, its supreme purpose is to exalt the dollar above principle, extend the doctrine of class legislation to extreme limits, enrich the favored few at the expense of the many, and give the oligarchy of privilege a strangle hold on our institutions, that can only be broken by a revolution.

When the record of the Coolidge administration is written in after years by impartial historians it will be accorded the unenviable distinction of having pandered more supinely than any other administration to the selfish, sordid, and predatory interests of the Nation.

In this age of great measures and little men; in these times of "little brown handbags" and "little green houses"; when seats in the United States Senate are practically sold at public auction, the American electorate scandalously debauched, and great blocs of voters shamelessly corrupted; when cynical and selfish groups select and control State executives and State legislatures; when predatory interests arrogantly dictate to Congress and the executive department; when Cabinet officers betray their trusts and,

"Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning";

in this orgy of extravagance and graft, when the baneful and sinister shadow of corruption falls athwart the swivel chairs of venal Cabinet officers and obsequious bureau chiefs; in this saturnalia of governmental favoritism and economic inequality; in this reign of mammon, when the departments of government have become the clearing house of big business and special privilege; when the industrial lords and malefactors of great wealth stable their special-privilege ponies in the corridors of the Nation's Capitol; and when our time-honored national ideals have been cast into discard, the American people should awaken from their lethargy, return to the principles and policies of Jefferson, dethrone the arrogant oligarchy of privilege, and reassert the rights of all men and all vocational groups to equal consideration, equal protection, and equal favors under the law.

At the Battle of Ivry, Henry of Navarre inspired his followers with dauntless courage and unsurpassed heroism that earned a glorious victory by calling on them to follow his white plume in the thick of battle. The future of the Democratic Party is full of hope if we steadfastly rededicate ourselves to its righteous policies and unfalteringly follow its banner on which are emblazoned the wholesome principles enunciated by Thomas Jefferson, the founder of our party and the father of constitutional liberty in America.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, on to-morrow Calendar Wednesday business will be in order, with the Committee on the Judiciary on call. The next appropriation bill will not be ready to go on with on Thursday. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on Thursday next to consider the Consent Calendar, without suspensions, and bills on the Private Calendar not objected to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that it shall be in order on next Thursday to consider bills on the Consent Calendar, but not suspensions, and bills on the Private Calendar not objected to. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut if it is contemplated that next Monday will be devoted to the regular business of the House, or will that also be a Consent Calendar day?

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Heavenly Father, whose gift is length of days, help us to make the noblest use of all our powers in our advancing years. According to our strength apportion Thou our work. Grant to the nations of the world new ties of friendship made ever more secure by the quickening impulse of Thy love stirring in the hearts of men. Remember all who by reason of weakness are overtasked, or because of poverty are forgotten, and let the sorrowful sighing of the suffering come before Thee, for the sake of Him who loved us and gave Himself for us, Thy Son our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

Mr. PINE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 9136, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 55, line 2, strike out the figures "$1,390,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,440,000."
On page 57, line 5, after the figures "$20,000," insert "Claremore Hospital, Okla., $50,000, on condition that not less than 5 acres of land shall be donated to the United States by the city of Claremore for hospital purposes."
On page 57, line 6, strike out the figures "$105,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$155,000."

PAINTING OF BATTLE OF FORT MOULTRIE

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.
The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 119), as follows:

Whereas there is hanging in the south corridor of the gallery floor of the United States Senate in the Capitol at Washington, D. C., a painting of the Battle of Fort Moultrie, which was painted in 1815 by John Blake White; and
Whereas from the position that it now occupies on the wall it is shown to great disadvantage on account of the reflection of the light as it is cast upon it from its place and position, making it almost impossible to obtain a clear view of it: Now therefore be it
Resolved, That the authorities in charge of the placing and location of paintings around the Capitol and within the Senate gallery be instructed to remove the said painting of the Battle of Fort Moultrie from its present location, and to put it in such position that it can be clearly seen and will be distinguishable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?
Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask that it may go over that I may have a talk with the Supervising Architect of the Capitol on the subject.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

RELATIONS WITH CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICAN COUNTRIES

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 120), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations is hereby authorized and directed to make a thorough investigation of the relations between the United States and the countries of Central and South America and the Caribbean.
That at the conclusion of the investigation the committee report its findings of fact to the Senate, together with recommendations of a constructive policy to be adopted by the United States in its relations with the countries aforesaid.

That the said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpœnas or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents; and to employ experts, and other assistants, and stenographers, at a cost of not exceeding $1.25 per printed page. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpœnas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee, or appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation, shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The committee is authorized to sit during the sessions or the recesses of the Senate and until otherwise ordered by the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 9481) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, there is much discussion in the press at this time touching the foreign policy of the United States. My attention has been drawn to an editorial in yesterday's Washington Post entitled "Not committed to war." I believe it gives a fair statement of our policy and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The editorial is as follows:

NOT COMMITTED TO WAR

Foreign Minister Briand's reply to Secretary Kellogg brings out the fact that the nations belonging to the League of Nations are bound to the principle of war as an instrument of policy. The American note, proposing that the principal nations agree to renounce all war, was calculated to bring out this admission and thus expose the hypocrisy of the plea that foreign powers are anxious to "outlaw" war, while the United States stands in their way.

The truth is that the United States is the only one of the great powers that is not committed to the principle of war as an instrument of national policy. All others have bound themselves to go to war in certain contingencies. Some of them have made military alliances in addition to the general commitment embodied in the covenant of the League of Nations.

Since the abrogation of the alliance with France, made before the adoption of the Constitution, the United States has never contracted an alliance with any nation or group of nations. By good fortune in 1919 it avoided making the general alliance for war purposes which is the pith and marrow of the League of Nations.

Theorists at Habana are now trying to develop a league or a system of alliances in this hemisphere to replace the Monroe doctrine. They stand no better chance of success than those who attempted to involve the United States in the League of Nations.

The United States is ready to extend the arbitration treaty with France. It will agree to arbitrate with any nation. Its policy is to arbitrate international differences that are susceptible of arbitration. It has always refused to arbitrate questions of independence, honor, or vital interest. It will not arbitrate the question of its right to exclude aliens, nor will it enter into any international agreement that might bring about a decision by the "World Court" or some other foreign tribunal, declaring that the United States is bound to arbitrate the immigration question.

In their haste some American negotiators have attempted to secure arbitration treaties that would compel the United States to submit vital questions to a foreign tribunal. The Senate has always refused to approve such treaties, and has wisely insisted that arbitration agreements on specific questions should be cast in the form of treaties to be submitted to its consideration.

M. Briand's note brings to a melancholy end his effort to draw the United States into a special agreement under which this country could not protect its rights as a neutral in case France should become involved in war and commit aggressions against American commerce. Such aggressions on the part of France were the cause of the rupture of the old treaty of alliance. The United States, under George Washington, marked out its course as a neutral and it will remain neutral while foreign powers are fighting unless they commit outrages upon it. In that case it will go to war, and it will not enter into any agreement not to go to war. In order to protect its neutral rights it must have a strong Navy. The Navy is to be strengthened accordingly. No horrified shrieks from pacifists, proclaiming that the United States has gone "war mad" when it strengthens its defenses, will deter Congress or the people from making the defenses strong.

Seeking peace, respecting others' rights, avoiding entanglements, and strong enough to maintain its rights, the United States is not dangerous to any nation that really desires peace.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION'S REPORT ON PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, the Federal Trade Commission recently submitted to the Senate a report on the prices of gasoline. That report covers an investigation of a year and a half. I ask unanimous consent that the report may be printed as a public document, and that all the schedules, and all the tables, and all the data in connection therewith be printed in full.

Mr. BINGHAM. Under Rule XXIX, all reports of that kind should first be referred to the Committee on Printing, whose duty it is to secure an estimate from the Public Printer as to the cost of the printing. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will change his request to conform to the rule. That is what has been done with the recent reports of the Federal Trade Commission and other commissions. The Committee on Printing is going to have a meeting in the very near future, so there will be no delay in the matter at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that the law requires before any action is taken that an estimate of the cost shall be obtained. I have no objection to the printing of the report, as the Senator desires, but I think the Senator from Connecticut is correct and that the report should first go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BINGHAM. Where is the report now, I will ask the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McMASTER. I understand it is before the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Manufactures may be discharged from the further consideration of the report of the Federal Trade Commission on the subject of gasoline prices, and that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DULUTH SHIP CANAL BRIDGE AT DULUTH, MINN.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1761) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Duluth, Minn., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Duluth Ship Canal.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments on page 1, line 6, after the word "at," to insert "or near"; on page 2, line 1, after the numerals "1902" to insert "in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters, approved March 23, 1906,'" and in line 11, after the word "prescribe," to strike out the comma and the following words: "and in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of Duluth, Minn., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Duluth Ship Canal, at or near the site of the existing suspended car transfer, or aerial ferry constructed under an act of Congress dated February 7, 1902, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters, approved March 23, 1906," and for that purpose to locate the towers and approaches of said structure on the lands of the United States pertaining to the said canal, as now occupied under a certain revocable license issued by the Secretary of War to the city of Duluth, Minn., under date of September 6, 1901, now on file in the War Department: Provided, That the city of Duluth, Minn., shall make any changes in the said structure, and any changes in the towers and approaches located on said lands of the United States, which the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. 5547) granting the consent of Congress to the city of St. Joseph, in the State of Missouri, or its assigns, to construct a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River between the States of Missouri and Kansas. It is a bill in which both the Senators from Missouri are especially interested.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TOMBIGBEE RIVER AT EPES, ALA.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 768) to authorize the Alabama Great Southern Railroad Co. to rebuild and reconstruct and to maintain and operate the existing railroad bridge across the Tombigbee River at Epes, in the State of Alabama. The bill was reported a few moments ago.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments: On page 1, line 3, before the word "is," to strike out "authority be, and" and insert "the consent of Congress"; in the same line, after the word "hereby," to strike out the comma; in line 6, after the word "operate," to strike out "the" and insert "its existing"; in the same line, after the word "bridge," to strike out "of the said company with the necessary piers, abutments"; in line 7, after the word "approaches," to insert "thereto"; and on page 2, line 3, after the name "Alabama," to strike out "all at points suitable to the interests of navigation: Provided, That such reconstruction shall be," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Alabama Great Southern Railroad Co., a corporation of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, to rebuild, reconstruct, maintain, and operate its existing bridge and approaches thereto across the Tombigbee River from Epes, in Sumter County, in the State of Alabama, to a point on the opposite bank of the said river in Greene County, in the State of Alabama, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Alabama Great Southern Railroad Co. to rebuild and reconstruct and to maintain and operate the existing railroad bridge across the Tombigbee River at Epes, in the State of Alabama."

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO THE SINKING OF THE SUBMARINE "S-4"

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I wish to be recognized when a resolution coming over from a preceding day shall be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further concurrent resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. 109), submitted by Mr. TRAMMELL January 12, 1928, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee composed of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is hereby authorized and created.

Resolved further, That it shall be the duty of the said committee to investigate the full facts of the sinking of the submarine S-4 in collision on December 17, 1927, with the United States Coast Guard destroyer Paulding off the Massachusetts coast, and the rescue and salvage operations carried on by the United States Navy subsequent thereto. All hearings before the committee shall be open to the public.

Resolved further, That to carry out and give effect to the provisions of this resolution, the committee hereby created shall have power to issue subpœnas, administer oaths, summon witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and receive testimony taken before any proper officer in any State or Territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the said committee shall immediately proceed with the said investigation, and not later than March 15, 1928, make its report to the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as I understand, Senate Resolution 109 is now before the Senate. The resolution went over on a previous occasion.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, does the resolution automatically come before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution automatically comes before the Senate, as it is a resolution coming over from a preceding day, it having been previously passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator that I hope he will not insist on having the resolution considered now. I announced yesterday that I was going to call up this morning House Joint Resolution 131, being Calendar No. 78.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to be heard on the resolution which has been laid before the Senate, and then I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I made the announcement yesterday that I would call up House Joint Resolution 131 immediately at the close of the morning business to-day.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator made the announcement that at the close of the morning business he would make a motion to take up the joint resolution to which he refers, but Senate Resolution 109 comes under the head of morning business.

Mr. HALE. The joint resolution to which I refer has been discussed here on the floor and it is now ready to be brought before the Senate again, and I hope the Senator will let us have action on it.

Mr. SWANSON. The joint resolution to which the Senator from Maine refers was discussed for a whole day, and then the Senator, because he had authority to do so, peremptorily withdrew it.

Mr. HALE. I explained my reasons for that action, which were perfectly proper and perfectly in order, as the Senator knows.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the purpose of Senate Resolution 109 is to create a committee of five Senators, to be named by the Vice President, to consider all the facts in connection with the sinking of the submarine S-4. During the debate on the House joint resolution presented by the Senator from Maine it developed that many Senators thought the Senate itself, without reference to the House of Representatives, should conduct an investigation into the sinking of the S-4. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] urged that that was the proper course for the Senate to pursue.

Senate Resolution 109, of course, is a simple resolution. It merely provides that the Vice President shall appoint a committee of five Senators to investigate the facts in connection with the sinking of the S-4. If we want a senatorial investigation, we ought to have an opportunity to express our opinion before we take up the joint resolution which is in charge of the Senator from Maine and which contemplates that the President of the United States shall appoint a commission of five members to conduct an investigation. If the Senate resolution shall be defeated, then the joint resolution may come up. If, however, the Senate should decide to conduct an investigation by a committee of five Senators named by the Vice President, then we will know exactly what amendments should be made to the joint resolution. In the interest of orderly procedure and in order to get the views, convictions, and judgment of the Senate on this question, it seems to me that Senate Resolution 109 ought to be voted on first. After that resolution shall have been disposed of, either favorably or unfavorably, I shall have no objection then to having the House joint resolution which is in charge of the Senator from Maine come before the Senate at any time he may see proper to bring it up.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, does the Senator want an investigation to determine whether an investigation shall take place?

Mr. SWANSON. My proposition is that if the Senate decides to investigate by a committee of Senators, there is no necessity for section 3 in the joint resolution. Therefore let us determine whether the Senate wants to conduct such an investigation. If the Senate wants such an investigation as is provided for in the joint resolution, then it can adopt that resolution which not only provides for an investigation of the sinking of the submarine S–4 under section 3, but provides for an investigation of improvements and appliances to promate the safety of operation of submarines. I think that such an investigation as that ought to be made; but I take the ground that the Senate itself or the House or a joint committee composed of Members of the two bodies ought to investigate the facts in connection with the sinking of the S–4 and not have that investigation made by a committee named by the President on the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MOSES. Of course, everyone knows that the Senate knows more about any subject than anybody else knows about it.

Mr. SWANSON. No; but the Senator from New Hampshire thinks a man ought to appoint a committee to try himself. That is where he and I differ.

Mr. MOSES. I do not understand that the President is involved in the sinking of the S–4.

Mr. SWANSON. But the Secretary of the Navy is, and the Secretary of the Navy has already asked certain gentlemen if they would serve on that committee.

Mr. MOSES. With what authority?

Mr. SWANSON. With the presumption that the President would name those whom he suggested.

Mr. HALE. He has not asked anybody to serve on that committee, as the Senator knows.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate longer. All I ask is to have the Senate itself determine whether it wants to investigate the sinking of the S–4 by a committee of Senators or to abdicate its privilege and its right and let a committee practically named by the Secretary of the Navy himself investigate that disaster.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to state further that I have been reading the testimony in connection with the inquiry being made into the sinking of the S–4; and it seems to me that the proceedings have resolved themselves into a debate between the Paulding of the Coast Guard and the Navy on behalf of the S–4 as to who was at fault.

That seems to be the issue as to that disaster; and yet here is a proposition to let the President or the Secretary of the Navy—who has already asked people to serve, including two retired naval officers—appoint a commission to determine who is at fault, the Coast Guard or the Navy.

Mr. MOSES. What abdication is involved here?

Mr. SWANSON. The abdication is that you refused to investigate these facts.

Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate longer. All I ask for is a recorded vote as to whether or not the Senate will investigate this S–4 disaster. If it says it will not, then I am willing for the Senator's proposition to come up, and we will determine further how the investigation shall be conducted.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator think it possible, in view of the number of Senators already engaged in other investigations, to find Senators sufficiently numerous and sufficiently free to constitute a committee to make this investigation?

Mr. SWANSON. I do. If Senators can not serve, they can decline. Tell me that out of 96 Senators you can not find 5 Senators who will honestly investigate a great calamity that has disturbed this country as much as any accident that has happened for years!

Mr. President, that is the simple question. It is not an intricate question. There is not much involved. All I ask is that this resolution be voted on, and let the Senate reach a conclusion on it. If the Senate decides that it has no desire to investigate this unfortunate affair, then we will take up the joint resolution of the Senator from Maine, and determine what kind of joint resolution shall be passed. If it decides to take up the joint resolution, it will be subject to amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I am through. I do not desire to filibuster against a vote on this resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia has made a very extraordinary statement, and he now declines to submit to a question.

Mr. SWANSON. Oh, I will answer the Senator's question. I thought he was going to make a speech. He usually does when he asks a question. He generally uses an interrogation to get an opportunity to make an address; but if the Senator is going to ask a question I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I accept the Senator's apology.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator generally speaks very well, too.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator said that the only point at issue was who was to blame—the Paulding or the S–4. Does the Senator really think that is all that is involved?

Mr. SWANSON. I think that is one of the important things, and as to whether the Navy has all the contrivances that are required for safety, whether our submarines ought to have this or have that. Let a committee be appointed to ascertain all the facts, how submarines should be improved, and so on; but I am unwilling, under a pretense of getting this information, to absorb all the power to investigate the cause of this unfortunate disaster.

Mr. BINGHAM. But does not the Senator realize that one of the things in which the public is interested, and which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] called attention to when he put that article into the RECORD yesterday, is as to whether the Navy did all that could be done to save those men?

Mr. SWANSON. That is true; and I do not think two retired naval officers ought to be the judges of it. Does the Senator think so?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is not the question involved in this resolution.

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; it is. The joint resolution puts two retired naval officers on the commission to try this matter.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is discussing now the joint resolution which he refused to permit to come up yesterday, in order that he might have the parliamentary advantage of considering another resolution first.

Mr. SWANSON. No; it is not any parliamentary advantage. The only parliamentary advantage is for the Senate to express its judgment. I think the Senate ought to decide whether or not it wants to investigate this matter. If it decides that it does not wish to investigate it, it can decide in what method it wants to have it investigated.

I think this resolution ought to be voted on before the other matter is voted on.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in view of the Senator's statement, I can not understand how he could have on the other resolution proposed an amendment providing for a joint committee of three Senators and three Representatives. Apparently that was what the Senator wanted.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the measure advocated by the Senator from Maine is a joint resolution. With a joint resolution the House tenders a certain proposition. My proposition is to amend the joint resolution, since the House thought that was the best way, so as to have a joint committee of the House and Senate. This is a simple resolution, not a joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. Do I understand that the Senator now thinks that the Senate alone should act upon it?

Mr. SWANSON. I heard some Senators state that the House did not want to make an investigation, and I am not willing to force people to do things that they do not want to do. That is the reason why I did not ask the Naval Affairs Committee to investigate, because they showed an indisposition to do it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has offered his amendment. Why can we not go ahead and take that up?

Mr. SWANSON. The measure of the Senator from Maine is a joint resolution. Let the Senate decide whether it wants to have anything to do with this resolution or not. When the Senate votes it down, if it does, the joint resolution of the Senator from Maine will come up. If the Senate votes that it wants to investigate this matter, then the joint resolution of the Senator from Maine can be amended accordingly.

Mr. HALE. But, Mr. President, if there is so much merit in a congressional committee of investigation, does not the Senator think that his own proposition of allowing the House to take part in it is proper?

Mr. SWANSON. Wait; wait. Four or five Senators say the Senate ought not to have anything to do with the House; let them go and attend to their own business. The Senator has a joint resolution which he has proposed to the Senate, embodying a method of conducting the investigation with which they have nothing to do. The Senator's joint resolution can be amended to follow that. If the Senator is going to propose a joint resolution, I am of the opinion that the method proposed in the Senator's measure is all right.

Mr. HALE. Now, I ask the Senator if he will not withdraw this resolution and let us go ahead with the joint resolution.

Mr. SWANSON. I will not. All I ask is for the Senate to express its judgment as to whether or not it wants to conduct this investigation or have anything to do with the S–4. If the Senate decides that it does not want to investigate the disaster, it can be ascertained by a roll call, and then I will consent to have the joint resolution of the Senator from Maine come up.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] called attention to the statement of the Senator from Virginia that the question of who was to blame for the collision between the S–4 and the Paulding was the principal matter at issue. He does not seem to understand that that is not the principal matter at issue at all. The whole question that we want to try out and ascertain is whether or not the Navy was to blame. The Navy is on trial now before the whole country. I maintain, and I think I am right in doing so, that no commission that has no experts on it can satisfactorily determine that question. What we have to show before the Navy can be criticized, as I said the other day, is that the Navy was at fault in some way because it did not furnish proper safety appliances for use on its submarines; then that in this particular case of the S–4 some part of the proper equipment that submarines should have had was lacking; then that there was some dereliction on the part of the Navy in preparing for this trial test of the S–4; and then, finally, that there was some dereliction on the part of the Navy in not using all of the means at its command to save the men who were imprisoned on the submarine.

Those are all questions for experts to decide. What position would we be in if, as a congressional committee, we should decide that the Navy was at fault because certain safety appliances were not used, and then a committee of experts should come along and say that the particular appliance referred to was not needed, was not practicable, would not have done any good? What position would we be in then?

To my mind, it is essential that the committee that acts on one should act on the other; then you will get some kind of an intelligent expression of opinion.

Congress never can give an intelligent expression of opinion on a matter of that sort. They can hear experts—experts that will decide one way and experts that will decide another way—and then they will have to determine which expert is right. What we ought to get is the deliberate opinion of a board that is made up of people who have the confidence of Congress and the confidence of the country and who know what they are talking about; and that is exactly what the commission asked for by the President provides.

I have gone into the whole question of how the commission was to be appointed. I have explained that when I came back after the Christmas holidays I found the Secretary of the Navy about to recommend to the President that he ask for an appropriation for a commission to look into the question of safety appliances for the Navy and to make a report with recommendations for the future. At that time he had no question of having this commission act on the S–4. I suggested to him that I thought it would be appropriate for the commission to do so. That was my suggestion entirely. He told me that he had already sounded out, as it was perfectly proper for him to sound them out, certain men to see if they would go on this commission, if appointed by the President, that he was about to ask for, to consider the question of safety appliances. No man can question the propriety of the Secretary of the Navy asking men if they would act on such a commission if appointed; and yet the Senator from Virginia has questioned it, and repeatedly questioned it, and said that this was a whitewashing commission. This commission was to act on the question of safety appliances when these men were spoken to. Afterward, when the Secretary decided that my suggestion was a proper one, he asked that a commission should be appointed to take up both questions—that of safety appliances and that of the sinking of the S–4.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] yesterday put into the RECORD a story taken from the Outlook of January 11 which he asked all Senators to read and consider. In response to his request I took pains to read it, and it is a very thrilling, very well-written story. No one can find any fault with the man who wrote it. He was out in the cold in a small boat, in a rough sea a good part of the time, and he did not have the consideration shown him which the representatives of the press have a right to have shown them. They are the people through whom the American public, which pays for these matters and has to suffer from mistakes, are told what occurs.

It happens that last evening, before I had an opportunity to read that article, I read an editorial from the World's Work which calls attention to this matter of the S–4, and I should like to read a part of it. It is very brief. It is a calm, dispassionate statement from a fearless, independent editor who has not hesitated to criticize the administration frequently, and who has not made it his business to act as advocate for the Navy. I think it will be agreed by everyone that the World's Work, ever since the days when its brilliant editor, Walter Hines Page, conducted its columns with courage and keen, incisive, and constructive criticism, has had a very high standing in this country for fearless, independent opinion. The World's Work is not known as an administration organ. It has frequently attacked this administration on matters with which it disagreed. So these words from the editor of the World's Work are particularly appropriate at this time.

The editorial appears in the current February number, on page 355. The editor says—and I should like to call the attention of Senators to this with particular relation to the article put into the RECORD by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] yesterday:

> As the facts about the sinking of the S–4 come to light the charges of mismanagement of the rescue work die down and it becomes more clear that the Navy on the spot failed only in its liaison work with the newspapers. In the days immediately following the accident there was a storm of criticism over the Navy's "negligence" in the rescue work, and this was due largely to the fact that the officers were so intent on the job that they neglected the very necessary job of telling the reporters why the impossible could not be done—and the reporters, not being naval experts, could not understand why the impossible was not done.

Here is the thoughtful, considered opinion of a fearless editor, who has followed the course of events in the newspapers, and followed the course of the naval investigation, and has come to the conclusion that the trouble with the Navy at that time was that they were so anxious to save the men and to save the submarine that they did not have the necessary liaison with the newspapers which they really ought to have had in a country where a popular government prevails.

The editor goes on to say:

> The raising of a wrecked vessel from a bed of mud 100 feet under water is not a task that can be done overnight, as has been demonstrated time and again. German accounts of disasters of this kind disclose that they were barely able to raise their smaller submarines sunk in shallow water, even with the help of all the devices they had perfected—and they had special catamaran boats and other inventions that work well enough on smaller submarines but are not effective on larger boats of the American S type.

He then goes on to quote Admiral Sims, and I think even the Senator from Virginia will agree that Admiral Sims is one who has never withheld criticism from the Navy when it was justified, and even sometimes when friends of the Navy felt it was not justified. Friends of the administration and friends of the Navy have frequently held their breath for fear he might say something devastating when he spoke on naval matters. As the editor of the World's Work says:

> Admiral Sims does not step lightly when he feels that criticism will increase naval efficiency and yet, after the unfortunate loss of the S–51 two years ago, he wrote this in the New York Evening Post:
> "If the boat is not flooded, the water not too deep, or the seas too rough, at least one end can be hoisted above water. The difficulty of raising a submarine can be readily explained. Its weight when its compartments are flooded is 1,000 tons or more, and the problem is further complicated by the fact that the hoisting crane is on a floating platform that is unsteady in a seaway. However, with more than one compartment flooded, or even with one, the weight involved is greater than any crane in the world could hoist. But even if such cranes should be built, they would be so huge and expensive as to be impracticable to build in any numbers, and they would seldom be in the right place at the right time."

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Missouri. What is the document the Senator is reading?

Mr. BINGHAM. I was reading from an article by Admiral Sims, published in the New York Evening Post after the S–51 disaster, in which he stated the difficulties with regard to raising submarines. It is quoted in an editorial in the World's Work for February.

The editor of World's Work goes on to say:

The rescue workers did attempt to raise the S–4 by pumping in air to make it buoyant while some of the crew were still alive.

That is brought out in the story printed in this morning's RECORD.

Senators will appreciate the fact, after what Admiral Sims has said, that it is absolutely necessary to pump in air to make a submarine buoyant if they are to bring the ship to the surface with the men in it.

The editor goes on to say:

The rescue workers did attempt to raise the S–4 by pumping in air to make it buoyant, while some of the crew were still alive, but this effort failed and the sea became rough before divers could carry out other rescue plans. All the accounts of reckless, daredevil diving during the war point out the impossibility of diving in rough weather, and occasionally British divers who were anxious to enter German submarines immediately after they were sunk had to wait for days for the sea to become calm enough for diving with safety. As it was, several divers had narrow escapes during calmer weather.

Despite its distress as a naval accident, the loss of the S–4 will stimulate the search for safety devices, and yet, as Admiral Sims has pointed out, the problem in construction of this type of vessel is to get safety without sacrificing efficiency.

That is the point the Senator from Maine brought out a few moments ago in his reply to the Senator from Virginia. This investigation must not be merely to find out whose fault it was, that of the captain of the Paulding, or that of the captain of the S–4, who can not appear for himself; this investigation must go to the heart of the matter and find out whether the Navy had provided proper safety devices in the S–4, and whether, in constructing this type of vessel, they had sufficiently provided for safety without sacrificing efficiency.

The editor then quotes another paragraph from Admiral Sims:

In submarines more than in any other type of ship, except the airplane—construction and equipment are ever a compromise. Every pound of weight and every cubic foot of space is devoted to one purpose at the expense of others. The question is not as to the value of any feature itself, but rather as to its value compared to that of some other feature.

Says Admiral Sims—

Mr. President, I submit that, with all due respect to the Members of this great body, considering the enormous amount of work they do, the enormous number of subjects they cover, that, with the possible exception of the distinguished junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], none of them has had practical experience in the Navy. None of them has had practical experience in designing submarines, none of them has had practical training so as to enable him to judge where you are to compromise between efficiency and safety. How, then, can a committee of five Senators determine the important point as to whether the Navy, in designing this type of submarine, and in permitting it to operate, erred on the side of efficiency or on the side of safety, or had erred at all? Surely, that is a question for experts to determine, as it would be determined in the investigation contemplated by the resolution which has been offered and which is on the calendar, but is not before us because the Senator from Virginia has refused to permit it to come before us. I submit that was a very extraordinary parliamentary proceeding—the attempt to get a Senate resolution up at this time, when he has constantly refused to have us consider a previous one in regard to the same subject.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. I never refused until after the chairman of the committee had taken a whole day, and about 4 o'clock it was given up by unanimous consent. He withdrew it himself. One objection could prevent it from being considered. I insisted it should be disposed of. I do not wait here on the convenience of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I gave consent a half dozen times to take the resolution up. He withdrew it, as he had a right to do.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there was no question at all of any agreement to get through on that day, as the Senator knows.

Mr. SWANSON. I have not claimed that there was such an agreement.

Mr. HALE. There was no such understanding.

Mr. SWANSON. I never objected. I said that the next time it came up it had to come up in such a shape that the Senate will have control of it, and not the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, late on that afternoon I was told by several Senators that they would have something to say on the S–4 resolution, but that they could not stay here at that time, so the joint resolution could not be finished that night. Under those circumstances I withdrew the joint resolution, as any one having it in charge would do, and as any one should do; and the Senator from Virginia knows it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Virginia forgets that although the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine had been on the calendar for some time, and efforts had been made to bring it up, certain Senators, not including the Senator from Virginia, but on his side of the aisle, had taken occasion, under their rights, to discuss a great many matters besides this, had taken occasion to hold preconvention caucuses on the floor of the Senate, had taken occasion to air the private grievances of the Democratic Party. There had been an enormous amount of time taken up on matters which were not really properly before the Senate of the United States.

Furthermore, on the very day the Senator from Virginia speaks of, January 20, when he says the matter was before us the whole day, if he will look in the RECORD he will find that a large part of the time was consumed by a Democratic Senator on a matter which he thought was more important than the S–4. He had every right to do so. He and one of his colleagues proceeded to discuss an entirely separate matter, and took a long period of time doing so.

The Senator must not find fault with us on this side of the aisle, because Senators on his side of the aisle insist on taking up time in discussing matters other than the S–4, and must not find fault with us when we express surprise at his unwillingness to have the original resolution considered at this time.

The truth is, Mr. President, that a good many people in this country do not like to see the evidence shown by certain Senators of a desire to play politics in the matter of the S–4. The Senator from Virginia and his friends have stated that if a congressional investigation took place—and I assume they would say the same thing if this resolution offered by the Senator from Florida should pass—that there would be no politics in it. Let us hope there would not be. But a committee appointed under a resolution calling for the appointment of five Senators must contain three of one party and two of another party. If the majority should be all Democrats, and they should find that the Navy was at fault, a large part of the country would say, "They are playing politics, and endeavoring to condemn the administration so as to make political capital for the coming election."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. Just a moment and I shall be glad to yield. If the majority were Republicans, and they found that the Navy was not to blame, a large number of people in the country would say, "Ah, ha! The Republicans, having an eye on the next election, do not want to have anybody think that this administration has been at fault when it comes to the Navy, and they have whitewashed the Navy, as became a majority of the committee, which is in sympathy with the administration."

Now I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator must know that under the precedents the Vice President would appoint three Republicans and two Democrats upon this committee. Obviously there could be no politics being played by the Democrats, because if this resolution is passed the control of the committee will be placed in the hands of the Republicans. It does seem to me that the Senator ought to exculpate Senators on this side of the Chamber, as well as on his side of the Chamber, from any desire to play politics when they seek to have an investigation conducted by three Republicans and two Democrats. If the Democrats are willing to trust three Republicans, obviously, it seems to me, the Senator should not contend that they desire to play politics.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I agree, of course, that under all the precedents there would be three Republicans on the committee. But, as I have just endeavored to point out, if the committee whitewashed the Navy, or found that the Navy was not at fault, a large number of people in the country would say, "Well, three Republicans, being of the majority party, had to say that anyway." What we want is a real investigation, that will be helpful to the national defense, not one that will conduce to our victory at the polls in the next election, or one that will conduce to your victory at the polls in the next election. We are not interested in politics in this matter. We are interested in getting a real, thorough investigation by experts who have made it their business to understand these matters, engineers of distinction, men who have spent their lives in the work of salvage, men whose future is not at stake in any degree at all.

The appointment of a commission of the kind suggested by the President would meet with the approval of the American people, and their findings would be considered to be acceptable by a majority of the people, because there could be no politics in it. Distinguished engineers and a Federal judge would not lend themselves to such a verdict that the public could possibly say there was any politics in it. Does not the Senator see that if a majority of a committee composed of three Republicans and two Democrats should find that the Navy was not at fault, and the minority find that the Navy was at fault, the country would not know whether the Navy was free from blame or not, the country would not know whether the Navy sacrificed safety to efficiency or not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that any commission appointed to make an investigation, whether the personnel be selected by the Senate or whether appointed by the President of the United States, should not make their findings and should not base their conclusions upon their own consciousness. They are bound to take the testimony of a multitude of witnesses, and if a committee of the Senate were appointed, they would call upon experts who were familiar with marine material, with the construction of submarines and their operation, and if that committee were so derelict as to betray the Senate and the country by making findings not justified by the evidence, they would be pilloried before the public, and the public would very quickly determine whether the findings were warranted or not. So with the Federal judge and other men of the character contemplated by the resolution of the Senator from Maine. Their findings would be based upon the testimony of experts the same as the findings of the senatorial committee would be based upon the testimony of experts.

It would, therefore, seem to me the point which the Senator is now making is without foundation because, after all, the testimony which is given must be considered, and when the public becomes acquainted with that testimony it will be determinative of the judgment of the committee and the judg- of the public. If the judgment of the committee is not warranted by the evidence the public will very quickly determine that fact, and the committee would be criticized by the people for playing politics or for rendering a verdict which was at variance with the testimony which had been adduced.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator seems to forget this is not going to be such an easy matter to decide. All the men of the S-4 have passed away. There is no evidence that can be brought in on that side of the question. The question seems to be one that will require the careful judgment of experts as to whether the Navy, in not adopting certain safety devices, was sacrificing safety to efficiency or not. It is not a question which the public or which Senators can easily decide. It is a question which will require experts to decide.

In case the Senator thinks I am drawing too much on my imagination in claiming that the public feels that politics is being brought into this matter, I should like to have the clerk at the desk read an editorial from the Washington Post.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The clerk will read, as requested.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, before that is done, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator has made the point that if a committee of the Senate is appointed, composed in part of Republicans and in part of Democrats, and that committee divides in its vote, the majority finding one way and the minority the other, that will leave the country in a state of uncertainty and introduce confusion into the question. That is perhaps true. Is the Senator prepared to say that the commission which he is recommending may not divided in its vote or that its vote is necessarily going to be unanimous, and, if it is not unanimous and there are two reports or two findings, why not the same confusion to result?

Mr. BINGHAM. The difference is, Mr. President, that in the one case the country will say that the difference is political. In the other case the country will say, as frequently happens, that the doctors disagreed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will they not also say or might they not also say that the Navy stood by itself or that the administration appointed a commission calculated to bring a certain verdict? If people begin to attribute evil motives, improper considerations, they can apply them quite as well, it seems to me, to a commission appointed as the Senator would have it, as to a committee appointed from the floor of the Senate. Indeed, it has been already suggested on the floor here many times that a commission appointed in the manner the Senator desires would be a commission which was selected by one who had an interest, and if that is said here it will be said elsewhere.

If the Senator will pardon me for this long interruption, which I had not intended to make when I rose, it seems to me if we go to attributing improper motives they are quite as likely to be attributed to the commission asked of the Senate and in the case of a division of finding, in either case, the result would be equally unfortunate. I do not think that argument gets us very far.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I say to the Senator that I do not believe he was present when the debate began the other day, when the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] referred in a very flattering manner to the work of the President's Aircraft Board. That board was appointed by the President when his administration was under very severe criticism by a former officer of the Army in the Air Service, and when the President took it upon himself, Congress not being in session, to appoint a board of the type which we wish appointed, namely, one composed partly of experts, of a Federal judge, of one or two Members of Congress, and of one or two retired officers, one from the Navy and one from the Army. No one claims that the board of nine appointed by the President whitewashed the President's administration or was appointed for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me that the attention of the Senate ought to be called to the wording of the resolution. I doubt very much whether it could be considered at this time, it never having been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. It provides for no expenses.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us see if it does not provide for expenses. It reads:

> Resolved further, That to carry out and give effect to the provisions of this resolution, the committee hereby created shall have power to issue subpœnas, administer oaths, summon witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and receive testimony taken before any proper officer in any State or Territory of the United States.

The wording is exactly that which is used in nearly every such resolution passed by the Senate. There is no question, if the resolution is adopted, that there will be expenses incurred. There is no doubt that the committee would have a shorthand reporter there to take down the testimony. If that were not the case, what Member of the Senate except the members of that particular committee would know what the testimony was? Therefore, I make the point of order that under the law the resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. If the resolution should provide for any payment out of the contingent fund of the Senate at this time, it would be subject to the point of order suggested by the Senator from Utah, but it does not provide for the payment of any expenses, and no money can be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate unless the payment is authorized. It might develop that the committee do not want to incur that expense. Later, if it should develop that they want to do so, they would have to come here and ask for authority. The resolution certainly does not now provide for the payment of any expenses, and I doubt whether the committee will need to incur any. They can ask the Navy Department to come before them with whatever evidence the department may have.

Mr. SMOOT. I as a Member of this body would object to the committee taking testimony and never having it printed. This is one of the most important questions before the public to-day, and the American people are entitled to know just exactly how the investigation will develop; and it can not be developed and it can not be known unless the testimony is recorded and printed. I say to the Senator that he has been here too long not to know that every resolution carrying the exact words which appear in this resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. In other words, it is the substance and not the form of the resolution which determines whether the Committee to Audit and Control shall deal with it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not know that it is a well-settled custom in the Senate to pass a resolution authorizing a committee to act, without attaching to it a clause authorizing the payment of expenses out of the contingent fund of the Senate; that if the resolution does pass, we then pass a subsequent resolution authorizing the necessary expenditures.

Mr. SMOOT. No. Such resolutions are always referred to the Committee to Audit and Control.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have seen such resolutions where they have deliberately left out the expense clause, which frequently is included, providing that the committee is authorized to employ stenographers at not more than so much per page. With that language left out there is no appropriation carried, no authority to expend a penny, and if the committee goes ahead without such authority it takes the chance of having to pay the bill itself. But when we put in that additional clause, which carries an appropriation with it, then the resolution has to go, and only then does it have to go, to the Committee to Audit and Control.

Mr. MOSES. Let me call this to the attention of the Senator from Missouri: There have been instances such as he now adduces. I think one of his select committees found itself in exactly that situation once. But that does not constitute the well-settled practice in the Senate, and if the point of order had ever been made against the original resolution, which was lacking the words to which the Senator from Utah now refers, it would have been sustained under a very well-settled practice of the Senate.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not know what the practice is. I know I have always understood the rule to be otherwise, and the only thing that binds us is the statute. The statute requires that when the Senate passes a resolution which calls for the expenditure of money or any appropriation of money, in that case it should go to the Committee to Audit and Control; but we have had resolution after resolution in the years that I have been here, when it was desired first to ascertain whether the Senate was willing to authorize an investigation or the work to be done, and that being tested and the resolution having been passed, then came in a resolution authorizing the expenditure of money, and that resolution authorizing the expenditure of the money had to go to the Committee to Audit and Control.

Mr. SMOOT. But in every case the committee to which those resolutions were referred never took up the question of making provision for expenses. They were referred for the simple purpose of deciding whether the committee wanted to proceed with the investigation. If the pending resolution took that same course, then there would be no committee here to which it could be referred. This is a direct appointment of a committee consisting of five Senators, and the resolution provides exactly what they shall do, and they can not do it without the expenditure of money. It is an impossibility.

Mr. MOSES. In those other instances no point was raised to the contrary.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, too.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am astounded that Senators should make that assertion. The point has been raised many times that a resolution had to go to the committee and it being found that it did not carry any right to expend money, then the resolution was acted upon. What is the language by which we are bound? I read:

> Hereafter no payment shall be made from the contingent fund of the Senate unless sanctioned by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, or from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives unless sanctioned by the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives. And hereafter payments made upon vouchers approved by the aforesaid respective committees shall be deemed, held, and taken, and are hereby declared to be conclusive upon all the departments and officers of the Government: Provided, That no payment shall be made from said contingent funds as additional salary or compensation to any officer or employee of the Senate or House of Representatives.

What does that language do? It simply declares that no payment shall be made from the contingent fund of the Senate unless sanctioned by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The pending resolution does not provide for any payment. It authorizes work, but if the committee were blindly to go on and incur expenses without first securing the authority of the Committee to Audit and Control, then the special committee would be in the position of having incurred expenses which were not legally justified and they would have to take their chances of thereafter securing the approval of the Committee to Audit and Control. I do not think the question is open to serious debate.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the precedents of the Senate and the real purpose of the resolution are not in conflict. There is no Senator who will deny that if this resolution shall be passed and an investigation shall be made expenses will be incurred; and there is no other way of paying such expenses unless they are paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. The law specifically provides that before any money shall be paid by any committee of Congress the matter shall be first passed upon by the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator certainly will not dispute this with me——

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Missouri himself said that the committee could not get any money.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I said if they proceeded without further authorization.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think they would not proceed under this resolution?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think they will come in with another resolution. Then it will be time for the committee to act. That is frequently done. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah will certainly not dispute the fact that repeatedly bills are passed authorizing public works, approving great projects, without carrying an appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; and such bills could not carry the appropriation if they were merely authorizations, I will say to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Let us not get on that sidetrack.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not a sidetrack; that is an absolute fact.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Frequently bills are passed authorizing public works and approving projects and directing that they shall be carried into effect, but carrying no appropriation of money. Then subsequently, from time to time, Congress appropriates the necessary money to carry on the work. Why is not that an exact parallel to what we have here? We are proposing to authorize a committee to make an investigation; we are proposing to authorize them to subpœna witnesses, to call for books and papers and documents, but we do not at this time authorize them to expend a penny of money; and, governed by this statute, of which they must take notice, before they begin that expenditure they must come in with a resolution to the Senate providing for the appropriation. That must go to the committee. That is a separate proposition. The two purposes can be combined in one resolution or they can be provided for in two resolutions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, resolutions of the kind which, I think, the Senator has in mind generally do not specifically provide what the committee shall do, but this resolution specifically so provides. There is no Senator but knows that money will be required from the contingent fund of the Senate as soon as the resolution shall be acted upon.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, has the point of order been decided?

Mr. SMOOT. It has not yet been decided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that the point of order is not well taken, because the resolution does not call for the payment of money.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask that my former request be granted, that the clerk at the desk read an editorial from the Washington Post which brings out the point for which I am contending, namely, that the public is actually beginning to think that certain Senators, in their effort to prevent a commission of experts investigating this matter, are playing politics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Wednesday, January 11, 1928]

THE "S–4" INQUIRY

The House of Representatives passed the resolution recommended by the President providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the S–4 disaster and to consider ways and means of preventing such accidents. The resolution provides that the commission shall consist of three civilians and two retired naval officers, to be appointed by the President.

Now Democratic opposition to the resolution has developed in the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. It is suggested that the commission would "whitewash" the Navy; that it is a scheme whereby the administration hopes to escape a searching investigation by Congress; and it is demanded that the inquiry be made by Members of Congress and not by private citizens or Navy officers.

This demand is nothing else than an attempt to turn the S–4 disaster to political advantage. The demand is not made for the purpose of ascertaining the truth and thus to save the lives of submarine crews hereafter, but to work up an agitation against the party in power, so that Democrats may gain some advantage. It is equivalent to saying, "We don't want an impartial and nonpolitical investigation of the S–4 disaster, because the commission might confine itself to facts and not take advantage of the opportunity to discredit the administration.

Let us have a free-and-easy investigation by Congressmen who know how to twist such an inquiry into political channels. This submarine was sunk while the Republicans were in power. Let us make the most of it."

The people of the United States have no use for such political tactics when the lives of its defenders are involved. The people trust President Coolidge. They know he will not appoint a commission that will "whitewash" anybody. He is not serving the United States as a Republican, but as its President. In this matter Congress should serve the whole country, and not Democratic politicians. The Navy is not a Democrat or a Republican Navy. The prostitution of the Navy into an instrument of politics is abhorrent to all decent citizens of all parties.

The Senate naval committee should report out the resolution and the Senate should pass it. Cut out politics, Senators, if you can, and do your duty as Americans, relying upon the President of the United States to do his duty also.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, it is quite evident from the tone of that editorial and from the tone of others that might be read, and some of which have already been put into the RECORD, that there are a great many people in this country who are extremely suspicious of this effort to take away from a committee of experts appointed by the President of the United States the duty of investigating this very great disaster and of determining where the blame lies and whether the Navy has done its full duty in the matter.

The history of political investigations in England and America for hundreds of years show that it is extremely difficult for members of political parties to look at accidents and disasters in the Army and in the Navy—particularly in the Navy—purely from the point of view of experts.

Over and over again in British naval history we have seen the party in power investigate the conduct of an admiral or a captain in the case of an accident with the object of white washing the party in power. I trust, if this resolution should pass and a committee of five should be appointed, three Republicans and two Democrats, that no one would claim that such a thing was done in this instance; but I submit, Mr. President, that if such a committee should find that the Navy has done all that it could do under the circumstances they would have difficulty in persuading the very able correspondent who wrote the editorial in the Outlook, which was printed in the RECORD this morning, who was on the spot and who feels that the Navy did not do all that they might have done, and in persuading people like him and those who read his story and agree with it. They would be much more likely to accept the decision of an impartial committee of experts and a judge appointed by the President of the United States.

As I have heretofore said, I wish very much that the committee of five, as suggested by the Senator from Maine, might be enlarged to a committee of seven or eight, so as to have one representative from the Senate and one from the House or two from the House on the committee, as was done in the case of the Aircraft Board. In that way we would get a liaison between the Congress and the committee conducting the investigation that, it seems to me, would be very useful. I should like to see such an amendment proposed, and I should be glad to vote for it, and, as I said the other day, if one Senator is to be a member of the committee I should like to see the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who has spent so many years in studying naval problems and who was at one time chairman of that committee, be appointed as representative of the Senate. I am not trying to play politics, Mr. President. I have no desire to prevent him from serving on the commission, but I submit that it is better policy for the country and for both parties to follow to have a commission appointed which the country can not say has as its majority a number of gentlemen chosen for their loyalty to certain political parties. If, for example, I should happen to be chosen as a member of that commission——

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will yield in a moment. If I should happen to be chosen as a member of the commission, which I trust I will not be, as I know nothing about submarines, only having taken two trips on submarines in my life, and should believe that the Navy ought to be exonerated completely and should have to vote that way, I know that I would be subjected to criticism for the remainder of my life as having been an administration supporter voting to whitewash the Navy. I think that other Senators might feel the same way.

Why is there objection to such a commission as was originally proposed to find out proper safety devices to be used in submarines also serving as a commission to investigate the sinking of the S–4? Now, I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I assume that the Senator from Connecticut will concede that the President has the power to appoint a commission such as is proposed by the joint resolution without authority of Congress?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, Mr. President, the President has done so when Congress is not in session; but it is a very bad plan, it seems to me, for the President to pursue that course when the Congress is in session and he can first ask the Congress to authorize such appointments and to authorize such expenditures. In the other case, he has to come to Congress and ask for an appropriation for expenses which he has incurred without authority. I think the Senator will remember that there have been times in the past, notably during the administration of President Roosevelt, when Congress vigorously objected to his exercising his power of appointing commissions.

Mr. BLAINE. But the President does not hesitate, without the consent of Congress, to send an army and a navy to Nicaragua while the Congress is in session.

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President, he has not done that. The Senator is mistaken. The President has sent no part of the Army.

Mr. BLAINE. He has been sending to their death young men who have enlisted in the Marine Corps without the consent of Congress. Then why should the President be so particular about his attitude with respect to Congress in connection with the appointment of a commission to investigate the S–4 disaster? Why does the President exercise or assume the power to send armed forces to a foreign country at a time when Congress is in session and then is so considerate of Congress that he does not want to appoint a commission to investigate a disaster because Congress is in session?

Mr. BINGHAM. The answer to that question, Mr. President, is quite obvious. It is the duty of the President, under the Constitution, to look after our foreign affairs. It is his duty to look after the lives and property of American citizens when they are subjected to loss in countries where the proper governmental authority is not able to grant them proper protection, as he has very ably done in China and as he is doing to-day in Nicaragua. It is the business of the President of the United States to see to it that adequate protection is given; and in this particular case it is done at the invitation of both of the leading parties in Nicaragua, as the Senator from Wisconsin well knows.

Furthermore, the President has not used the Army. To use the Army would be an act of war; but to use marines in protecting American lives in foreign lands has been held under international law not to be an act of war.

Mr. BLAINE. But he has used armed forces that have the effect of an army in Nicaragua. What persons and what property in Nicaragua are being protected? Who are they, and what is the property?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am afraid if I should attempt to answer that—and I should be very glad to give the Senator the information, because I have in my desk a list of a large number of concerns that have asked for protection—I am afraid if I should endeavor to answer the Senator's question, and should be led aside in that way, I should be guilty of not talking to the point before the Senate, which I am anxious to do. I do not like to have another very important matter injected into this question of the S–4.

I think, Mr. President, the time has come when this accident ought to be investigated, and ought to be investigated by a committee of experts. I do not like to see this effort to delay the investigation which has been made on the other side of the aisle. I regret to see the Senator from Wisconsin bringing into it the question of our Nicaraguan policy, when we ought to have before us the question of deciding what is the best way of making our submarines safe and avoiding an accident like this in the future, and finding out whether the Navy is following a proper policy in sacrificing a certain amount of safety to efficiency, or whether it should sacrifice more efficiency in submarines to greater safety.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield for a question, Mr. President.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator expresses his desire to have an immediate investigation. The President has the power to appoint a commission to make the very investigation that is proposed by the resolution. I am willing to vote for the necessary appropriation in order that the President may carry out his power; but, the President having that power, why does he delay to exercise it when I know Congress will pass a resolution or an appropriation act to make effective the commission which he has the power to appoint? There will be no delay. There is no desire to delay. Let the President exercise his power in the present instance, and I am sure Congress will respond by passing the necessary appropriation act to carry out the desires of the President in that respect. But why should the President be so concerned about not usurping power in this instance, and yet be one of only a few Presidents who without the consent of Congress have ever sent armed forces to another nation with which we are not at war and sacrifice the very principles out of which this Nation was born, without which we could not be sitting here as Members of the Senate of a free Republic?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I assume that the Senator from Wisconsin believes in the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. BLAINE. Not as interpreted by the present administration. I believe in the Monroe doctrine as an instrument for the protection of the Western Hemisphere, and that all nations upon the Western Hemisphere have an equality, and that the strong have no right to ride down the weaker nations; and to do so is an act of aggression against the small and defenseless nations. Let me remind the Senator from California that the Monroe doctrine has received this misinterpretation and maladministration only by those who desired to oppress and interfere and intermeddle in the internal affairs of another nation weaker than America, but not with respect to strong nations; and I challenge the Senator to suggest why we are not making war upon other nations as strong, perhaps, as America?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I decline to yield any further. I did not yield for a discussion of our foreign policy. I thought the Senator rose in good faith to ask a question with regard to the matter of the S–4, which is now before us and which we ought to consider.

Mr. BLAINE. Let me say to the Senator from Connecticut that the Senator from California drew me into this discussion with the consent of the Senator from Connecticut, and I very gladly withdraw from the discussion.

Mr. BINGHAM. I did not suppose it was going to involve a speech on our foreign policy.

Mr. BLAINE. I always act in good faith.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me, in two or three sentences, to reply?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In 1793 George Washington warned America to keep out of Europe. In 1823 James Monroe warned Europe to keep out of America; and I hold myself ready to show that no administration of this Government has ever violated the true American Monroe doctrine.

Grover Cleveland, a great President, did not violate the Monroe doctrine when he told mighty Great Britain to keep her lion's paw off of Venezuela; nor did the great President Theodore Roosevelt violate it when he told another great and more or less overconfident Empire to keep her paw off of Venezuela; and President Coolidge has not violated the Monroe doctrine when he has sought to protect the rights of Americans in Nicaragua.

On a proper occasion I will undertake to make good what I now state perhaps a little too vehemently.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will permit me——

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to get back to the S–4.

Mr. BLAINE. I should like to suggest, if the Senator will permit just this expression, that President Cleveland took the position that America has a character to maintain.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. She has.

Mr. BLAINE. And when it was attempted to violate the sovereignty of the Hawaiian Islands it was President Cleveland who said that in order to maintain that character it was necessary to withdraw the treaty that was pending before the Senate, submitted by his predecessor, because that treaty had been obtained by force on the part of the representatives of the United States, and therefore America could not afford to have submitted that treaty so obtained.

Mr. BINGHAM. What does the Senator mean by saying that it was obtained by force?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. What has the Hawaiian treaty to do with the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. BLAINE. I will read what the treaty has to do with the Monroe doctrine if the Senator fronr Connecticut will yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator from Connecticut yield for that purpose?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. I will read what President Cleveland said. When the revolution in Hawaii took place, shortly before the close of President Harrison's administration, the then President transmitted to the Senate a treaty providing for the annexation of Hawaii to the United States. As I said, when Mr. Cleveland came to the Presidency he withdrew that treaty, and in a message said this:

> While naturally sympathizing with every effort to establish a republican form of government, it has been the settled policy of the United States to concede to people of foreign countries the same freedom and independence in the management of their domestic affairs that we have always claimed for ourselves, and it has been our practice to recognize revolutionary governments as soon as it became apparent that they were supported by the people.
> * * * * * * *
> As I apprehend the situation, we are brought face to face with the following conditions:
> The lawful Government of Hawaii was overthrown without the drawing of a sword or the firing of a shot by a process every step of which, it may safely be asserted, is directly traceable to and dependent for its success upon the agency of the United States acting through its diplomatic and naval representatives.
> But for the notorious predilections of the United States minister for annexation the committee of safety, which should be called the committee of annexation, would never have existed.
> But for the landing of the United States forces upon false pretexts—

The same false pretexts that exist in Nicaragua to-day, if you please—> respecting the danger to life and property the committee would never have exposed themselves to the pains and penalties of treason by undertaking the subversion of the Queen's government.

> But for the presence of the United States forces in the immediate vicinity and in position to afford all needed protection and support the committee would not have proclaimed the provisional government from the steps of the government building.
> And, finally, but for the lawless occupation of Honolulu under false pretexts by the United States forces, and but for Minister Stevens's recognition of the provisional government when the United States forces were its sole support and constituted its only military strength, the Queen and her government would never have yielded to the provisional government, even for a time and for the sole purpose of submitting her case to the enlightened justice of the United States.
> Believing, therefore, that the United States could not, under the circumstances disclosed, annex the islands without justly incurring the imputation of acquiring them by unjustifiable methods, I shall not again submit the treaty of annexation to the Senate for its consideration, and in the instructions to Minister Willis, a copy of which accompanies this message, I have directed him to so inform the provisional government.
> But in the present instance our duty does not, in my opinion, end with refusing to consummate this questionable transaction. It has been the boast of our Government that it seeks to do justice in all things without regard to the strength or weakness of those with whom it deals. I mistake the American people if they favor the odious doctrine that there is no such thing as international morality; that there is one law for a strong nation and another for a weak one, and that even by indirection a strong power may with impunity despoil a weak one of its territory.
> By an act of war, committed with the participation of a diplomatic representative of the United States and without authority of Congress, the Government of a feeble but friendly and confiding people has been overthrown. A substantial wrong has thus been done which a due regard for our national character as well as the rights of the injured people requires we should endeavor to repair. The provisional government has not assumed a republican or other constitutional form, but has remained a mere executive council or oligarchy, set up without the assent of the people. It has not sought to find a permanent basis of popular support and has given no evidence of an intention to do so. Indeed, the representatives of that government assert that the people of Hawaii are unfit for popular government and frankly avow that they can be best ruled by arbitrary or despotic power.
> The law of nations is founded upon reason and justice, and the rules of conduct governing individual relations between citizens or subjects of a civilized state are equally applicable as between enlightened nations. The considerations that international law is without a court for its enforcement and that obedience to its commands practically depends upon good faith instead of upon the mandate of a superior tribunal only give additional sanction to the law itself and brand any deliberate infraction of it not merely as a wrong but as a disgrace. A man of true honor protects the unwritten word which binds his conscience more scrupulously, if possible, than he does the bond a breach of which subjects him to legal liabilities, and the United States, in aiming to maintain itself as one of the most enlightened nations, would do its citizens gross injustice if it applied to its international relations any other than a high standard of honor and morality. On that ground the United States can not properly be put in the position of countenancing a wrong after its commission any more than in that of consenting to it in advance.

That is the Monroe doctrine as interpreted by President Cleveland.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Something has been said about this Nation attacking or trampling upon the rights of the weak, and not performing in the same way in respect to the rights of the strong. I wish to observe that this Nation has never feared to assert its rights and to protect the rights of its citizens, whether they were attacked by the weak or by the strong. My recollection is that Andrew Jackson did not fear very much. I do not recall that General Taylor was much afraid. I can not at the moment recall any event in our history in connection with which this Nation was afraid to attack the strong or the weak in defense of the rights of American citizens.

I repeat, the sentiments expressed by a great President, the one whose words have just been read, Grover Cleveland, in respect to the Hawaiian treaty, had nothing to do, have nothing to do, with the Monroe doctrine. Liliuokalani—flower of the skies, Liliuokalani——

Mr. FESS (in his seat). Say that again.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is a very sweet, euphonious word, almost as sweet as "Mesopotamia," which used to make the old lady cry when the pastor pronounced the word.

Lilioukalani was Queen, not of the cannibal islands, or of the Sandwich Islands, but of the Hawaiian Islands. There was what was called a revolution, and she was overthrown. There was a treaty then proposed whereby those islands might be annexed to and in one sense become a part of the United States.

It is quite true that Grover Cleveland did not approve of that treaty, and hence withdrew it from the consideration of the Senate. It is also true that he thought we had done wrong and had connived at or been a party to this alleged, as he called it, revolution in the Hawaiian Islands, and the overthrow of the Queen.

I think a very distinguished citizen from a Southern State was sent down there, Mr. Blount, and he pulled down the American flag. I think he was termed "Paramount" Blount, but be that as it may—and I speak of him with respect—another administration lifted up the American flag in the Hawaiian Islands, and it floats there now. The doctrines of the Senator from Wisconsin would pull it down again, but I believe it should float there forever as a blessing to all the people.

As to weak nations and strong nations, I did refer to the controversy between Great Britain and Venezuela. There were any number of American citizens, loyal but misinformed, who inveighed against Grover Cleveland because he said then that what Great Britain was demanding, if persisted in, would be in violation of the true American Monroe doctrine. Nevertheless, Grover Cleveland, Democrat, insisted that Great Britain had no right by force or threat of taking or invading territory of Venezuela to insist on an acquiescence in her demand, and Great Britain yielded.

The same proposition was involved when again, during the administration of President Roosevelt——

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator a question as to Venezuela.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. When Cleveland said that to Great Britain he said it to a nation equal to the United States in force. He did not say it to Venezuela, or to Haiti, or to San Domingo, or to Nicaragua, or to San Salvador, or to any other of the weak nations.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Pardon me, Senator——

Mr. BLAINE. He did not propose that America by force should be the wet nurse for other nations to collect their debts.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Senator, I remarked a moment ago—and the Senator has not an adder ear, he can hear—that we had asserted this doctrine as against either the strong or the weak, and I am now proceeding to mention what President Roosevelt said and did when Germany made certain demands, with veiled threat, upon Venezuela.

Mr. FESS. Before the Senator enters upon that, will he yield to a question?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly, if the Senator will propound it; I may be able to answer it.

Mr. FESS. In reference to Cleveland's——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just to make a request?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Just a moment.

Mr. SWANSON. I want to make a request, and I can not make it except at this time.

Mr. FESS. In reference to the attitude of Great Britain toward the Monroe doctrine back in 1887, the most significant utterance was made by the then Premier Salisbury, when President Cleveland, through Olney, had mentioned that the violation of the Monroe doctrine was involved.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That was during President Cleveland's administration, when Lord Salisbury was Premier.

Mr. FESS. Salisbury said that the Monroe doctrine had never been regarded by them as international law, no matter how brilliant the statesman who uttered it, or powerful the Nation that backed it. That was a very remarkable utterance from the Premier of Britain. It was on that occasion that the President asked Congress to authorize him to send a commission to the disputed territory to make a survey and to report upon the conditions.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I think that is one of the outstanding incidents in American history as to our position on the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I wanted to finish my statement; the Senator may proceed, however.

Mr. BORAH. What was there about the statement that was exceptional—that it was not international law?

Mr. FESS. No; the statement that no matter how brilliant the author who uttered it, or powerful the nation that backed it. That is the remarkable statement.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the Monroe doctrine is not international law.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No.

Mr. FESS. No one ever held it was.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No nation ever admitted it to be international law, but the Senator from Idaho knows well that we are contending that it is an American doctrine which we propose to enforce.

May I right here recall the resolution introduced by Senator Lodge, when he was chairman of the great committee of which the Senator from Idaho is now the chairman. He, in a sense, expanded the Monroe doctrine by the resolution which passed the Senate, and that resolution was to this effect—it had direct application, however, to Japan—that if any foreign nation should establish a naval base so near to our shore or our territory as perhaps to endanger this Nation, we should regard that as an unfriendly act. In other words, the Lodge resolution, which referred specifically to Magdalena Bay, in Lower California, was passed because there was a suspicion, or perhaps a well-grounded belief, that Japan was negotiating with Mexico to establish a naval base at Magdalena Bay.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment now?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have the floor.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Let me complete this statement about Venezuela and President Roosevelt.

Mr. SWANSON. I want to submit a request.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have yielded to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Will not the Senator wait a moment and permit me to make a request, which I must make before 2 o'clock?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor, and can yield the floor to whomever he desires.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Regarding the very thoughtful remark of the Senator from Wisconsin, I say that when, during the administration of President Roosevelt, Germany undertook by threat of force, sending naval vessels there, off the shore of Venezuela, to insist upon certain alleged rights—who was then in the White House? Another old Andrew Jackson in his love for America, not a pale-faced, pigeon-livered President, such as I have seen men in this country to be, who never have been and never will be President. I mean there was no coward in the White House; and there has been none there, and there is not one there now. President Roosevelt sent this message, that if Germany sent her warships to intimidate Venezuela, Admiral Dewey would be there to meet them—and the German warships turned off their course and never proceeded to that coast to intimidate and threaten that little country of Venezuela.

On another occasion I will answer the Senator from Wisconsin, and endeavor to point out that never in the history of this country, under any administration, including the present, have the true principles of the Monroe doctrine, announced in 1823, been violated, that they are not now being violated, and I trust they never will be violated.

I repeat, for those who were not here a moment ago, there are two great doctrines in which I profoundly believe. In 1793 George Washington warned America to keep out of Europe, and did much to establish our great doctrine of American neutrality. He warned the United States to keep out of Europe, and we have kept out of Europe. In 1823 James Monroe warned Europe to keep out of America, and we propose to keep her out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the resolution now under consideration, following the precedents of the Senate, will be returned to the calendar under Rule VIII, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I merely want to say that it seems to me an unfair advantage has been taken of my interest in Nicaragua and of the fact that I was born in Honolulu, and that many of my friends there had the deepest interest in the establishment of the Republic of Hawaii. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] proceeds to bring up both of those interesting subjects as a kind of barrage when I was attempting to give my reasons for opposition to the resolution offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and in favor of the joint resolution in charge of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. It seems to me that it is an unusual thing, when a Senator who is interested in discussing one matter and is endeavoring to present it, that two other matters in which he may be presumed to be deeply interested are brought up in the form of questions and of prolonged debate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I want to apologize on behalf of the Senator from Wisconsin. He is to blame for the whole thing. [Laughter.]

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I see that pursuant to the plan which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has adopted for subjecting all of the present candidates for the Presidency, Republican and Democratic, to the thumbscrew of inquisition in relation to their views on the subject of prohibition, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has formally replied to a communication from the Senator from Idaho. Now, the temper of this reply, which was laid in my hands only a few moments ago, is unquestionably dry; but I am sorry to say that in my judgment, according to the strictest prohibition standards, it is not bone-dry.

The Senator from Kansas takes occasion to say, as a candidate for the Presidency, that he does not favor the relegation to the States of the question as to what the content of alcoholic beverages should be within the limitation of the eighteenth amendment. He does say that and says it distinctly. He also says that he does not favor the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. He also says that he does not favor the repeal of the Volstead Act. But nowhere, so far as I can find within the corners of his reply, does he say that he is not in favor of an amendment or modification of the Volstead Act by Congress. I commend that fact to the attention of this candidate for the Presidency. I do not know whether the omission was intentional or not, but if it was intentional I do say that if he wishes to have his political fences in a state of perfect repair when he becomes more actively a candidate for the Presidency, he should make good that omission, because, of course, it is perfectly manifest that the relief which is sought by us from the tyranny of the Volstead Act might to a very considerable degree be obtained by the modification of the Volstead Act by Congress.

But, in addition to what I have said, I wish to express the very deep regret felt by me that a Senator so observant and vigilant as is the Senator from Kansas, one so quick to feel the pulse and to note the course of public opinion, should not have profited more than he apparently has from the recent practical workings of prohibition in his own State, the State of Kansas.

I hold in my hand a book which has only lately been published, entitled "Why the Volstead Law Should Be Modified." It is written by a Kansas citizen, and without unduly taxing the attention of the Senate I desire to read aloud some three or four extracts from this book, certifying to the present condition of prohibition enforcement in the State of Kansas. This writer says first:

Kansas is supposed to be dry; and there is no doubt but what the State is as free or more free of liquor and law violations than any other State in the Union, but when anyone says or claims that Kansas is dry to-day they are—in the same class that George Washington would have been if he had denied cutting down the cherry tree. Conditions are such in Kansas to-day that if the modification of the Volstead law was put to a vote, the result would bring a smile to the face of Mr. McAdoo's well-known New York friend—Namely, Alfred E. Smith!

Just listen to this little scintillation of Kansas wit—

Then the writer goes on:

What Kansas people want and what they would vote for would be law enforcement, and they would vote for modification of the Volstead law because modification offers the only visible solution of the growing disrespect for all laws. Enforcement has been tried and failed, and Kansas people know it as well or better than they do in other States, and they know it because conditions are worse in Kansas—

Because they know that conditions are worse in Kansas—to-day than they were before national prohibition.

Then the writer proceeds:

There was more whisky or stuff called whisky, better known as "corn," made and sold in Kansas during one month of 1926 than was shipped into the State in any six months' period 10 years ago. There have already been more whisky stills and home-brew outfits found and destroyed in Kansas since the Volstead law than there were legal breweries and distilleries combined in the entire Nation prior to the eighteenth amendment. The number of stills and home-brew outfits found in Kansas is a matter of record and runs into the thousands. These facts, of course, prove that Kansas has made a commendable effort to enforce the law, but when the records in just one city show there were more stills found in 1925 than in 1924, and a greater number discovered in 1926 than in 1925—nearly seven years after the Volstead law has been in effect—it is natural to conclude that conditions are growing worse instead of better.

Then the writer further says:

Such wholesale criminal development in Kansas or any other State of men with previous good records should be of more concern to a State or its people than the use of, or possession of, liquor by an individual. A law that works to promote bad citizens out of previous good men, as the records show the Volstead law has done, is much more dangerous to society than the per cent of alcohol permitted in a beverage drink ever could possibly be.

Then listen to this with respect to Wichita, one of the chief cities of Kansas:

The Wichita Daily Eagle is perhaps the most conservative publication in Kansas, with the largest circulation of any newspaper in the State. Both the editor and the management of the Daily Eagle are for prohibition first, last, and all the time. As a matter of news for its readers and in the interest of prohibition this newspaper made a survey of the amount of liquor sold and consumed in Wichita in just one year. The results of this survey were published in the Eagle under a large headline which read:

"Wichita spends more than $2,000,000 a year for its booze."

Then the writer says:

There is no greater fighter for prohibition and no better representative spokesman for the State of Kansas than ex-Gov. Henry J. Allen. In an article published in the New York Tribune not long before Mr. Allen sailed on the University Afloat, he said in part:

"Of course we know that the Volstead Act has not decreased the use of liquor in Kansas. It is not as good a law as the Kansas prohibitory law."

Then, finally, the writer says:

Even in Kansas high schools and colleges the bootlegger solicits and supplies his customers. * * * There are hundreds of young men of legal age in Kansas that have never seen a saloon, but there are very few of them in high schools and colleges that have not had an opportunity to drink liquor, and their familiarity with the hip-pocket flask is a matter of common knowledge, and there is little doubt but what the hip-pocket flask, a product of the bootlegger, is doing as much or more toward breaking down the morals of our young people to-day as the open saloons did in their day, bad as they were.

Now, after having read these extracts, I almost feel tempted to say to the able and popular Senator from Kansas, who has gone so far astray as to become a candidate for the Presidency of the United States on such a platform as he has, Fie, fie, Senator, how can you, with all this evidence of the practical workings of prohibition in your State, declare against the modification of the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment?

For his comfort it is only fair for me to add that only this morning evidence has been brought to my attention showing that in another State which enjoys the reputation of being a bone-dry State—that is to say, the State of South Carolina, from which the distinguished Senator who has just spoken

[Mr. BLEASE] comes—prohibition conditions are even worse than in Kansas. I turn to an issue of the Newberry (S. C.) Herald-News, dated January 17, 1928, and to a special dispatch in that issue from Columbia, S. C. This dispatch reads:

COLUMBIA, January 12.—For every 2,400 people of South Carolina—that is, for that number on an average, including men, women, and children, even to babes in arms—the dozen members of the governor's State constabulary destroyed one still during the 11 months from February 1 to December 31.

Think of that! One still for every 2,400 inhabitants in the State. Why, General Andrews testified last year before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary that only about one-tenth of the commercial stills which exist in this country were ever broken up by prohibition agents. If that is so, then there is one still in existence for every 240 inhabitants of the State of South Carolina.

Mind you, this writer is not speaking of home-brew stills, of home-brew plants of any sort; he is speaking only of commercial stills, stills which are set up for the manufacture and sale of corn whisky and other hard liquors. The entire dispatch is very interesting. The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] near me calculates that in South Carolina there is one still for every 60 families. Mr. President, whenever the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] puts a candidate for the Presidency on the rack, I propose to show just what sort of conditions as respects the enforcement of prohibition prevail in the State in which the particular candidate resides.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BRUCE. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the Senator from Maryland ought to call attention to the fact that no Senator from the States to which the Senator has referred attempts to make answer or denial of the assertion which the Senator has made.

Mr. BRUCE. That is undoubtedly true; they are men of too much veracity and intelligence to attempt that; they are men of too ripe knowledge as to the local conditions which prevail in their States, to say nothing more, to do anything of the sort. They know that they would find themselves at once in a hopelessly difficult situation.

I venture to say that even the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE], whose courage in the expression of his opinions on every subject I have always so much admired, will not undertake to deny the truth of the statements that I have just read with respect to South Carolina.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Nor will the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. BRUCE. As to the Senator from Kansas, in the language of the comic opera Olivette, which used to be so popular, he has said to himself, "It is time for disappearing," for he, I note, is no longer in the Senate Chamber. As the colored people were wont to say when I was a boy in Virginia he has made himself "skeerce." I am sorry that the Senator from Idaho has also disappeared. However, it is the midday hour, and possibly the urgency of his hunger was such that he could not remain any longer in the Chamber without enduring a certain amount of physical discomfort.

Mr. BORAH entered the Chamber.

Mr. BRUCE. I see that the Senator from Idaho has returned. I was about to say that he has turned up "like a bad penny," but, of course, it is absolutely impossible to say that of the Senator from Idaho. He is too sterling coin. I want to say just a word to the Senator from Idaho—and I am glad he has come back to his seat. In some respects he and I are very much in accord with reference to the matter of prohibition, however far apart we may be in other respects. I think that each of the great national parties of this country and their several candidates for the Presidency should be made by the compelling force of public opinion to say exactly where they stand with reference to the repeal or modification of the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment. They should be brought to book; they should not be allowed to dodge, evade, palter, or equivocate on this great issue of prohibition, the most pressing, the most burning issue that has vexed the politics of this country since the old issue of slavery or no slavery. So far no Republican candidate for the Presidency has taken any pronounced stand with regard to this issue, and so far only one solitary Democratic candidate for the Presidency, in my opinion, has taken the unequivocal stand that he should have taken with regard to it, and that is Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland, who has let the people of this country know in no uncertain language the disastrous results that have resulted from the administration of the Volstead Act, and has told them explicitly that he is in favor of having the legislation of prohibition remitted to the States so that they may determine for themselves, within the limitations of the eighteenth amendment, just what the content of alcoholic beverages should be. Only a few days ago Governor Ritchie reiterated his well-known views with respect to prohibition in an issue of Plain Talk; and he did so the other night again on the occasion of the Jackson Day celebration of this year, in Washington. I honor him for his frankness and his courage. I think that he has risen to the level of the occasion in every respect, and I trust that the Senator from Idaho in the distribution of his rather searching favors will also question the Governor of Maryland.

Of course, I am not reflecting on the firmness of character of Gov. Alfred E. Smith, though I for one regretted, as thousands and millions of other people in this country did, that when he sent his message to the Legislature of New York some days ago he did not take occasion at least to say that his general views with respect to the issue of prohibition had undergone no change whatever. That would have been sufficient. While he was pretty explicit in his message, I regret that he did not take occasion to go just a little further than he did go in connection with the subject of prohibition.

And, great as is my admiration for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]—and there is no greater admirer of his splendid talents and his general public character in this body that am I—I regret that he has declared that the prohibition issue should not be raised by the next Democratic national platform. I hope, however, that the Senator from Idaho will not be deterred by anything that has heretofore happened from flashing his interrogation right in the faces of Governor Smith and Senator REED as well as in the face of Governor Ritchie.

I think that the Senator from Idaho has performed a real service to the cause of honest and manly politics in coming forward as he has with his splendid, unquailing, unfailing resolution of character and saying that the time has passed for hesitation, for a lack of candor, or for lack of frankness on the part of the great parties of this country in relation to the subject of prohibition, a subject which is at this time, in my opinion as well as his, one of transcendent, of incomparable importance and significance to the people of the United States.

RUSSELL & TUCKER AND OTHERS

Mr. JONES obtained the floor.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington to yield to me so that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 620, a local bill, which passed the Senate at the last session of Congress. It will involve no discussion.

Mr. JONES. If it will take no time, I have no objection.

Mr. MAYFIELD. I thank the Senator. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 620) for the relief of Russell & Tucker and certain other citizens of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Russell & Tucker, a copartnership composed of Lee L. Russell and S. C. Tucker; Floyd & Co., a copartnership composed of C. W. Floyd and S. C. Tucker; Borroum, Tucker & O'Connor, a copartnership composed of J. L. Borroum, S. C. Tucker, and Martin O'Connor; Rutledge, Browne & Nichols, a copartnership composed of W. J. Rutledge, N. H. Browne, and J. W. Nichols; Russell & Wilson, a copartnership composed of R. R. Russell and W. E. Wilson; Rocky Reagan, Alfred A. Drummond, J. M. Doble, and Dick Colson, any statutes of limitations being waived, are hereby authorized to enter suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas for the amount alleged to be due to said claimants from the United States by reason of the alleged neglect and alleged wrongdoing of the officials and inspectors of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry in the dipping of tick-infested cattle in Texas and Oklahoma, which said cattle were shipped from Texas to Osage County, Okla., in the years 1918 and 1922.

SEC. 2. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas to hear and determine all such claims without the intervention of a jury. The action in said court may be presented by a single petition making the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the claimants base their claims, and the petition may be verified by the agent or attorney of said claimants, official letters, reports, and public records, or certified copies thereof may be used as evidence, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found due from the United States to the said claimants by reason of the alleged negligence and erroneous certification, upon the same principles and under the same measures of liability as in like cases between private parties, and the Government hereby waives its immunity from suit. And said claimants and the United States of America shall have all rights of appeal or writ of error or other remedy as in similar cases between private persons or corporations: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within six months of the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like a brief statement as to the object and purpose of the bill.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, this bill simply confers the right upon certain citizens of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas to enter suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas for an amount alleged to be due to the claimants from the United States by reason of the alleged neglect and alleged wrongdoing of officials and inspectors of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry in the dipping of tick-infested cattle in Texas and Oklahoma, which cattle were shipped from Texas to Osage County, Okla., in the years 1918 and 1922.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIS subsequently said: Mr. President, a little while ago, during my temporary absence from the Chamber, Calendar No. 37, being Senate bill 620, which was introduced by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD], was passed by unanimous consent. I do not at all accuse the junior Senator from Texas of any bad faith in the matter, though I regret that he called the bill up during my absence, knowing that heretofore I had objected to it. I would not have objected to-day and did not intend to continue my objection, but I did want to make a statement about the bill. The Senator from Texas pointed out to me that certain amendments which had been recommended by the department had been embodied in the bill. Those amendments removed my objection in part but not entirely.

I merely wish to state now that I think the passage of bills of this character is bad legislation. We have a Court of Claims to consider such matters. It is proposed by this bill to refer the questions covered by it, which evidently are questions that should have gone to the Court of Claims under the general procedure, to a district court named in the bill. I think if that practice is persisted in it will result in encumbering up the records of the courts and seriously impeding the transaction of public business.

I desired to make that statement when the bill came up. As I have said, I would not have objected to its consideration, but I wanted to file my objection to that sort of legislation. That is all.

POLITICAL HISTORY OF SOUTH CAROLINA, ETC.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, the article which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] has read from a South Carolina newspaper was written by John Kinard Aull, who has been the secretary of three governors of that State, who has been the official stenographer of two judicial circuits of that State, and who was for some time private secretary to one United States Senator. I can bear testimony to the fact that what he writes is true, so far as his information goes, and that he would not write such facts which are contained in the article referred to unless he obtained them from some official source.

Personally, Mr. President, I believe in State rights. If I had been a member of the Legislature of South Carolina when the amendment proposing national prohibition was before that body for ratification I would have voted against ratification. If I had been a member of the General Assembly of South Carolina when the amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for woman suffrage was presented I would have voted not to ratify it. I believe firmly that the determination of those questions belongs to the people of the individual States.

I shall not discuss political issues at this time, because I do not care very much about them; but if I wanted to name a ticket which I believe the people of this country would elect I would nominate, if I had the power, two great Democrats: For President, WILLIAM E. BORAH, of Idaho, and for Vice President, LEE S. OVERMAN, of North Carolina.

Mr. President, I have almost reached the conclusion that platforms are not worth the paper they are written upon. I have about reached the conclusion that what we need in this country in office is men—men who are not afraid to do what is right; men who have the courage to do what is right; men who are honest—and that it does not make any difference what platform you put them in on; it does not make very much difference what party you put them in on; if they are men in whom the people of this country have confidence, you will have a government superior to that of any other nation in the world.

That, however, was not what I rose to pay some attention to at this time.

A few days ago upon the floor of the Senate reference was made to the negro voting in the Southern States. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], in his very able address, has covered much of the ground which I myself intended to cover. Therefore I shall not reiterate.

South Carolina stands in a position of her own in regard to the Constitution of the United States of America. She has a constitution; and, without taking up the time of the Senate, I request to have printed in the RECORD in brief form the sections of our constitution which apply to this question.

Section 5 of the Declaration of Rights I ask to read:

The privileges and immunities of citizens of this State and of the United States under this constitution shall not be abridged, nor shall any person be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall any person be denied the equal protection of the laws.

It also provides that no person shall be deprived of the right to vote because of race or color.

I also ask, at the same time, permission to insert some decisions from the supreme court of my State upon this question of suffrage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUFFRAGE—CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, RATIFIED IN CONVENTION DECEMBER 4, 1895

ARTICLE I. DECLARATION OF RIGHTS

SEC. 5. The privileges and immunities of citizens of this State and of the United States under this constitution shall not be abridged, nor shall any person be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall any person be denied the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 9. The right of suffrage, as regulated in this constitution, shall be protected by law regulating elections and prohibiting, under adequate penalties, all undue influences from power, bribery, tumult, or improper conduct.

SEC. 10. All elections shall be free and open, and every inhabitant of this State possessing the qualifications provided for in this constitution shall have equal right to elect officers and be elected to fill public offices.

ARTICLE II. RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE

SECTION 1. All elections by the people shall be by ballot, and elections shall never be held or the ballots counted in secret.

SEC. 2. Every qualified elector shall be eligible to any office to be voted for, unless disqualified by age, as prescribed in this constitution. But no person shall hold two offices of honor or profit at the same time: Provided, That any person holding another office may at the same time be an officer in the militia or a notary public.

SEC. 3. Every male citizen of this State and of the United States 21 years of age and upwards, not laboring under the disabilities named in this constitution and possessing the qualifications required by it, shall be an elector.

SEC. 4. The qualifications for suffrage shall be as follows:

(a) Residence in the State for two years, in the county one year, in the polling precinct in which the elector offers to vote four months, and the payment six months before any election of any poll tax then due and payable: Provided, That ministers in charge of an organized church and teachers of public schools shall be entitled to vote after six months' residence in the State, otherwise qualified.

(b) Registration, which shall provide for the enrollment of every elector once in 10 years, and also an enrollment during each and every year of every elector not previously registered under the provisions of this article.

(c) Up to January 1, 1898, all male persons of voting age applying for registration who can read any section in this constitution submitted to them by the registration officer, or understand and explain it when read to them by the registration officer, shall be entitled to register and become electors. A separate record of all persons registered before January 1, 1898, sworn to by the registration officer, shall be filed, one copy with the clerk of court and one in the office of the secretary of state on or before February 1, 1898, and such persons shall remain during life qualified electors unless disqualified by the other provisions of this article. The certificate of the clerk of court or secretary of state shall be sufficient evidence to establish the right of said citizens to any subsequent registration and the franchise under the limitations herein imposed.

(d) Any person who shall apply for registration after January 1, 1898, if otherwise qualified, shall be registered: Provided, That he can both read and write any section of this constitution submitted to him by the registration officer or can show that he owns and has paid all taxes collectible during the previous year on property in this State assessed at $300 or more.

(e) Managers of election shall require of every elector offering to vote at any election, before allowing him to vote, proof of the payment of all taxes, including poll tax, assessed against him and collectible during the previous year. The production of a certificate or of the receipt of the officer authorized to collect such taxes shall be conclusive proof of the payment thereof.

(f) The general assembly shall provide for issuing to each duly registered elector a certificate of registration, and shall provide for the renewal of such certificate when lost, mutilated, or destroyed, if the applicant is still a qualified elector under the provisions of this constitution, or if he has been registered as provided in subsection (c).

SEC. 5. Any person denied registration shall have the right to appeal to the court of common pleas, or any judge thereof, and thence to the Supreme Court, to determine his right to vote under the limitations imposed in this article, and on such appeal the hearing shall be de novo, and the general assembly shall provide by law for such appeal, and for the correction of illegal and fraudulent registration, voting, and all other crimes against the election laws.

SEC. 6. The following persons are disqualified from being registered or voting:

First. Persons convicted of burglary, arson, obtaining goods or money under false pretense, perjury, forgery, robbery, bribery, adultery, bigamy, wife beating, housebreaking, receiving stolen goods, breach of trust with fraudulent intent, fornication, sodomy, incest, assault with intent to ravish, miscegenation, larceny, or crimes against the election laws: Provided, That the pardon of the governor shall remove such disqualification.

Second. Persons who are idiots, insane paupers supported at the public expense, and persons confined in any public prison.

SEC. 7. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State, or of the United States, or of the high seas, nor while a student of any institution of learning.

SEC. 8. The general assembly shall provide by law for the registration of all qualified electors, and shall prescribe the manner of holding elections and of ascertaining the results of the same: Provided, At the first registration under this constitution, and until the 1st of January, 1898, the registration shall be conducted by a board of three discreet persons in each county, to be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate. For the first registration to be provided for under this constitution, the registration books shall be kept open for at least six consecutive weeks, and thereafter from time to time at least one week in each month, up to 30 days next preceding the first election to be held under this constitution. The registration books shall be public records open to the inspection of any citizen at all times.

SEC. 9. The general assembly shall provide for the establishment of polling precincts in the several counties of the State, and those now existing shall so continue until abolished or changed. Each elector shall be required to vote at his own precinct, but provision shall be made for his transfer to another precinct upon his change of residence.

SEC. 10. The general assembly shall provide by law for the regulation of party primary elections and punishing fraud at the same.

SEC. 11. The registration books shall close at least 30 days before an election, during which time transfers and registration shall not be legal: Provided, Persons who will become of age during that period shall be entitled to registration before the books are closed.

SEC. 12. Electors in municipal elections shall possess the qualifications and be subject to the disqualifications herein prescribed. The production of a certificate of registration from the registration officers of the county as an elector at a precinct included in the incorporated city or town in which the voter desires to vote is declared a condition prerequisite to his obtaining a certificate of registration for municipal elections, and in addition he must have been a resident within the corporate limits for at least four months before the election and have paid all taxes due and collectible for the preceding fiscal year. The general assembly shall provide for the registration of all voters before each election in municipalities: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to any municipal elections which may be held prior to the general election of the year 1896.

SEC. 13. In authorizing a special election in any incorporated city or town in this State for the purpose of bonding the same the general assembly shall prescribe as a condition precedent to the holding of said election a petition from a majority of the freeholders of said city or town as shown by its tax books, and at such elections all electors of such city or town who are duly qualified for voting under section 12 of this article, and who have paid all taxes, State, county, and municipal, for the previous year, shall be allowed to vote; and the vote of a majority of those voting in said election shall be necessary to authorize the issue of said bonds.

SEC. 14. Electors shall in all cases except treason, felony, or a breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest on the days of election during their attendance at the polls, and going to and returning therefrom.

SEC. 15. No power, civil or military, shall at any time interfere to prevent the free exercise of the right of suffrage in this State.

Mr. BLEASE. The only case that I can now recall, or of which I have been informed in reference to the constitutional provisions or the statutory provisions, herewith cited, have been decided in favor of the electors, and whenever any of them, either white or black, have appealed to the courts from a decision of the registration boards, the courts have ordered that they be given their registration certificates. I do not think the Supreme Court has been called upon to either affirm or reverse any such decisions, but that certainly is the record in so far as the circuit courts of our State are concerned.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss that question. I have sometimes been painted as the enemy of the Negro race. That question I leave to South Carolina. I do not care what anybody else in the United States outside of South Carolina thinks about it, whether they think well or unwell, or what they think. That makes absolutely no difference in the world to me; but if the matter were left to the vote of the negro people of South Carolina, men and women—if the white people were just cut out entirely and only the negro people voted on it—I do not think I would have the slightest difficulty in being elected either governor of that State or a Senator of the United States.

I know how they feel toward me at home. I know that they come here to my office and ask me to help them get positions. I know that they come to my office and ask me to loan them money. I know that when I was elected governor of that State the penitentiary was crowded and the chain gangs were crowded with colored people who did not have any business there, and I turned out of that penitentiary and out of the chain gangs about 1,700 of them; and the only mistake I made was the day I left the governor's office that I did not turn out the whole darned business. [Laughter.] So I know how they feel toward me in that State; and I do not care, as I said, what any other State thinks about it.

The negroes of South Carolina do not want social equality. The best element of them will so express themselves at any time. What they do desire is equal rights and equal accommodations in traveling, and so forth, but they have no desire to hold office, and they have no desire to associate with white people. They fully realize that the white man who associates with them on equal terms is not as good or substantial a citizen as they are, and that by their association with him they lower themselves in the estimation of the best white people.

We have no trouble with the negroes in my State except very seldom, and then it is from an irresponsible class. They realize that the white people of South Carolina are their best friends, and if let alone the question can be properly handled in South Carolina, without injustice to any and fairness to all.

Mr. President, here is what Abraham Lincoln said; and a good many people like to quote him and talk about him.

In a speech at Charleston, Ill., in 1858, Mr. Lincoln said:

I am not now, nor ever have been, in favor of bringing about in any way the social or political equality of the black and white races. I am not now, nor ever have been, in favor of making voters or jurors out of negroes, nor of qualifying them to hold office, nor of intermarriage with white people. There is a physical difference between the white and black races which will forever forbid the two races living together on social or political equality. There must be a position of superior and inferior, and I am in favor of assigning the superior position to the white man.

I say to these people who talk about the colored people not voting, talk about the colored people not holding office, and talk about the colored people intermarrying with white people go back to your earthly god; go out and stand here in front of his picture, or one of his statues, and repeat what he said.

South Carolina does not prevent a man who can comply with her constitution from voting in her elections. I wish to say to Senators or others who desire to read them that I hold in my hand the statutes of the State, three sections of which I also request to have printed, under the head of "Suffrage," one of which reads:

That no person shall be deprived of his right to vote because of his race or color.

In order not to take up the time of the Senate, I ask to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD these six sections of the statute laws of my State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

(202) SEC. 1. Qualifications for registration after January 1, 1898.—Persons disqualified: Every citizen of this State and the United States 21 years of age and upwards, not laboring under disabilities named in the constitution of 1895 of this State, who shall have been a resident in the State for two years, in the county one year, in the polling precinct in which the elector offers to vote four months before any election, and shall have paid six months before any election any poll tax then due and payable, and who can both read and write any section of the said constitution submitted to said elector by the registration officer or officers, or can show that he or she owns, and has paid all taxes collectible during the previous year on property in this State assessed at $300 or more, and who shall apply for registration, shall be registered: Provided, That ministers in charge of an organized church and teachers of public schools shall be entitled to vote after six months' residence in the State if otherwise qualified: Provided further, That persons who are idiots, insane, paupers supported at the public expense, and persons confined in any public prison shall be disqualified from being registered or voting: And provided further, That persons convicted of burglary, arson, obtaining goods or money under false pretenses, perjury, forgery, robbery, bribery, adultery, bigamy, wife beating, housebreaking, receiving stolen goods, breach of trust with fraudulent intent, fornication, sodomy, incest, assault with intent to ravish, miscegenation, and larceny, or crimes against the election laws, shall be disqualified from being registered or voting, unless such disqualification shall have been removed by the pardon of the governor.

(203) SEC. 2. Electors to be registered.—No person shall be allowed to vote at any election hereafter to be held unless he or she shall have been registered as herein required.

(204) SEC. 3. Board of registration—Appointment, duties, term of office, etc.: Between the 1st day of January and the 15th day of March, 1898, and between said dates in every second year thereafter, the governor shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, if in session, and if not in session subject to its approval at its next session, subject to removal by the governor for incapacity, misconduct, or neglect of duty, three competent and discreet persons in each county, who shall be citizens and qualified electors thereof, and who shall be known as the board of registration of * * * County, whose duty it shall be to register and to conduct the registration of the electors who shall apply for registration in such county as herein required. Their office shall be at the county seat, and they shall keep record of all their official acts and proceedings. Their term of office shall be for two years from the date of their appointment, and they shall continue in office until their successors shall have been appointed and shall qualify: Provided, That in case of a vacancy from any cause in the office of board of registration the governor shall fill such vacancy, by and with the consent of the senate as aforesaid: Provided, That in the county of Pickens the said board of registration shall be elected at the general election of 1912 and every two years thereafter.

(208) SEC. 7. Appeal from denial of registration: The boards of registration to be appointed under section 3 of this chapter shall, up to and including the 1st of January, 1898, judge of the qualifications of all applicants for registration. Any person denied registration shall have the right of appeal from the decision of the board of registration denying him registration to the court of common pleas of the county or any judge thereof, and thence to the supreme court; and on such appeal the hearing shall be de novo. Any person denied registration and desiring to appeal must within 10 days after the decision of the board of registration is made file with the said board a written notice of such notice of his intention to appeal therefrom. After the expiration of 10 days from the filing of such notice of intention to appeal the board of registration shall file with the clerk of the court of common pleas for the county the notice of intention to appeal and any papers in their possession relating to the case, and a report of the case if they deem proper. The clerk of the court shall file the same and enter the case on a special docket to be known as calendar No. 4. If the applicant desires the appeal to be heard by a judge at chambers he shall give every member of the board of registration four days' written notice of the time and place of the hearing. From the decision of the court of common pleas, or any judge thereof, the appellant or any duly qualified elector of the county may further appeal to the supreme court by filing a written notice of his intention to appeal therefrom in the office of the clerk of the court of common pleas within 10 days after such decision is filed, and within said time serving a copy of such notice on every member of the board of registration. Thereupon the clerk of the court of common pleas shall certify all the papers in the case to the clerk of the supreme court within 10 days after the filing of such notice of intention to appeal. The clerk of the supreme court shall place the case on a special docket, and it shall come up for hearing upon the call thereof, under such rules as the supreme court may make. If such appeal be filed with the clerk of the supreme court at a time that a session thereof will not be held between the date of filing and an election, at which the appellant will be entitled to vote if registered, the chief justice, or, if he is unable to act or disqualified, the senior associate justice, shall call an extra term of the court to hear and determine the case.

(209) SEC. 8. Registered electors before January, 1898, remain so—Establishment of right to vote: All persons registered on or before January 1, 1898, shall remain during life qualified electors, unless afterwards disqualified by the provisions of the said constitution. The certificate of the clerk of the court, or of the secretary of state, that the name of any person appears on the books or records hereinbefore required to be filed in their respective offices by the boards of registration shall be sufficient evidence to establish the right of such person to any subsequent registration and the franchise under the limitations imposed in the said constitution.

(210) SEC. 9. Board to judge the legal qualifications of applicants after January, 1898—Appeals: After the 1st of January, 1898, the board of registration to be appointed under section 3 of this chapter shall judge of the legal qualifications of all applicants for registration. From their decision appeals may be taken to the court of common pleas, or any judge thereof, and thence to the supreme court, and the mode of appeal shall be the same as prescribed in section 7, herein.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, there is a provision there—and I hope those who criticize will remember this—that if a colored man or woman goes to the board of supervisors of registration in my State, and can qualify under the laws of my State, just as a white man has to do, just as a white woman to-day I am sorry to say ever consented to do, and that board of registration, composed of three men, declines to give that negro his registration certificate, he can appeal to either one of the circuit judges of the State, there being 14 of them; and on that appeal the circuit judge does not take the word of the supervisors of registration. He tries the case de novo, and he has the right to order that board of registration to enroll that colored man or colored woman as a registered voter; and I wish to call particular attention to the fact that that has been done in two or three instances in my State, and each time the circuit judge has decided in favor of the negro, and ordered that he be registered. Therefore, Mr. President, that question does not bother us down in South Carolina.

Just a word in reference to myself, for the benefit of some people who love to criticize.

On January 13, 1928, I received a letter from the president of the State Agricultural and Mechanical College of South Carolina, which is located at Orangeburg, a college supported by the State of South Carolina for the education of negro boys and girls. We have a 3-mill tax levy provided for in our constitution, which is divided between the races, and the colored people receive their part of that money for the education of their children. Then we support this State institution for the education of colored boys and girls when they are able to reach that college.

This professor, a colored man, in speaking of something that I did for this college, says:

Your kind favor is very much appreciated, as the books will be a valuable source of information to our faculty, students, and extension agents.

The college is in good shape, having this year a splendid enrollment of boys and girls eager to become better citizens and community builders. We are constantly encouraged to that end by your friendly interest and support. Governor Richards has shown a very friendly attitude toward the college in his budget recommendations, and the outlook for us under his administration is very hopeful and encouraging.

Governor Richards, I am proud to say, is to-day and has been for many years both personally and politically a very strong friend of mine.

Mr. President, on the floor of the Senate the other day, on page 1585 of the RECORD of January 17, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] said, speaking to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN]:

The Senator's study of this matter will, of course, have apprised him of the fact that following the Civil War quite a large number of Members elect of the House of Representatives and some Members elect of the Senate had participated in the war against the Union and were, of course, guilty technically of treason. Had the Senator been a Member of this body at that time would he have voted to admit those men?

On page 1594 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the same date, in the first column—I shall not read it all—the Presiding Officer (Mr. WATERMAN in the chair) said:

Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Montana?

I call attention, without reading and without having it reprinted in the RECORD, to what appears from there down to the end of the first paragraph of the second column.

When the State of South Carolina ratified the Constitution of the United States it passed this resolution: I read from a document from the Library of Congress, entitled "Formation of the Union":

This convention doth also declare that no section or paragraph of the said Constitution warrants a construction that the States do not retain every power not expressly relinquished by them.

I do not know whether any other State in the Union, when it ratified this Constitution, put that in or passed a resolution similar to that or not; but South Carolina advisedly put it in there. It was put in by the man, I believe, if the record is ever properly searched and the truth is told, who wrote the Constitution of the United States of America, and whose draft of it, when handed in, was finally accepted, and it is really the Constitution of this country to-day.

I say, Mr. President, that under that section, as passed by that convention in South Carolina, she had a right not only then, but has a right now, to secede from the American Union if her people in convention assembled so declared then or should so declare now.

We are no strangers to the American Union. The South built this Nation. Of that there can be no doubt.

For 72 years—1789–1861—there were 15 Presidents of the United States and 9 were from the South. In nearly every Cabinet of the 15 Presidents the Attorney General was a southern man. These 9 southern Presidents made such excellent ones that 5 of them were reelected and not one from the 6 remaining ones from the North was reelected.

For 64 years the Chief Justices of the United States were southern men.

The obligations of the Nation to the South are great.

Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, offered the resolution of independence.

Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence.

George Washington established it.

James Madison largely created the Constitution and was instrumental in having it ratified.

John Marshall was Chief Justice 30 years.

These men, with Alexander Hamilton, may truly be called the founders of the American Nation.

The South through Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, added the Louisiana Purchase to the United States, million miles of territory.

The South through James K. Polk, of Tennessee, added Texas and the Pacific slope to the United States.

The South through Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, added Alaska.

The South through Virginia gave the Territory Northwest of the Ohio River—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and a part of Minnesota—to the United States.

The South through Lewis and Clarke, of Virginia, opened up the Yellowstone country and great West.

Through Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi were added to the Federal Government.

The South through Taylor and Scott, of Kentucky and Virginia, caused Mexico to yield.

In the Spanish-American War Gen. Joe Wheeler, of Alabama, was called "the backbone of the Santiago campaign."

Hobson, of Alabama, performed "the most heroic exploit ever executed in naval history."

It was Arthur Willard, of Maryland, who planted the first flag in Cuba.

It was Tom Brumby, of Georgia, who raised the first flag at Manila.

It was Anderson, of Virginia, who fired the first salute at El Caney.

The South deserves recognition by the Nation.

Every time you put a 2-cent stamp upon a letter the South speaks to you through George Washington. Every time you handle your silver money the South speaks to you through Thomas Jefferson.

In the late World War it was southern troops that broke the Hindenburg line.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. BLEASE. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator should not forget that part of the force that broke the Hindenburg line was composed of New York troops.

Mr. BLEASE. I was just going to say, with the exception, of course, of the few troops from the State of New York; and I hope I may not be out of place in saying that possibly if the southerners had not been there, the New Yorkers might not have stayed.

Mr. President, some time back I inserted an article in the RECORD. I would like to have that article inserted at this place as a part of my speech, and as it would take some 25 or 30 minutes to read it, I ask permission, as it is already in the RECORD, to have it printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SOUTH IS THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY

It is seen and known by all men that those who to-day are endeavoring to control the Democratic Party have no genuine love for the South and no good can come to the South from those sources which are endeavoring to obtain for themselves or their candidate for the office of the Presidency of the United States by their present campaign of slander and abuse of that section of this Nation which has made it possible for it to be what it is. And what ill will of God's or man's could induce men to speak so contemptuously as they do of that section of our common country that waged the Revolutionary War and built here a Government which has raised the standards of human living and safety to heights hitherto unknown? That the South built the Republic and that men who built the Republic then organized the Democratic Party as an "association of patriots" to preserve the Republic, the most illiterate among our people must see and appreciate.

Let only a recital of some of the events and outmarks in our history serve here to remind you of these facts, although to review all the achievements of the southern patriots and statesmen would require more time than one could rehearse and might become tedious to those who are not in sympathy with them.

First of all, it was the feeble colonies of South Carolina and Georgia that first wrote to the strong Virginia Colony Legislature, or house of burgesses, suggesting the calling of the First Continental Congress to band the Colonies together for their mutual protection against the encroachment of the power of the tyrannical foreign monarchy that then held them subject to his crown; it was Patrick Henry, the burning torch of human liberty, a Virginian, who lighted the flames of the Revolutionary War, and he was the first commander of the American Army, which he organized and mobilized on the James River near Williamsburg, until George Washington was placed in command in his stead by the combined Colonies; and what need is there of relating with what glory and valor the South participated in that frightful war and what portion of the victories they achieved. It will be interesting to relate that one event of that awful conflict might be sufficient rehearsal here to fix the greatness of her sons in your minds; I refer to the Battle of Kings Mountain, of which Senator John W. Daniel, of Virginia, said in his one-hundredth anniversary oration at the base of the mountain in 1880, "It is indeed a mountain which kings may well remember." In that period of our struggle for independence Florida and Georgia had gone down under the merciless onslaughts of the conqueror; General Washington, his men exhausted from campaign and battle and his southern troops laid beneath the sod from death due to affliction and the rigors of that awful winter at Valley Forge, were on the verge of general collapse, and the British knew of his condition. On December 26, 1779, Sir Henry Clinton, the British commander in chief, set out from London with 8,500 new troops for the strengthening of the forces already on this continent; on May 12 General Lincoln, who had been second to General Gates at Saratoga and now in command at Charleston, was beleaguered, and after desperate resistance surrendered the fort with 5,000 men, shipping, stores, artillery, and arms, and then it seemed that the heel of the conqueror had fastened a death grind on the necks of the colonists, for there was nowhere now for succor to come from, so it seemed. But they had failed to take note of the fact that the Presbyterians who had fled from the British Isles in search of religious liberty had taken up their homes in the valleys of southwestern Virginia and upper east Tennessee and northwestern North Carolina.

To these liberty-yearning people the word went out from the British commander, Ferguson, who had taken up his quarters on Kings Mountain, from which he boasted that "All the rebels this side of hell can not dislodge me"; those patriots from beyond the mountains quickly met and marched through the mountains, living on parched corn, to North Carolina, where they were joined by the little company of 70 North Carolina troops, who were standing guard of their homes, and under forced march arrived at Cowpens, S. C., where the remaining 200 South Carolina troops from the heroic colony, already bled white from fighting, joined them on October 6, and on the morning of October 7 they set out and in four columns advanced up the four sides of that mountain, with the result that only the runner talebearer of the British escaped to warn his fellow soldiers farther to the north, while these southern heroes rolled the tide of the Revolution back to Yorktown. Of the result of this battle Senator Daniel, in his above-mentioned oration, said:

"As the victory of Moultrie at the palmetto fort was the early morning star, so Yorktown was the glorious and undimmed sunrise of American independence; and so Kings Mountain came like a vivid flash from the storm clouds of expiring night, dazzling darkened eyes with lambent light that played around this hoary crest, the patriots' eyes caught in prophetic vision an inspiring glimpse of Morgan and his men emerging through the smoke of Cowpens upon the heels of the flying Tarleton; beheld Cornwallis retreating before Greene after the dreadful carnage of Guilford, while at the close of the vista rose up in luminous splendor that grand historic picture which marks the dawn of a new era in the history of mankind, the sword of the conquered conqueror presented humbly to 'the Father of his Country,' while the standard of France and the flag of the great Republic floated in mingled glory over the ramparts of Yorktown."

Who was it but the southern colonies that in the constitutional conventions defeated the effort to make the new Government a limited monarchy, or a republican form of government in which the Chief Executive and the Senate would be elected for life; who but the southern delegates, led by Patrick Henry, saved to the people that glorious heritage, State rights, and had incorporated into the Constitution the Virginia Bill of Rights, which saved to the people the right of trial by jury among their own people, the writ of habeas corpus, the freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience?

It was also Patrick Henry, as first Governor of Virginia, who organized the counties of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio in the northwest territory of Virginia, and on the 3d day of May, 1784, the Virginia General Assembly ceded these three counties to the Federal Union with the stipulation that they should become three independent States. These negotiations were handled between the State and the Federal Government by James Monroe, Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Hardy, and Arthur Lee; this same Virginia gave also its right to the Territory of Tennessee and Kentucky and West Virginia to the Federal Government that this territory might become separate States in the Union; it was the South and southern statesmen that were, with their means and brawn, building the great seat of government at Washington when the British invaded our country in 1812, and, although we had a treaty of peace with the British, they destroyed our little Army and Navy at Baltimore and Bladensburg Road, drove President Madison and his wife from the seat of government, applied the torch first to the Library of Congress, then in the Capitol, then to the White House, after gorging themselves with what they found in it; sacked and burned the Treasury and the plant of the only newspaper of importance; sailed down the Potomac, bombarding Alexandria, and then into the open sea, which they had cleared of our ships, and on to New Orleans, where they encountered Andrew Jackson, born on the soil of South Carolina, and his southern troops, and the historian Parton tells the story that of the British dead on the field 80 per cent were shot between the eyes, and their commander, Pakenham, taken dead from the field, was pickled in rum and shipped to his brother-in-law, the Duke of Wellington, who received it on the eve of the Battle of Waterloo. And soon after this battle and as a sequel to it Florida came into the possession of the United States as a part of our national domain through the campaign of Jackson and the diplomacy of John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, the two outstanding figures in history of their day, and Jackson organized the first Territorial government over it and prepared it to be converted into a State. Of its acquisition and the part he played in it John C. Calhoun, upon retiring from the portfolio of Secretary of War in the Cabinet of President Monroe, in an address to the people of South Carolina, replying to the attacks of Benton on him for the part he had had in this bit of statecraft, said:

"Although the youngest of Monroe's six Cabinet members, I have been attributed by Benton of being the author of the Florida treaty, the acquisition of which territory he sees as a disaster to the Republic. I have said it is a good treaty, not without due reflection. We acquired much by it; it gave us Florida, an acquisition not only important in itself but also in reference to the whole southwestern frontier. There was, at that time, four powerful tribes of Indians, two of whom the Creeks and Choctaws, were contiguous to Florida, and the two others, the Chickasaws and Cherokees, were adjoining. They were the most numerous and powerful tribes in the United States, and from their position were exposed to be acted on and excited against us from Florida. It was important that this state of things should terminate, which could only be done by the obtaining of Florida. But there were other and powerful considerations for the acquisition. We had a short time before extinguished the Indian title to large tracts of country in Alabama, Mississippi, and Georgia lying upon streams and rivers which passed through Florida to the Gulf—lands in a great measure valueless without the right to navigate those streams to their mouths. The acquisition of Florida gave us this right and enabled us to bring into successful cultivation a great extent of fertile lands which have added much to the increased production of the great staple, cotton. It also terminates a very troublesome dispute with Spain growing out of the capture of St. Marks and Pensacola by General Jackson in the Seminole War, and finally it perfected our title to Oregon by ceding to us whatever right Spain had to that territory."

It was John C. Calhoun, as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives in Washington in 1812, who forced on Congress the resolution declaring war on Great Britain because they were raiding and destroying our ships on the high seas, and carrying our seamen away as prisoners into foreign dungeons or putting them to death when captured in their avocation beyond the protection of their own country, and Calhoun also wrote his philosophy of government into books which form bright jewels in our libraries and schools of political economy.

Was it not Thomas Jefferson, a southern man and the original organizer of the Democratic Party, who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase and added to our domain that vast stretch of valley and prairie land in the world now formed into mighty States with cities teeming with a mighty and independent population? Was it not James K. Polk, a southern man born on the soil of North Carolina, who added all that vast domain of the Southwest and Pacific coast and the Rocky Mountains, and Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, to our public domain to become great and immensely wealthy States of the Republic? Of this territory the great Democratic orator from Indiana, Daniel Voorhees, once said in a speech in the Senate, "It embraces more gold and silver than is contained in all the world besides." Polk's enemies charged that he was turning the Republic into an empire by this act and that the people would thereby lose their liberties, but the same flag floats over them to-day that floats from the Capitol at Washington, and their people enjoy the same liberty and protection of government as do the people of New York or Pennsylvania. And it was Sam Houston, the boy house carpenter from Virginia, whose journeys into the Southwest placed him in command of the army of patriots, battling against marauders and alien enemies who were seeking to make our Government a failure and to turn us back to the tyrants of Europe, and after that glorious victory in war and the more glorious achievements in setting up and governing the Republic of Texas brought it into our dominion to add the States of Texas, part of New Mexico, part of Oklahoma, and part of Colorado and Wyoming to our Republic. And Houston, after he had twice served as President of that short-lived but glorious Republic and was in the United States Senate from Texas, refused to allow interests he thought not best for the future safety of the Republic of the United States to put his name forward for the Democratic nomination for President when he might have had the nomination by consenting to accept it. And after this vast domain was added to our Republic, extending its borders to the shores of the farthest ocean and lifting its greatness to the heights of glory never before known among men and conducted it without the breath of scandal ever being breathed against it; and it was a Democrat in Congress, Andrew Johnson, born in North Carolina and without a home of his own, who was the father of our homestead laws which gave all that vast domain acquired by southern statesmen as homes for the people, an administration of equal justice in government that was only attempted once before in history, that being in Rome during the administration of Julius Cæsar and Mark Antony and his brother Lucius Antony and for which the conspiracy against their lives was hatched.

With this glorious record of southern Democracy in building and conducting this Republic to such exalted heights, why should we allow it now to be dragged into the dirt to satisfy the vain desires of some candidate for office who has no sympathy for the people who made it or for the party whose political faith he professes only to gain his ends and gratify the gall of his backers?

If you turn to the sentimental aspect which our gallant and glorious Southland has added to this Republic, you have only to stand at attention when a band plays our national anthem, the Star-Spangled Banner, written by a southern man on the greasy paper which had been wrapped around the coarse food that was brought him to eat while he was imprisoned in the hold of a British warship that was bombarding Fort McHenry in Chesapeake Bay.

When evil days came upon the Republic, and with them graft and scandal and outrages of justice and lowering of the standards of greatness and duties of government, was it not our Southland which gave to the world the martial air Dixie and the gallantry and bravery of the Confederate soldier? The escutcheon of the Southern Confederacy is adorned with more illustrious names in proportion to the duration of its existence than ever graced the pages of history of any government that ever existed. Of the Confederate nation Senator John W. Daniel, of Virginia, in an oration before the annual reunion of Confederate veterans at New Orleans in 1892 said:

"There was no Confederate before 1861 and there were none after 1865. The Confederacy marked its boundaries with the bayonet; it flashed into the family of nations like a sword from its scabbard; it vanished from the family of nations like a sword into its scabbard. Its birth was registered and its epitaph written in the blood of the brave. It was born, it lived, it died amid the roll of drum and the blast of the bugle, the rattle of musketry, and the thunder of cannon. Its constitution was dissolved in the flames of war; its flag fell to rise no more; its institutions perished."

The sons and grandsons of the Revolutionary War and the Mexican War—the Confederate soldiers—fought for the greatest principles ever advocated by man; the right of the States to govern themselves as they best saw fit. They whose forefathers had made America possible; and upon the foundation which they laid the present great United States of America is built. When they returned to their homes from what is called the Civil War (God only knows how anybody could call a war civil, yet it seems that that has been adopted and I have used it, not that I indorse it, but to express certain ideas) they were without money; their property gone; their servants all set free; no mules; no horses; no cows; no hogs; even the sheep and goats gone; their barren land, which had laid in waste for four long years many of the loved ones which they had left at home sleeping in the silent grave yards. Any other race of people would have been heartbroken, discouraged, possibly have gone as emigrants to another country more prosperous to look for something to eat and for happiness; but no, they spurned it and like the men they were, they went into their own homes, some of them pulled a plow while the good wife held it to plant the seed for sustenance for the body; and in the late hours of the night the good housewife would sit and sew that she and he might have cloth in such shape as to hide their nakedness; they went to work; they went to their churches on Sunday and worshiped their God and asked for His assistance. I say to you, my fellow citizens, that they were the builders of this Nation and they should demand the right to say what this Nation stands for and what its principles should be. They met the deadliest foes ever known to man, the carpetbagger, the scalawag, the thief, the robber, yea, more than that, the black faces that had been their servants, which God had not made their equal and who will never be their equal or their associates. They proved that they could not be treated thus for they threw off that yoke of thraldom and oppression. I repeat that no other people on earth would have done that or could have done it and I repeat that we are the backbone of the American Nation and if you take the South out of the American Nation to-day she would perish like Rome and Carthage and the other countries that are known now only in the dim pencillings of history. Then, why should we not demand our rights? Why should we not stand in the Democratic convention and say that "This is what we want and by the Eternal God we shall have it."

And in the Spanish-American War the South sent her troops and stood ready with every man, woman, and child within her borders to defend the United States and her people, and did gallant service when called upon.

If you look to our aid to humanity you will notice that it is the cotton of Dixie that clothes the naked and furnishes beds for the tired workman to rest upon from his toil; it furnishes the swaddling cloth which wraps the babe when it is born into the world, and it furnishes the winding sheet for old age when it quits the walks of life; it furnishes the sails for the ships which sail the Seven Seas and rope to hang traitors in all parts of the world; it makes life more comfortable for the rich and the poor, and it shelters the soldiers on the field and in the camp when war devastates the land; it is made into belts to drive your machinery in your factories. In fact, there is no other one article of production on which our civilization so much depends as it does on cotton.

And if you look still for bravery on the field of battle, I will remind you that it was the Thirtieth Division, composed of troops from South Carolina, North Carolina, and Tennessee which broke the Hindenburg line and sent William II into his present retreat at Doorn, where he afterwards furnished some enlightening interviews in one of which he expressed his view that Dixie was the greatest martial air that was ever written, and on that opinion I think he was qualified then to speak as an authority.

And yet there are Democrats to-day, so called, who are cursing the South. Adherents of some of the candidates for the Presidency have been condemning the South for doing things they do not approve of. Let me tell you that the South made this country and handled it for 40 years without a blot on its escutcheon. No charges of graft or corruption. I repeat, let the personal consequences be what they may, I favor the southern delegates to the next Democratic National Convention standing up in the convention and demanding to be represented and demanding that what they favor be written in the platform of the party, and if the two-thirds rule be abolished and their demands are not agreed to, that they withdraw from that convention and hold a Simon-pure Democratic convention and invite all of the citizens of the United States of America to join them in the election of their nominees; and not allow mugwumps and camouflaged so-called Democrats to control the Democratic convention; men who do not want the Democrats to succeed, but want both Democratic and Republican candidates from their own crowd, so it matters not which gets in, they win and the people lose. As I suggest, if anyone is to bolt, let it be them and not us. Why let delegates from States that never have and never will give the Democrats an electoral vote name whom we shall vote for and what issues we shall advocate?

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I also want to quote from The American Commonwealth, by Mr. Bryce, abridged edition of 1899, page 276.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In a remarkable letter written to Mr. Hodges (4th April, 1864) President Lincoln said:

"My oath to preserve the Constitution imposed upon me the duty of preserving by every indispensable means that Government, that Nation, of which the Constitution was the organic law. Was it possible to lose the Nation and yet preserve the Constitution? By general law life and limb must be protected, yet often a limb must be amputated to save a life, but a life is never wisely given to save a limb. I felt that measures, otherwise unconstitutional, might become lawful by becoming indispensable for the preservation of the Constitution through the preservation of the Nation. Right or wrong, I assume this ground, and now avow it. I could not feel that to the best of my ability I had even tried to preserve the Constitution, if, to save slavery or any minor matter, I should permit the wreck of Government, country, and Constitution altogether."

Such as expenditure of vast sums on "internal improvements" and the assumptions of wide powers over internal communications.

"Truth of War Conspiracy in 1861," by H. W. Johnson, proves that Mr. Lincoln violated an armistice when he clandestinely sent reinforcements to Fort Sumter in April, 1861. In July, 1861, Mr. Lincoln asked Congress to adopt the resolution, as follows:

"Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That all the extraordinary acts, proclamations, and orders hereinbefore mentioned be, and the same are hereby, approved and declared to be in all respects legal and valid to the same, and with the same effect as if they had been issued and done under the previous express authority and direction of the Congress of the United States."

Congress adjourned without considering the resolution. He used military (the limb) provided by the people to protect the Constitution (organic law) contrary to his oath, and overrode the Constitution (life) by using military dictatorially. His acknowledgments are "I felt that measures otherwise unconstitutional," and his application to Congress to sanction his acts in resolution shown above. Contradictory and ambiguous! Congressman Lincoln on the 18th of January, 1848, said:

"Any people anywhere, being inclined and having the power, have the right to rise up and shake off the existing Government and form a new one that suits them better. This is a most valuable, a most sacred right—a right which we hope and believe is to liberate the world. Nor is this right confined to cases in which the whole people of an existing government may choose to exercise it. Any portion of such people that can may revolutionize and make so much of their own territory as they inhabit. More than this, a majority of any portion of such people may revolutionize, putting down a minority intermingled or near about them who may oppose their movements."

How many people revolutionize and change a government without seceding from the former government? Was not that a good secession remark? (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or the Globe.)

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I also wish to print from The Confederate Cause and Conduct in the War Between the States by McGuire and Christian, and also Messages and Papers of the President, copyrighted by James D. Richardson in 1897, Mr. Lincoln's message to Congress of December 13, 1863, page 3389. I ask to have these printed, because I do not care to take the time of the Senate to read them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CONFEDERATE CAUSE AND CONDUCT IN THE WAR BETWEEN THE STATES

(By McGuire and Christian, pp. 13, 14)

After the failure of the "peace conference" inaugurated by Virginia in her most earnest effort to prevent war between the sections, and during the sessions of the Virginia conventions, that body determined to send commissioners to Washington to ascertain, if possible, what course Mr. Lincoln intended to pursue toward the seceded States, since it was impossible to determine this course from the ambiguous language employed in his inaugural address. These commissioners, the Hon. William Ballard Preston, Alexander H. H. Stuart, and George W. Randolph went to Washington and had an interview with Mr. Lincoln, and an account of that interview will be found in the first volume Southern Historical Papers at page 443. At page 452 Mr. Stuart says, "I remember that he [Lincoln] used this homely expression, 'If I do that [recognize the Southern Confederacy] what will become of my revenue? I might as well shut up housekeeping at once.'" "But," says Mr. Stuart, "his declarations were distinctly pacific, and he expressly disclaimed all purposes of war."

Mr. Seward, the Secretary of State, and Mr. Bates, the Attorney General, also gave Mr. Stuart the same assurances of peace. That night the commissioners returned to Richmond, and the same train on which they traveled brought Mr. Lincoln's proclamation calling for 75,000 men to wage war of coercion against the Southern States.

"This proclamation," says Mr. Stuart, "was carefully withheld from us, although it was in print, and we knew nothing of it until Monday morning when it appeared in the Richmond papers. When I saw it at breakfast, I thought it must be a mischievous hoax, for I could not believe Lincoln guilty of such duplicity. This proclamation is now conceded by nearly all northern writers to be a virtual declaration of war, which Congress alone has the power to declare. And yet Mr. Lincoln in violation of the Constitution and of his oath did all these things before Congress was allowed to assemble on the 4th of July, 1861. It is shown above that Mr. Lincoln submitted a resolution to Congress asking that his "extraordinary acts" be legalized, but Congress adjourned without acting upon the resolution. However, Mr. Lincoln continued his usurpation of authority to wage war.

Mr. Lincoln was Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States and took oath to observe the following laws concerning property, as understood and stated by General McClellan: "In prosecuting the war all private property and unarmed persons should be strictly protected, subject only to the necessity of military operations. All property taken for military use should be paid or receipted for, pillage and waste should be treated as high crimes, and all unnecessary trespass sternly prohibited, and offensive demeanor by military toward citizens promptly rebuked."

"And yet within two weeks from that time the Federal Secretary of War, by order of Mr. Lincoln, issued an order to the military commanders in Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas directing them to seize and use any property belonging to the inhabitants of the Confederacy which might be necessary or convenient for their several commands, and no provision was made for any compensation to owners of private property thus directed to be seized and appropriated."

The following is the report of General Sherman after his march through Georgia: "We consumed the corn and fodder in the region of country 30 miles on either side of a line from Atlanta to Savannah; also sweet potatoes, hogs, sheep, and poultry, and carried off more than 10,000 horses and mules; estimate the damage to the State of Georgia at $100,000,000, at least twenty millions of which inured to our benefit, and the remainder was simply waste and destruction."

General Halleck, Mr. Lincoln's Chief of Staff, wrote to General Sherman on December 18, 1865, as follows: "Should you capture Charleston, I hope that by some accident it may be destroyed; and if a little salt should be thrown upon its site it may prevent the future growth of nullification and secession." To which General Sherman replied, 18th of same month: "I will bear in mind your hint as to Charleston, and do not think that salt will be necessary," indicating, by writing, destruction of the place.

MR. LINCOLN'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS, DECEMBER 13, 1863

"According to our political system, as a matter of civil administration, the general Government had no lawful power to effect emancipation in any State, and for a long time it had been hoped that the rebellion could be suppressed without resorting to it as a military measure." However, on same page is stated he enticed 100,000 slaves from the South, enlisted them in his Army, and returned them South to murder their former owners. Northerners sold those slaves to southerners, and were never honest enough to return the purchase money. If those negroes had gained southern territory, what would they have done to old men, women, and children under influence of hating northerners? Was not Mr. Lincoln an insurrectionist? Other instances in that direction may be cited.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S ANNUAL ADDRESS, DECEMBER 4, 1865

The next step which I have taken to restore the constitutional relations of the States has been an invitation to them to participate in the high office of amending the Constitution. Every patriot must wish for a general amnesty at the earliest epoch consistent with public safety. For this great end there is need of a concurrence of all opinions and spirit of mutual conciliation. All parties in this late conflict must work together in harmony. It is not too much to ask in the name of the whole people, that on the one side the plan of restoration shall proceed in conformity with willingness to cast the disorders of the past into oblivion, and that the other evidences of sincerity in the maintenance of the Union shall be beyond any doubt of the proposed amendment to the Constitution which provides for the abolition of slavery forever within the limits of our country. So long as the adoption is delayed, so long will doubt and jealousy and uncertainty prevail. This is the measure which will efface the sad memory of the past; this is the measure which will most certainly call population and capital and security to the parts of the Union that needs it most. Indeed, it is not too much to ask of the States which are now resuming their places in the family of the Union to give this pledge of perpetual loyalty and peace. Until this is done, the past, however much we may desire it, will not be forgotten. The adoption of the amendment reunites us beyond all power of disruption; it heals the wound that still is imperfectly closed; it removes slavery, the element which has so long perplexed and divided the country; it makes of us once more a united people, renewed and strengthened, bound more than ever to mutual affection and support.

Mr. Johnson said, December 18, 1865:

"The people of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Tennessee have reorganized their respective State governments and are yielding obedience to the laws of the United States. The proposed amendment to the Constitution providing for the abolition of slavery forever within the limits of the country, has been ratified by each one of those States."

If Mr. Lincoln's emancipation proclamation was not in violation of his constitutional oath, why necessity for the thirteenth amendment? Bolshevists and Reds from the North, also Congressmen, by oppression, forced that amendment by Southern States.

Mr. BLEASE. I also ask, in order to save time, for leave to insert an extract from the history of J. L. M. Curry, pages 202, 207, 208, 211, 213, 217, 229, and 242.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

New York more explicitly said: "That the powers of government may be reassumed by the people whenever it should become necessary to their happiness; that every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not by the said Constitution clearly delegated to the Congress of the United States or the departments of the Government thereof remains to the people of the several States or to their respective State governments, to whom they may have granted the same; and that those clauses in the said Constitution which declares that Congress should not have or exercise certain powers do not imply that Congress is entitled to any powers not given by the said Constitution, but such clauses are to be construed either as exceptions to certain specified powers or as inserted merely for greater caution." Rhode Island lingered until 1790, and then adopted the cautious phraseology of New York, specifying certain rights and declaring that they shall not be abridged or violated, and that the proposed amendments would speedily become a part of the Constitution, gave her assent to the compact, but declared that "the powers of government may be reassumed by the people whenever it shall become necessary to their happiness." (5 Bureau of Rolls, 140–145, 190, 191, 311.)

WHY THE SOUTH RESISTED FEDERAL ENCROACHMENTS

It can now clearly be seen why the South, being a minority section, with agriculture as the chief occupation, and with the peculiar institution of African slavery fastened on her by old England and New England, adhered to the State rights, or Jeffersonian, school of politics. Those doctrines contain the only principles or policy truly conservative of the Constitution. Apart from them, checks and limitations are of little avail, and the Federal Government can increase its powers indefinitely. Without some adequate restraint or interposition, the whole character of the Government is changed and forms, if retained, will be, as they have been in other countries, merely the disguises for accomplishing what selfishness or ambition may dictate. The truest friends of the Republic have been those who have insisted upon obedience to constitutional requirements. The real emenies, the true disunionists, have been those who, under the disguise of a deceptive name, have perverted the name and true functions of the Government and have usurped for selfish or partisan ends, or at the demand of crazy fanaticism, powers which States never surrendered.

Those who contend most strenuously for the rights of the States and for a strict construction of the Constitution are the genuine lovers and friends of the Union. Their principles conserve law, good order, justice, established authority; and their unselfish purpose has been to preserve and transmit our free institutions as they came from the fathers, sincerely believing that their course and doctrines were necessary to preserve for them and posterity the blessings of good government. The States have no motive to encroach on the Federal Government, and no power to do so, if so inclined, while the Federal Government has always the inclination and always the means to go beyond what has been granted to it. No higher encomium could be rendered to the South than the fact, sustained by her whole history, that she never violated the Constitution, that she committed no aggression upon the rights or property of the North, and that she simply asked equality in the Union and the enforcement and maintenance of her clearest rights and guarantees. The latitudinous construction, contended for by one party and one section, has been the open door through which have entered the grievances of which the people have complained. A strict construction gives to the General Government all the powers it can beneficially exert, all that is necessary for it to have, and all that the States ever purposed to grant.

Passion, revenge, cupidity, ignorance, and fanaticism have created an incurable misunderstanding of secession, its source, and object. In its simplest form and logically it meant a peaceable and orderly withdrawal from the compact of union, a dissolution of the civil partnership, a claim of the paramount allegiance of citizens, a declension to continue under the obligations due to or from the Federal Government or the other States. The authority of the Constitution remained intact and unimpaired over the States remaining in the Union and ceased only as to the seceding States. The remaining or continuing States had no right of coercion nor of placing the "wayward sisters" in the attitude of an enemy.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I also desire to call attention to the fact that not only those whom I have already mentioned, but other great southerners have done a great work for this country. I wish I could refer particularly to one as a southerner, but who was elected from the State of New Jersey. That is as far as I shall comment. Others may accept him as a southerner and give him credit such as they think he deserves, which possibly I might not.

On the 19th of this month in the South—and I am speaking particularly for my own State—bells were rung in the churches and in the city halls, meetings were held in schoolhouses, in social clubrooms, in libraries, courthouses, and other places, and addresses were made by some of our most distinguished people in honor of that matchless leader, Robert E. Lee, and in honor of the men who some people say were technically guilty of treason. I want to read a few of the names of those who were technically guilty of treason.

The first one is that of Wade Hampton, who sat in this Chamber after he had redeemed, through his leadership, the State of South Carolina from the dirtiest, meanest, vilest, most corrupt set of thieves, backed by negro ex-slaves, that ever disgraced any State in the American Union. They were camp followers of Sherman's army, the man to whom Halleck said, in writing to him, "I hope that when you reach South Carolina you will remember Charleston and the balance of that State, and use a little salt, if necessary." Sherman sent him word back that he need not be uneasy. Yes, but God knows the women and children of South Carolina were uneasy when his dirty, cowardly assassins set fire to our homes, robbed our women and children, snatched off of their hands and off of their necks the jewelry they had on, and in some instances did worse; I will not say what, with these ladies in this gallery.

That is the crowd Wade Hampton drove out of South Carolina. That is the crowd from which Wade Hampton and his followers restored to the United States a State and a people brave, honest, and independent, and to-day, if you were to start a search for pure, unmixed American blood, you would find more of it in the State of South Carolina than in any other State in the American Union.

Matthew C. Butler sat in this Hall for a long time; and right there, Mr. President, I want to correct a Senator who the other day, I know of course inadvertently, referred to the Butler case. Butler was never voted on because he was a Confederate soldier. That question was not raised in the Butler case, and if you will turn to page 637, Senate Documents, volume 3, Fifty-eighth Congress, special session, 1903, you will find the case of David T. Corbin against Matthew C. Butler. That case was where the Republicans—and when I say "Republicans," I hesitate to use the word. When I come here and see what the Republican Party in this Senate is composed of, and think about that crowd, I really think I do the present-day Republican Party an injustice in calling that crowd, whose very existence was a stench in the nostrils of decent people, by the name "Republican."

In South Carolina there were supposed to be two houses of the legislature. One was called the Mackey house, composed of negroes and scalawags. I think possibly there were a few renegades, the lowest type of humanity, native South Carolinians, in that body. The other was called the Wallace house, presided over by that distinguished jurist, William H. Wallace, of South Carolina.

They wrangled for quite some time as to which was the house to be recognized. Finally, when the Federal troops were taken out of the State and withdrawn, the Wallace house elected Matthew C. Butler to the United States Senate. He had been a general in the Confederate Army and a gallant one, as any man who was there will testify.

The question in this body was not whether General Butler had been a Confederate soldier or not; not whether he was technically guilty of treason or not. The question was, Did the house known as the Wallace house have the right and the power to appoint or elect a Senator? The United States Senate seated Butler, not on account of, nor did they take into consideration the question of, the Civil War; but they decided that he was entitled to his seat. If for no other reason than that I would have voted and expect to vote to seat WILLIAM S. VARE in this body because it was Don Cameron, of Pennsylvania, who, by his influence, turned the tide in favor of South Carolina then, and so far as I know she has never proven to be ungrateful up to this time.

Then as generals we had in that war Joseph B. Kershaw; Micah Jenkins; Maxcy Gregg; Richard H. Anderson; Johnson Hagood; Ellison Capers, a general in that war who afterwards became bishop of the Episcopal Church of South Carolina, one of the finest, one of the truest, one of the most capable men that God ever put breath in the body of; Roswell S. Ripley; M. L. Burham; Bernard E. Lee; N. G. Evans; Samuel McGowan; Benjamin Huger; and others—thousands as brave and true who served as officers and in the ranks as privates. Any man who says those men were technically guilty of treason, knowing what the southern people have done for this Nation and in the building of it, does not know what he is talking about.

Oh, somebody said Congress said they were technically guilty of treason. Somebody said the courts said they were technically guilty of treason. I have no respect for the Congress that said it and no respect for any court that delivered any such opinion. If that be treason or technical treason, then as Patrick Henry said, "make the most of it."

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BLEASE. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. Did the Senator ever hear the tribute paid by a colored man to Bishop Polk, of whom he has just spoken? May I recall it?

Mr. BLEASE. I am glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. BRUCE. I happen to be somewhat familiar with his career, and gladly subscribed to everything the Senator has said on that subject.

Some years ago a gentleman told me this story about him. He said Bishop Polk was down in New Orleans on one occasion and a colored bootblack was blacking his shoes. The colored man addressed him as "general." Bishop Polk, who is a superb looking man, a man of glorious features and figure, said, "I am not a general." The colored bootblack addressed him a few moments later as "admiral." Bishop Polk said, "I am not an admiral." Then the colored man said, "Well, then, what is you?" Bishop Polk then said, "I am a bishop." "Well," the colored bootblack said, "I knew whatever you was, you was at the top." [Laughter.]

Mr. BLEASE. I am obliged to the Senator.

Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article from the Dorchester County (S. C.) Record of January 19, 1928, headed "Lee's birthday," and also an article entitled "The voice of the people," from the Richmond Times-Dispatch of December 29, 1927.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The articles are as follows:

[From the Dorchester County (S. C.) Record, January 19, 1928]

LEE'S BIRTHDAY

To-day is a day when the whole South should stop to pay consideration to the memory of one of the greatest and best men that ever blessed this world with the works and example of his life, and the whole world might well do likewise. It is the anniversary of the birth of Robert E. Lee, "Marse Robert," as he was affectionately called by the men in gray whom he so valiantly led in defense of their convictions as to their rights. He is well worthy of memory as a soldier, one of the greatest that ever maneuvered armies and fought battles. As a general there have been others with greater military genius. There are those who claim that distinction for Jackson, the two Johnstons, and Kirby Smith, who also wore the gray. But as a man, a clean, noble, high-minded man, he has few equals and no superiors.

Far greater than his wonderful exploits on battle fields with outnumbered armies, whose equipment was also far beneath that of the foes they opposed, were his peace-time achievements. His work at Washington College, now appropriately bearing the names of the two great Virginians, Washington and Lee, stamps him as a man of supreme vision. Trained in a military school, West Point, he might not have been supposed to have been adequately equipped to be head of a civil college. Yet he visioned the educational needs of the prostrate South with keener and broader vision than those apparently better trained to head such colleges. He established the first school of journalism, because of the South's supreme need of trained journalists to lead the work of rehabilitation, rather than the old school of controversial editorialists, who had used the papers of the South to inflame its passions and bring on that war in which Lee nobly did his duty, though he had wanted it averted. And also he established an engineering school, because of the South's need of men equipped to take the lead in development of her resources, which had not been developed as they should have been before the war because of the easy life the institution of slavery permitted. And he made a law school where law was taught instead of its being read in the offices of lawyers.

How great he was in defeat! How quietly he turned aside the offer of a salary as president of an insurance company many, many times greater than the meager stipend that came to him as the head of a poor and struggling college. How fine his reason for declining that salary, that he had no knowledge of the business of insurance. And what quiet manliness in his reply when told that others would do the work and he was wanted as president because of the business that would come because he was president, that his name was not for sale.

And then, too, what more splendid than his refusal of an offer from his English admirers of an estate that would have supported him in ease and comfort, because acceptance of such an offer was incompatible with his self-respect and would have kept him from serving his country and his people as he wished to do.

The explanation of Lee? He came of noble people. Blood will tell. His father was a great figure in the Revolution, and his mother a modern Cornelia. She largely raised him because of his father's failing health. But the best explanation of Lee is his understanding and appreciation of duty, which he declared "the noblest word in the English language."

Anyone who has attended a military school knows what endless rules there are for governance of cadets, some of them seemingly quite "footy" and made only to be broken. Yet Lee was four years at West Point without one demerit mark. He broke no rule, no matter how silly or unimportant it seemed. Duty demanded they be obeyed and he obeyed them. He never went contrary to what he conceived to be duty. That West Point record best explains Lee.

MORE ABOUT LINCOLN

To EDITOR OF THE TIMES-DISPATCH.

SIR: I hesitate to take up space in your paper by protracting the debate over Lincoln, but the letter of "Westerner" in your issue of December 23 is such an instance of the special pleading in which northern writers have indulged that an answer to him is, in a way, an answer to many others.

Without inquiring into the accuracy of the statements of Mr. Easley, it is very clear that the intention of "Westerner" is to absolve Lincoln from responsibility for the barbarous warfare of his odious lieutenants, Sheridan and Sherman. He assumes that because neither Sherman nor Sheridan gave Lincoln any account of their enormities that, therefore, he was ignorant of them. But, how absurd! These enormities continued for weeks and months, and it is ridiculous to suppose that the President of the Northern States, with all the agencies at his disposal, could be uninformed of them. The newspapers both North and South were full of them, and President Davis's protests against these outrages were well known.

As a matter of fact, they were directly instigated by Lincoln. It is a well-known principle of the international law that no private property, even of an individual in arms, can be taken except from military necessities, and, if taken for that reason, should be paid for, and pillage and waste are strictly prohibited. This rule of justice and humanity was adopted in 1861 by the Federal Government for the government of its armies, and yet in July, 1862, before the war had lasted but little more than a year, Mr. Stanton, the Federal Secretary of War, by order of the President, authorized Federal commanders everywhere in the South to seize and use any private property which might be necessary for their military commands, and no provision whatever was made for compensation. From this order, of course, there was only one step to universal pillage and destruction, and in 1864 eastern Virginia was more completely destroyed without orders from General Grant than the Valley of Virginia was with orders. Lincoln never lifted once a staying hand!

But this is not the whole story by a vast deal. The indictment against Lincoln as the head of the Government is ghastly! To reduce the South to submission, Lincoln issued a proclamation threatening with hanging as pirates all Confederate privateersmen and as guerrillas regularly commissioned partisans. The cartel of exchange was suspended and medicines were made contraband—the first time it was so done in the annals of history—and all supplies and gifts to Confederate soldiers in northern prisons were prohibited. Within the areas embraced by the Union lines the oath of allegiance was required of both sexes above 16 years of age under penalty of being driven from their homes.

By an order in 1864 all male noncombatants on the farms from 17 years old to 50 years were made subject to arrest, and under the pretext of this authority boys of 12 years and old men of 60 and 70 were hurried off to confinement, till in my native county of Charles City there was scarcely anyone of the male sex left on the plantations. I know the fact that the defenseless condition of the women and children in the county was directly brought to Lincoln's attention by my own mother, and this great, humane President did nothing beyond referring her letter to Ben Butler, of odious memory, then in command of the district. Never was there a more terrible indictment of Lincoln's government made by any southern man than was made by Charles Francis Adams, a Federal brigadier general and member of an illustrious family in New England, who declared that the policy of the Federal Government during the last stages of the war was the policy of unbridled inhumanity. Lincoln never rebuked Sheridan, Sherman, or Grant for their destructive courses, and Secretary Chase in his diary says that Lincoln declared, when the question of arming the slaves was under discussion in the Cabinet, that "he was pretty well cured of any objections to any measure except want of adaptness in putting down the rebellion." Everybody knows that the most adaptable, though the least humane, means to put down resistance are wholesale murder and wanton destruction, the methods employed in the Dark Ages.

"Westerner" appears to assert that the Emancipation Proclamation "clearly defined the issue between the two sections as one of freedom versus slavery." If this is a fact, he makes Lincoln out a very great ass or a very great hypocrite. He admits that Lincoln denied such an interpretation of the war, and instead of fighting for slavery the South would never have fought at all if Lincoln had not denied the right of self-determination. The Government of the United States was founded for nothing more than what their fathers had contended for—the right of governing themselves. The linking of slavery with secession is merely an attempt to cloud the real issue and prejudice the cause of the South.

Lincoln talked as if man was made for government rather than government was made for man, and his action in sending down South great armies who destroyed the property and took the lives of people who never injured him, was a colossal crime.

Of course, Lincoln's proclamation did not free the slaves. It was addressed to a country over which he had no control, and it had no legal status even when the Southern Confederacy collapsed. "Westerner" is mistaken in supposing that Congress gave Lincoln permission to issue it. Rhodes, the historian, about whom all that can be said is that, while an intense northern partisan, he is fairer than most northern historians, declares in his history, volume 4, page 213: "There was, as every one knows, no authority for the proclamation in the Constitution, nor was there any statute that warranted it"; and the Supreme Court of the United States in Ex parte Milligan (4 Wallace, p. 120), declared that "the Constitution was a Constitution equally for war and peace and none of its provisions could be suspended by any exigency of government." So that Lincoln's proclamation was a mere brutum fulmen, and it was the thirteenth amendment afterwards which gave emancipation any form of legality.

Undoubtedly the main purpose of the proclamation was to excite an insurrection of the slaves. Lincoln declared the measure a war measure, and an insurrection would have proved the best war result known, as it would have broken up the Confederate armies. While he did not dare in the face of the world to declare that such was his object, it is proved that he realized the natural consequences by his saying to a committee of clergymen from Chicago, only 10 days before his proclamation, that he would not be deterred from acting when the proper time for emancipation came "by objections of a moral nature in view of possible consequences of insurrection and massacre in the Southern States." Undoubtedly the passivity of the slaves greatly surprised him, as it did everybody else in the North, who had been taught to believe that the plantations in the South were hells of cruelty.

The "crass ignorance" which "Westerner" ascribes to some southerners regarding Lincoln's religious beliefs is one shared in by them with Herndon and Lamon, intimate friends of Lincoln and his biographers. His invoking God in his message did not make him a Christian, for Mohammedans and many other sects who are not Christians call upon God and make vows to Him.

And as to the letter to Mrs. Bixby, there is nothing in the letter, except the rhetoric, which any of our Presidents might not have written.

But one swallow does not make a spring, and one letter is not enough to give a man a character. There are other letters which concern Lincoln's own individuality, and these would hardly be an ornament to Brasenose College. There is the letter written by Lincoln to Mrs. Browning regarding a lady to whom he had proposed and by whom, much to his surprise, he had been rejected. This letter, whose genuineness is attested by its inclusion in Hay and Nicolay's Complete Works of Abraham Lincoln, is full of coarse suggestions and base insinuations. By itself it evidences a fundamental failure in Lincoln which is not excused by his youth of 25 years. It is impossible to suppose that Jefferson Davis could have written such a letter.

Then, perhaps, quite as damaging to any test of idealism as a hero is another letter written at the close of his administration. He kept his son, Robert Todd Lincoln, at Harvard University till 1865, when he wrote the following to General Grant:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 19, 1865.

Lieutenant General GRANT:

Please read and answer this letter as though I was not President, but only a friend. My son, now in his twenty-second year, having graduated at Harvard, wishes to see something of the war before it ends. I do not wish to put him in the ranks, nor yet to give him a commission, to which those who have already served long are better entitled and better qualified to hold. Could he, without embarrassment to you or detriment to the service, go into your military family, with some nominal rank, I, and not the public, furnishing this necessary means? If no, say so without the least hesitation, because I am as anxious and as deeply interested that you shall not be encumbered as you can be yourself.

Yours truly,

A. LINCOLN.

It will be noticed that Lincoln was averse to putting his son in the ranks where danger was, but wanted him to have a safe place in General Grant's military family. To form a judgment of this it must be borne in mind that Lincoln had approved and enforced the conscript act of 1863, by which thousands of young men, perhaps Mrs. Bixby's own sons, for all I know, had been forced into the ranks to become victims to southern cannon and gunfire. And of all men it was incumbent upon him and his son to afford the sacrificial example of devotion and patriotism.

How impossible it would have been for Jefferson Davis to have written such a letter. Robert E. Lee's youngest son served as a private in the Confederate ranks. John Tyler, who was President in more happy days, had two sons, aged 16 and 18, private soldiers who surrendered at Appomatox. No doubt all three of these boys had sufficient influence to have gotten into some bomb-proofed position, but they would have scorned to make the application, and their parents would have scorned to make the application for them.

LYON G. TYLER.

Mr. BLEASE. If Robert E. Lee was technically guilty of treason, it does not seem to me that the President of these United States would pay tribute to him as he did—a President for whom I have the highest regard. I think he is, as near as a man well can be, President of all the people of this Nation; and, although I love some of the gentlemen who have announced themselves as candidates in that race, I would love to see the Republican Party get together and renominate, and I would not shed a tear if they reelected Calvin Coolidge as President of the United States.

I noticed in the Washington Post of Friday, January 20, the following item:

The Chief of Staff of the Army, Maj. Gen. Charles P. Summerall, is in Baltimore where he went to attend the celebration of the birthday anniversary of Gen. Robert E. Lee and Gen. Stonewall Jackson by the United Daughters of the Confederacy, yesterday.

Why not yank him up and say that as head of the Army he has no right to attend a celebration in honor of this gentleman and his soldiers who were "technically guilty of treason" to the United States of America?

Mr. President, I could go on and on with the reading of further extracts from speeches made by very distinguished and able people on the life and character of Robert E. Lee, but I shall not take the time of the Senate for that purpose. I thank the Senate for the courtesy of allowing me to insert in the RECORD the articles from books and the manuscript of mine to which I have referred.

I wish to ask, however, permission to insert one more brief quotation from The Republic of Republics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WHAT THE FATHERS SAY ON SELF-DEFENSE OF STATES

Said Doctor Johnson, one of the most eminent lawyers and statesmen of Connecticut, in the Federal convention: "If States as such are to exist, they ought to have the means of defending themselves." (V. Ell. Deb. 255.)

* * * * *

And even James Wilson, the leading statesman of Pennsylvania—afterwards one of the Federal Supreme Judges—advances the same idea, as was unavoidable from the nature of things. He asserted that the absolute sovereignty never "goes from the people," but "remains in them after a constitution is made"; that making constitutions is "dispensing such portions of power" as "the public welfare" requires; that ratifying the Federal Constitution was "delegating Federal powers"; and that the general Government is "a Federal body of our own creation." And, said he: The Constitution "receives its political existence from their (the people's) authority; they ordain and establish. What is the necessary consequence? Those who ordain and establish have the power, if they think proper, to repeal and annul."

* * * * *

Beyond question, then, not only has the Federal agency no right to coerce its makers, as I have heretofore shown, but these makers have, as against it, unlimited right of self-defense, by withdrawing delegations, and recalling their citizens from Federal offices; by disassociation; and by fighting, if need be, the Federal Government.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, my father was a Confederate soldier and three of his brothers were Confederate soldiers. Four of the brothers of my mother were Confederate soldiers. As to their records, I need not speak. South Carolina knows their records. In 1910 and 1912 and again in 1924 they gave credit to those soldiers, although they have long since passed from this earth, by casting their ballots for the son of one of them.

I take no part in this religious discussion, because I am a Methodist. I am a Methodist for only one reason, if one reason is sufficient, and that is because my mother was a Methodist. I hope I am a Democrat. Sometimes I doubt it. But I know I am a State rights Democrat. I know that.

When I was a young man I came to Washington. I attended Georgetown University. I graduated there. I boarded for nine months in a Catholic home. I often went to St. Aloysius Church. My dear sister, whom I loved only as a man can love both mother and sister, because my mother died when I was a baby, married a Catholic. I loved him as much as I did any brother I had. She has in the State of South Carolina to-day two of the finest boys in this world. They, at their father's request, were made Catholics. Therefore, I can not have and never expect to have any feeling against any man on account of his religion. If he believes that that kind of religion will take him to Heaven, for God's sake let him have it. If he wants to believe in evolution and believe that his granddaddy and grandmammy were monkeys, that is none of my business; but I do not believe mine were.

I hope I have said nothing unkind, but I could not let pass unnoticed the statement that the Confederate soldiers were "technically guilty of treason." I have used as strong language as I could use, I think, and still remain within the rules of the Senate. If a man were to tell me to my face on the outside of the Senate that a Confederate soldier was technically guilty of treason, I would call him what every true-blooded white man south of the Potomac River would fight about right now if he were called by that appellation. I am an American and a South Carolinian and pray God to bless both and all mankind.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, whatever the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] may say about bootlegging and illicit stills in various localities, the fact remains that there has been so much less drinking and conditions have so much improved under prohibition that there is practically no probability that the prohibition law will ever be repealed.

With the advent of another session of Congress the same old minority of wet appetites is marching on the Capitol—marching to receive the usual knockout from the drys in Congress. On their banners might well appear the inscription, "Appetite is God and alcohol is its prophet." They are the Sancho Panzas in the trail of the Don Quixote of modern times—old John Barleycorn, pretender of the House of Bourbon in the United States. They still seem to consider the yearning for drink an aspiration for liberty. I look to see them propose a new national anthem, entitled "Oh, Hand Me Down That Bottle of Corn." They are still attempting in the name of freedom to reestablish on a legal basis the traffic in alcohol, a traffic that ministers to the basest passions of the human race—a traffic that multiplies criminals and increases crime—a traffic that makes the honor of officials a thing to be exchanged for gold—a traffic that brings the atmosphere of the barroom and the slum to the homes and entertainments of many of the so-termed social elect—a traffic fed by rum pirates who fire on the American flag. Fortunate it is that the wets are in the minority, else they would sink our civilization for the sake of drink. Little do they understand the temper of those whose votes and efforts have placed beverage alcohol under the heel of the law if they suppose that we will yield for a moment or in any degree either to them or to the traffic they would restore.

They still fail to understand that in the permanent view of a permanent majority of the American people there is no legitimate use for beverage alcohol in any part of this Nation.

Clearly the time has come to put the whole damp aggregation on notice that the American people will not permit the thirst of the minority to dictate the policies or to overturn the duly and constitutionally established laws of this Republic. The wets have reached the point where they actually ask the repeal of a law because some people will not obey it.

Obedience to law, especially by the opposing minority, is the bedrock of this Nation. The American Republic is the creation of majorities—majorities of States, acting as such, devising and amending the Federal Constitution; majorities of the people in the States determining State constitutions, determining the membership and commanding the policies of the Federal Congress and the State legislatures. Behind internal peace and order, the basic requisites of all progress, is the obligation of every citizen to take up arms if need be to enforce the law. It has not been necessary as yet to invoke this obligation on any substantial scale and we trust it never shall be. Gunmen, thieves, robbers, bootleggers, and the breakers of all laws, however, may as well understand now as later that the patience of the American people can be tempted to the breaking point. The lawless few will never be permitted to terrorize or to control this Nation. Least of all will they be permitted to write or to repeal its laws. If a law must be repealed because a minority defies it, no law, however beneficent, will be secure.

They tell us that prohibition makes a Nation of hypocrites and lawbreakers. We tell them that if an individual must become a hypocrite and a lawbreaker to obtain an intoxicant we have made it that much harder for the individual to use it, that for these very reasons millions will retrace their steps who, if free and legal access to intoxicating drink existed, would go to misery and ruin. National prohibition is the greatest obstacle yet placed between the liquor traffic and millions of possible victims—the most effective blow the trade has ever received and the wets know it. Else why are they so desperately endeavoring to overthrow prohibition? So desperate have they become that they interpret the most insignificant and untypical occurrence as indications of what they call a trend against prohibition. When a wet city goes wet they say it portends a revolution. Evidently they would mistake the popping of a cork for a peal of thunder. The truth is we have had them on the run since the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act were adopted. We have them on the run to-day and we propose to keep them on the run. It is good exercise for the drys.

They tell us that prohibition stirs resentment in the human heart and manufactures violators by its very nature. That argument was devised in hell for the undoing of mankind. When God said to the first human beings, you shall not eat the fruit of a certain tree, He became the first prohibitionist. He tried to regulate the personal habits of individuals, told them what they should not eat, interfered with their personal liberty. Then the devil, more subtle than all the beasts of the field, began his successful temptation of humanity by calling attention to the fact that the command of God had begun with the prohibitory words "Ye shall not."

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. BRUCE. I merely wish to remind the Senator from Texas, however, that almost as soon as the prohibition about forbidden fruit was imposed Adam and Eve began to see snakes. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly, and the Senator is trying to persuade us that the American people are seeing snakes now when they are not.

Thus Satan planted rebellion in the human soul, became the first antiprohibitionist, and has been the logical wet leader ever since. Even the Apostle Paul recognized the power of this form of temptation when he said:

> I had not known coveting except the law had said, thou shalt not covet.

But this was not to him an argument against law or an excuse for its violation. From that day to this the most stubborn handicap of all law, human and divine, has been this hellborn impulse to resist the commands of conscience, of country, and of God. It is of the utmost importance that the prohibitions of earthly law shall be in harmony with those of God. The path to every crime prohibited by the Deity is made easier by alcoholic drink, which breaks down the physical, moral, and intellectual strength of untold multitudes of men and women. Who will assert that the prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic drink is not in direct consonance with the decrees and purposes of divinity? Of course, there a few supermen and superwomen who tell us drink does them no harm, who would send hosts of others to damnation to preserve what they describe as their privilege and right, who despise and flaunt the law, and become the patrons of illicit trade. They only serve to emphasize the general condition, and to them may be commended the scripture, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked."

It is evident that no cause ever rested on a sounder foundation than does nation-wide prohibition. It is the cause of a higher civilization—of home, church, school, mother, wife, and child. With the confidence that comes from a sense of right, the assurance that issues from a conviction of justice—the devotion that accompanies a crusade for God and humanity we challenge the wets before Congress and the people. We placed prohibition in the National Constitution by a vote of 46 of the 48 States of the American Union. Since then three Congresses have been elected and all have been overwhelmingly dry. Since then our country has registered an economic progress unequaled in all preceding history. Again we invite a renewal of the conflict, and again prohibition America will emerge triumphant and unscathed.

BRIDGE ACROSS HILLSBORO BAY, TAMPA, FLA.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on the 16th of the present month the House passed a bill (H. R. 7218) to legalize a bridge across Hillsboro Bay at Twenty-second Street, Tampa, Fla. On December 17, 1927, I introduced Senate bill 1917, containing the same provisions. The Committee on Commerce has reported Senate bill 1917 favorably, with some amendments, which make it conform to the House bill. I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 1917, to legalize a bridge across Hillsboro Bay at Twenty-second Street, Tampa, Fla., may be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Committee on Commerce of the Senate be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 7218 and that it be considered now in lieu of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7218) to legalize a bridge across Hillsboro Bay at Twenty-second Street, Tampa, Fla.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that Senate bill 1917 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope we may dispose of some of the amendments to the pending bill. On page 2, line 4, of the committee amendment, after the word "The," I move to insert the words "United States Shipping," so as to make it read "The United States Shipping Board." I think there is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the committee amendment which is pending is found on page 2. I do not think we can dispose of that now, for I understand the Senate will desire to take a recess in probably a minute or two, and so I think we had better not take up the discussion of that amendment until after the purposes of that recess shall have been served.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Will it be understood that after the recess we shall go on with that amendment?

Mr. JONES. That is what I should like to do.

Mr. COPELAND. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. JONES. After the recess I should like to go on with the amendment.

Mr. President, I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

RECEPTION TO PRESIDENT COSGRAVE, OF THE IRISH FREE STATE

Mr. CURTIS, leader of the majority; Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, leader of the minority; Mr. BORAH, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations; Mr. SWANSON, ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations; and Representative STEPHEN G. PORTER, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, escorted into the Chamber Mr. William T. Cosgrave, President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State, accompanied by Mr. Timothy A. Smiddy, minister plenipotentiary of the Irish Free State to the United States; Mr. Desmond Fitzgerald, Minister of Defense of the Irish Free State; Mr. Diarmuid O'Hegerty, Secretary of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State; Mr. Joseph P. Walshe, Secretary of the Department of External Affairs of the Irish Free State; Col. Joseph O'Reilly, aide to the President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State; and Mr. William J. B. Macaulay, first secretary of the legation of the Irish Free State at Washington.

President Cosgrave was given a seat on the right of the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, I present President Cosgrave, of the Irish Free State. [Applause.]

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in order that the Members of the Senate may have an opportunity to meet President Cosgrave, I move that the Senate take a recess for 10 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT stood in the area near the Secretary's desk with President Cosgrave, and personally presented the Members of the Senate to him, after which the Vice President said: I suggest to President Cosgrave that he say a few words. [Applause.]

President COSGRAVE. Mr. Vice President and Members of the Senate, this is indeed a very great honor which I have received at your hands, which I attribute to the regard in which you hold my country.

I have come to extend to your President and to the people of America the thanks of my people for all that you have done for us during the last 200 years, for the homes which you have extended to our people who have come here, and for the sympathy and support which you have ever been so gracious and so generous as to extend to my people.

In the eighteenth century Benjamin Franklin came to the Parliament of my country; and he told the members of that Parliament that the Americans and the Irish, working hand in hand, would achieve the freedom which they sought. Now, after 150 years, I come to return the visit of that great American.

I thank you, sir, on my own behalf and on behalf of my people for the courtesy and kindness and hospitality which have been extended to me since I have come here, for the great help which America and her people have always extended to my people, for their great contributions toward the cause of liberty the world over, and for their great work in the cause of humanity. [Applause.]

The recess having expired, and the distinguished visitor with his escort having withdrawn from the Chamber, the Vice President resumed the chair.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the committee proposes an amendment to the pending bill 744 striking out section 2 and inserting a new section in lieu thereof. The section stricken out and also this amendment include section 5, which is also stricken out.

Section 2 I shall read, so that the Senate will understand what is proposed. As amended, it reads:

> The United States Shipping Board shall not sell any vessel or any line of vessels except when in its judgment the building up and maintenance of an adequate merchant marine can be best served thereby, and then only upon the affirmative unanimous vote of the members of the board duly recorded.

I take it that the controversy with reference to this question will revolve about the last clause, "and then only upon the affirmative unanimous vote of the members of the board duly recorded."

In the bill as it was introduced, it was provided that none of the vessels constructed pursuant to this act should be sold without the consent of Congress. The committee came to the conclusion that that would be too cumbersome a process, that it would be very likely that a few members might retard the approval of a sale which might be quite desirable. So it was proposed to strike out that provision in the bill contained in section 5, and insert an amendment something like this.

There was quite a difference of opinion in the committee as to just what should be done. Some proposed that the Shipping Board be not permitted to dispose of a ship without the concurrence of five members of the Shipping Board, but after considerable discussion a majority of the committee agreed to the amendment as it is submitted to the Senate now.

I know that there may be serious objections to the provision as it is. There has been considerable difference of opinion with reference to the construction of section 1 of the shipping act of 1920.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. What is the now suggested amendment?

Mr. JONES. The suggested amendment is, in substance, that no ship shall be sold hereafter without the unanimous vote of the Shipping Board. In other words, all seven of the members of the Shipping Board must vote in the affirmative in order to perfect the sale of a ship.

As I was saying, there has been quite a difference of opinion with reference to the construction of section 1 of the shipping act of 1920. Some have contended that the primary purpose of that act was the building up of a merchant marine, and that the secondary purpose was the disposal of the ships so as to bring them ultimately into private ownership.

Personally I have never had any difficulty about the construction of that section. I have always thought that it very clearly expressed the idea that the building up of an adequate merchant marine was the primary purpose. But there has been this honest difference of opinion with reference to the meaning of that section. Some have thought that the Shipping Board in its dealings with its ships and in their disposal rather leaned to the construction that made the disposal of of the ships, you might say, the primary purpose. There has been considerable criticism of the action of the board with reference to the disposal of ships.

Really, the purpose of this amendment is to make it perfectly clear that the primary purpose of the shipping act of 1920, as supplemented by this, is not to get these ships into private hands as soon as possible but that the primary purpose is to build up an adequate merchant marine.

Furthermore, I think it is the idea in general of those who supported this amendment that we have come, in a way, to the conclusion that the only way to build up a merchant marine in this country is through the Government, and we think the purpose, in the absence of the possibility of adopting anything else that would lead to the private operation of ships and their construction, and so forth, is to make it certain that this policy will be carried out until at some time in the future the Congress may come to the conclusion that we are prepared to turn these ships over to private parties, and that private capital and energy is prepared to take them over, and not only operate them but also to carry out the policy of replacement so as to continue the services that it is deemed desirable to maintain. The committee believed that this was the best way to accomplish that.

Some may contend that this commits Congress to permanent Government ownership. I do not think so myself. I think that that, of course, will be determined by Congress; but this does put us on the basis of Government ownership until Congress shall affirmatively declare the time has come for us to put these ships into private hands.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I want to inquire whether the chairman of the committee proposes to offer this amendment as a committee amendment, having the sanction of the committee, or as his own amendment?

Mr. JONES. It is an amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Then I want to say at this point, very briefly, that I was not present at the time the chairman was authorized to offer the amendment on behalf of the committee. I think it is just as objectionable as the language in the bill as reported to the Senate. I understand the statement of the Senator, as chairman of the committee, is that he has stricken out that provision which requires that no ship shall be sold without the consent of Congress.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is a part of this amendment.

Mr. McNARY. And the Senator is offering an amendment that no ship shall be sold unless the board unanimously agrees that the ships may be sold?

Mr. JONES. The committee is proposing that amendment.

Mr. McNARY. The unanimous consent of the board would be more difficult to get, in my opinion, than the consent of Congress.

Mr. JONES. That is the proposition before the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I shall be sorry to see this amendment adopted. It is an indirect way of making it impossible for the country to get out of the shipping business. I want to call attention to the practical effect of the amendment if it shall be added to the bill and the bill shall become a law.

I hold in my hand a copy of the 1920 shipping act, and call attention to section 3, where provision is made for the creation of the Shipping Board. It will be noticed that in the second paragraph of section 3 there is this language:

> The commissioners shall be appointed with due regard to their fitness for the efficient discharge of the duties imposed on them by this act, and two shall be appointed from the States touching the Pacific Ocean, two from the States touching the Atlantic Ocean, one from the States touching the Gulf of Mexico, one from the States touching the Great Lakes, and one from the interior, but not more than one shall be appointed from the same State.

There is a great difference of opinion as to whether we should sell all these ships, or even some of them, or whether we should retain them all under the operation of the Shipping Board. If we intend to retain all these ships and operate them as Government owned and Government operated, we should approve the amendment presented by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I do not want, however, to disturb his train of thought.

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I am compelled to leave the Senate Chamber to attend a committee hearing in a few moments, and I simply wanted to announce, in connection with what the Senator is saying, that I propose to offer an amendment to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington, now section 2 of Senate bill 744, so that it will read in the last two lines, "and then only upon the affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the board duly recorded." In other words, it would change the language so as not to require the necessity of a unanimous vote, but would provide that a majority vote would be sufficient. I merely wanted to make that announcement at this time. I thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. That is quite all right, and I think the Senator is right. I hope we can find votes enough to gain approval of the suggestion made by the Senator from New Jersey, so that it would require the votes of only four out of seven, which would be a majority, which, I presume, is the rule now. May I ask the Senator from Washington whether that is a fact?

Mr. JONES. The rule of the board now, apparently, is that a majority of a quorum determines the action.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey would still leave that open. As I construe it now, all that is necessary is a majority of a quorum. Bids have been called for on a vote of three members, because seven members were not present, only five being present, and three out of the five voted in favor of advertising the ships on the Pacific.

Mr. EDGE. I think the point made by the Senator from Florida is well taken. I simply used the language of the bill as it has been printed. I will clarify my amendment to the amendment by simply inserting the words "a majority of all the members of the board." That certainly means that four members would be necessary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the Senator specify that a vote of four members is necessary.

Mr. EDGE. It would bring the same result.

Mr. COPELAND. Anyway, what the Senator from New Jersey has in mind is that he would require an affirmative vote of four members of the board in order to sell a ship.

Mr. EDGE. Exactly.

Mr. COPELAND. The trouble with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington, the committee amendment, is that the board being regional, it could readily happen that two members of the board would under all circumstances decline to vote to sell the ships because the interests of a particular region were involved, and they could not be sold. For instance, we have pending now before the Shipping Board, as I understand it, a project to sell practically all the ships left on the Pacific. Am I right in that?

Mr. JONES. The Senator is right.

Mr. COPELAND. That might be to the advantage of the country. I am not prepared to say whether it is or not. I am inclined to think it would not be. If, under the arrangement proposed by the Senator from Washington, five members of the board, representing the Atlantic coast, the Great Lakes, the interior, and the Gulf States, were convinced, and the whole country were convinced, for that matter, that for the good of the Nation the ships on the Pacific should be sold, they could not be, because the amendment would make it impossible for any ship ever to be sold without the affirmative vote of all the members of the board.

That means, if Senators will face it, that there never would be any ships sold in all human probability in the entire history of the Shipping Board. If I am correctly advised, with the exception of one occasion there has always been a member of the board to vote against any sale. So the Senator from Washington is proposing a plan which will perpetuate forever, or until Congress chooses to take other action, Government ownership and operation. We might just as well abolish the board and appoint one man to exercise the functions of the board if the amendment were adopted and enacted into law, because one man could determine the policy of the United States as regards the ownership and operation of these ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just to clear up a matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SACKETT in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has been reported that one member of the board has voted invariably and constantly against the sale of ships. My information is that this is incorrect. The Senator's statement just now was not to the effect that a certain member had always voted against the sale of any ships, but that some member of the board could be found or would be found to vote against the sale of ships.

Mr. COPELAND. That has always been true, has it not?

Mr. FLETCHER. As a matter of fact, they have sold $85,000,000 worth of ships. They have not been holding up sales at all. They have been selling them right and left. I want to make it clear that there is not a single member of the present board who has constantly or invariably voted against the sale of ships. I think it is due to members of the board to say that. There is not a single member who has continuously voted against any proposal to sell, and there have been sales constantly made. I think most of those sales have been ordered practically by unanimous vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The members of the board are appointed by the President. Does he not have a right under the law to remove them at any time he wants to do so?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. If the President wanted to sell the ships and had a board on his hands who would not vote for it, he could remove them and appoint somebody who would, could he not?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. He might have a little difficulty getting all of them, but he could get, perhaps, three-fourths.

Mr. NORRIS. Why could he not get all of them?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know. There would be a larger chance to find one man out of seven who would not be dictated to and who would perform his duty under the law.

Mr. NORRIS. He could easily do that. He could appoint men who had a viewpoint in favor of the sale of ships, who wanted to sell everything. He could find men who honestly believed that we ought to sell the Capitol. He would not have any trouble about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. They have to be confirmed.

Mr. NORRIS. But he could appoint them when the Senate was not in session, and they could sell the whole Government before the Senate could get here. I do not see why, if the President wants to sell those ships, he could not do it very easily at any time.

Mr. COPELAND. Though I do not speak for the President—perhaps I need not impress that fact upon the Senator from Nebraska—I think I am right in saying that if I have read the President's utterances correctly, if he had his way he would sell all the ships. I think that is the President's attitude.

Mr. NORRIS. He can do it, I think, under the law.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course the Senator from Nebraska does not mean that. He knows that there are men like himself, men of high character, who are not going to be dictated to even by a Republican President.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not insinuating that to do that men would have to be coerced. It would not be a difficult thing to pick seven men who would be willing to sell all the ships. I could do it in five minutes. I could pick seven men who would be honestly in favor of doing that. I could get them right out of this Chamber, and the Senator would have to admit that they would be all right.

Mr. COPELAND. They would all be all right and unquestionably the President should be congratulated if he could have a board like that. I agree with the Senator. But we must face the fact, to be serious about it, that there is a great difference of opinion in the country and a great difference of opinion in the Senate about what we ought to do with these ships.

I am here to say, in terms just as strong as those used by the Senator from Washington, that we have to face the situation if we are to have a merchant marine. We must find some way to stimulate the interest of private citizens, so that they can afford to build and operate ships, or else the Government must do it. During the war we built ships and ships and ships. If one goes up the Hudson River, as I do very often, because it reaches a point only a few miles from where I live, he will see 125 ships tied up at the dock. What good are they? Undoubtedly many of them should be sold, and any board made up of men of good sense, and I am sure we have such men on the present board, would desire to sell those ships if they could find somebody to buy them.

But when it comes to the disposal of the service of a line of boats already operating between some point in the United States and some foreign port there comes a great and important question. Is it better to leave those ships in the hands of the Government, or if responsible, substantial citizens can be found to operate them and are willing to take them over at a price agreeable to the Shipping Board, should they be sold? I contend that they should. That is the secondary object of the law anyhow, but it is the primary object, too; at least it is in the first section of the law. Senators will notice right there that the ships which serve as naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States, are first mentioned, and then in section 5 it is provided:

> That in order to accomplish the declared purpose of this act and carry out the policy declared in section 1 hereof, the board is authorized and directed to sell as soon as practicable, consistent with good business methods and the object and purposes to be obtained by this act, at public or private competitive sale, etc.

So it is contemplated that if under right conditions they can be sold to substantial private citizens they shall be so sold.

If two members of the board or one member of the board under the proposal would say "No; we are not going to sell any ships," the best interests of the country might be defeated by the insistence of that member upon his rights. I do not think we need to discuss the matter at any considerable length. So far as I am concerned, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I want to remind the Senator from New York of the fact that I know he will oppose the proposed sale of ships under the present terms if it can be shown to him that these terms will work an injustice to and be unfair to the best interests of American industry and shipping. Before the discussion is over I think we will have an opportunity of presenting the facts to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I beg the Senator's pardon; did he ask me a question?

Mr. ODDIE. I feel sure that the Senator from New York will agree with me in not consenting to the sale of these ships under the present terms, which I believe can be shown to be unfair and not good business. Before the discussion ends I think that can be brought to the Senator's attention.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say to the Senator at this point that if proposals which are now pending before the Shipping Board for the building of ships by private citizens should meet the approval of the Shipping Board and of the Congress, so that the conditions involved could be met, I would think under those conditions that certainly there should be a resurvey of the entire problem. I mean to say that if that were to happen, I am not sure but it would be very unwise to sell any ship until there has been such a study. Of course, whether the pending matter regarding the sale of ships should be carried out, I am not prepared to say. I have given it no study.

Mr. ODDIE. Under those conditions I feel sure the Senator from New York and I will agree pretty closely. I do not intend to discuss the matter in detail now, but I call attention to the fact that the shippers themselves, the small shippers, the independent shippers, have not had sufficient opportunity to be heard in this matter now pending regarding the sale of ships. I intend to speak further on the matter at a later time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). The Senator will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JONES. As I understand it, the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] to the amendment of the committee is considered as pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the pending amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] to enable the board to sell the ships whenever a vote of four members of the board to that effect can be had. I believe that is the substance of his amendment.

I am in favor of the amendment as reported by the committee. I differ entirely from the view of those Senators who hold that this would mean no sales of the ships would be made at any time. The language is perfectly explicit. We can not expect Congress to go on appropriating money to replace ships, to construct new ships, to balance our fleet, and to make it a competent and worthy fleet, if we are going to continue in the Shipping Board the power to sell those ships whenever they see fit, at any price and on any terms they may see fit to accept.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Does not the Senator recognize that the law as it is at present certainly contemplates that when the ships can be sold under terms upon which the Senator and I both agree, that the board is called upon to sell if in their judgment they think the best interests of the country will be served by that sale?

Mr. FLETCHER. They are authorized to sell whenever the primary purposes of the merchant marine act of 1920 are accomplished thereby in their judgment, and that is the establishment and maintenance of an adequate American merchant marine.

Mr. COPELAND. Then if the Shipping Board had an offer for a line of vessels—we will say the United States Lines—I do not know whether there is anybody that would want to buy it, but suppose somebody did, and found upon investigation that the citizens submitting the offer were financially responsible and capable apparently by reason of the possession of technical knowledge to operate that fleet, and an offer were made at a price which would be considered to be a sufficient one, would it not be the duty of the board to sell, provided that the primary object of that act were to be carried out by the sale?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think they would be authorized to sell; but the board ought to be satisfied beyond any question that it would mean a contribution to the establishment and maintenance of an adequate American merchant marine. The board should impose in the case of a sale of that kind a guaranty of operation in certain services that they considered important for the public good for the period of, say, 10 or 15 years, and should also provide in such a contract that the ships they were selling must be kept in repair and in proper condition during that time, and that when they were worn out the purchasers should replace them and continue the operation of the line, or when one of them went down or some accident happened to it that it should be replaced in this service and maintained. It seems to me perfectly clear that some terms of that kind should be imposed. Otherwise, if we should sell the ships and require operation only for a period of five years, as has been the custom of the board, that five-year period elapses in what would seem hardly an hour in the life of a nation, and after the five years are gone there would be no obligation to replace, no obligation to keep up the service, and the ships may go into coastwise trade or be disposed of in some other way. That would not be establishing and maintaining an American merchant marine.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose the conditions which he names were met; suppose a 10 years' contract or 15 years' contract, whatever was the number of years the Senator named, was agreed to; suppose arrangements were made for replacement; suppose all the conditions recognized by the Senator as proper ones were met, and one man on the board would not vote for the sale, then it would be defeated?

Mr. FLETCHER. If the amendment as reported by the committee shall be written into the law, that would be quite true.

Mr. COPELAND. That is what would happen.

Mr. FLETCHER. One man could defeat the sale; but, according to the whole experience that we have had and our observation of the actual facts which have been developed, especially when the administration wants to get rid of the ships, the whole tendency is the other way, to get out of the business and sell the ships. So we want to protect the public, if we can, by requiring that every one of the seven men on the board, men of high character, men of intelligence, men of knowledge and acquaintance with shipping generally, and that sort of thing, must be convinced that the disposition of the ships or the line or the fleet is in the public interest, and vote accordingly. When all of them shall be thus convinced, not only as to the advisability of making the sale but as to the imposition in connection with the sale of certain terms which will carry out the purpose of Congress and the public policy of this country, that the United States shall have under its flag, either publicly owned or privately owned, merchant ships in the foreign trade which will meet our needs in a commercial way and also serve as auxiliaries of the Navy, then they may make the sale.

If we shall have men so qualified, with authority and power to sell the ships, it seems to me every one of those men, especially in view of the experience we have had and our knowledge that heretofore they have been disposed and anxious to sell the ships, ought to be convinced that such a sale and such terms and such conditions as may be provided are in the public interest before they vote for the sale; and in that case the sale should be made.

It is easy enough, as the Senator from Nebraska said a few moments ago, to find men of high character who are in favor of selling ships when they are appointed on the board, and perhaps it would be less difficult for the President to find men whom he could impress with his ideas as to the public policy involved and thereby influence them to favor sales whether they favored them in the first instance or not. It is easy enough to find seven good men who would favor the Government getting out of the shipping business and selling this property. What I think we ought to do is to see to it that the unanimous judgment and opinion of all the men, whoever they may be, who may be appointed on the board, shall be recorded on their minutes as to each sale and the terms and conditions upon which the sale shall be made. That is for the protection of the public. It does not make sales impossible at all. As I have stated, the whole tendency has been to rush speedily into the sale of the ships. What we want is to put on the brakes a little here, and have the subject thoroughly considered in all of its phases both as to the advisability of the sale and as to the terms and conditions of the sale. We ought to be able to find seven men, conscientious, public spirited, patriotic, qualified men, to serve on that board; and we ought to require that before any ships shall be disposed of all the members of the board must say that it is done in pursuance of their best judgment and in accordance with the policy laid down by Congress, the establishment and maintenance of a merchant marine being the primary purpose. Let all of them say it. Why should they not?

It is not true, as has been intimated in the press, that one member of this board never has voted for the sale of a ship. That is not the case at all.

The records will disclose the contrary of that. Sales have been going on and ships have been sacrificed. I will not go over that story again. It is perfectly appalling. One ship sold not long ago for $10,000 which cost us $625,000 to build and which, I am told, makes more than $10,000 on each voyage which is completed. In my judgment, to give these ships away is not a wise policy to pursue. I ask Senators, do they expect Congress to appropriate millions of dollars to build ships and give the Shipping Board the power to dispose of them as they may see fit?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask the Senator if he does not think that, if any harm should come from this amendment, there would be less harm in the full board being required to approve a sale than to have present conditions continue, taking into consideration the present program of the Shipping Board, which I consider would be a national disgrace if it shall go through as has been planned. I consider it very fortunate for the American people that the question has been brought into open discussion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the 36 ships which it is proposed to sell cost some $74,000,000. They are worth at least $60,000,000, and could not be replaced to-day for that amount. The proposal now pending involves paying for them something like $3,000,000, and that question is to be voted on on February 10. Are we going to give away those freight ships on the Pacific coast, practically on the terms I have mentioned, and give them to people who probably already have a monopoly of the passenger ships and who by this transaction would secure a monopoly of the freight ships on the Pacific coast? Those are matters I take it the board will consider. I think in the proper protection of the public we should require the unanimous judgment of that board before they commit themselves to a proposition of that kind.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator and I have belonged to church boards. Did the Senator ever know of a unanimous opinion in the case of a church board?

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, yes; I think so.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator's church is more generous and kind perhaps than mine.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is not an unusual thing at all. We secure unanimous consent in the Senate every day in 40 different ways on different propositions. We do not have any trouble about that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me remind the Senator from Florida that if in the Senate we do not secure unanimous consent, we have then the right to make a motion and have a majority decide the question; whereas there is no such provision here, but one member of the board not consenting may throw the whole matter out of court.

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it that the man who raises his voice against a proposition that is submitted to the board is taking that responsibility in such a way that he is able to convince reasonable minds that he is not acting in an arbitrary and unwarranted manner. There must be some good reason for his taking that position in opposition to all his fellow members of the board, and that reason, in my judgment, must be a reason in the interest of the public, rather than an effort to serve private interests.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Would the Senator like to see the same rule applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission or to the Supreme Court, or to other governmental bodies, and permit one member to stop the business of the commission or court or whatever it may be?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is a very different situation. We can not very well do that because that might, in effect, block all business in those governmental bodies. That is a different case altogether. Here is a question simply of the power and authority to sell ships.

By the act of 1920 we gave the power to sell ships under certain conditions, not to bankrupt concerns, not as at a forced sale, but upon a business basis, and for the accomplishment of the primary purpose of the act; but what do we find? We find that they have construed that act and held it to be the whole purpose of that act to sell the ships. So we found the board willing to vote for sale after sale to the amount of some $85,000,000, and in most of the cases to sell the ships at about 10 per cent of their value. That is what happened under that act. We gave them power by a majority vote to do that thing, and they have done it, although it was secondary to the primary purpose of the act. That should be a lesson to us. Why should we give this board the power to dispose of ships in the way in which they have been disposing of them in the past? We ought to have learned something about that. After the methods and practices of the past, why give them such power with reference to the disposition of the ships, particularly the ships which we are now building?

On yesterday the House passed a bill to appropriate $12,000,000 for reconditioning the Mount Vernon and the Agamemnon. When that bill comes here I am going to offer an amendment to it to the effect that the board shall not be allowed to sell those ships for less than the cost of reconditioning them, less 5 per cent depreciation annually after they shall be reconditioned.

I am not willing to vote to recondition those ships—ships worth, adding this $12,000,000 to what they are already worth, say, $20,000,000—and leave it to a majority of the board to sell them the next day to the International Mercantile Marine, or some other concern to which they may see fit to sell them, at their own price and on their own terms. I am not willing to do that, and I do not believe Congress is willing to do that. There must be some sort of protection of the public here. The public must not be wholly helpless in a condition like that.

Mr. COPELAND and Mr. BINGHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to either one of the Senators.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to ask the Senator this question, if I may: Then the Senator does not want any ships sold?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not say that at all.

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment. The Senator has found fault because a certain number of tons of ships—I have forgotten how many tons he said—have been sold; but he finds fault because they have been sold to persons who are operating them successfully.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, were they Americans?

Mr. COPELAND. They were Americans.

Mr. BINGHAM. Not foreigners?

Mr. COPELAND. Not foreigners.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator mean to say that the Senator from Florida objects to the sale of ships to Americans so that they may operate them under the American flag?

Mr. COPELAND. Well, I got the impression that the Senator was rather sorry that we had sold them, because they had been successful.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not objecting to any sales that were made on a proper and reasonable basis, on proper terms, and where the operation has followed in accordance with a proper policy as to service and routes and conditions.

Mr. COPELAND. Is not that what happened?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a most remarkable thing to me that we have been selling these ships. At the close of the war the Government owned over 10,000,000 tons of ships. The Government to-day owns about 6,000,000 tons. Consequently, some 4,000,000 tons of these ships intended to serve in foreign trade have been sold, and yet we have in private ownership to-day less tonnage than we had in 1914.

Mr. COPELAND. We sold a lot to Henry Ford, did we not? What did he do with them?

Mr. FLETCHER. We sold over a hundred of them to Henry Ford for about $10,000 apiece, and he scrapped them; yes. Senators talk about selling to American citizens. Is it a thing to be praised that the Shipping Board have been able to sell these ships to American citizens at any sort of price and on any sort of terms? Are we going to build ships for them to give away? Are we going to build ships for them to scrap whenever they see fit to scrap them?

I do not care whether the purchaser is an American citizen or who he is; I say that no American citizen has any right to come before this board and be the subject of favoritism in connection with the disposition of this public property.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I want to call attention to what I think has caused the feeling that the Shipping Board is not really regarding the declarations of the act of 1920 but is trying to sell these ships, and seeking to sell them just to get rid of them; that is, upon almost any terms.

At the last meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States it seems that that body was not satisfied with what they thought was the policy of the Shipping Board in the disposal of the ships. I think they thought probably the Shipping Board should sell them faster than they were doing, and they had some resolutions prepared. The chairman of the Shipping Board came down to the chamber of commerce and went before a special committee that was considering this matter, and here is what he said:

The Shipping Board is not in the business here to stay in Government operation. We are absolutely opposed to it. We want to get out of business. We absolutely want to get out of business, and we are willing to sell to any man, any American, who will come and buy the ships at any time, at any place, and the price does not make much difference.

I believe that is a fairly good offer to anybody here who has the idea that the Shipping Board does not want to sell ships. Come down to us; we will sell the ships if you will pick out the route, or we will tell you what the routes are; we will furnish you with the figures as to how the ships are running, how they are running at the present time, whether they are making money or losing money. We will give you all the information, and then you can make up your minds which one of the 23 routes you want to buy and we will sell the ships.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there for a question?

Mr. JONES. Just a moment. When the matter finally came up in the committee Mr. Barnes said:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, may I propose a substitute—

For the resolution that they had prepared before—

as follows:

"In view of the explicit disclaimer before this section by Chairman O'Connor, of the Shipping Board, that the board contemplates investing public moneys in new construction, and in view of his clear statement that the board is determined to dispose of all ships and trade routes to private enterprise at any sacrifice if with reasonable assurance of continued service on those routes, this section believes these utterances accord with the adopted principles of this chamber and no further action is necessary at this time except to impress upon the Shipping Board the need of energy in placing this shipping in private operation, and with such support as necessary to make private operation effective."

Mr. FLETCHER. There you are; and he made that offer over and over again, and declared that to be the policy of the board, to get out of business; "Come and buy!" He offered them at $5 a ton, $7 a ton, and finally said, "The price makes no difference."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Florida made a statement a few moments ago to the effect that one ship which cost, I think he said, $260,000, was sold for $10,000, and that at a time when it was earning that amount on each trip that it made.

What is the explanation for such a transaction? Why is it that individuals, private citizens, or corporations engaged in the mercantile-marine business are unwilling to pay more for a ship of that character, and with a business so profitable as that? It would seem that anyone who wanted to engage in the ocean-carrying trade would take into consideration the earning power of a ship, and pay something like its reasonable value for it, unless there are indications that its earning power will quickly and rapidly diminish, or unless there is something else which depreciates the actual value of the vessel as a carrier of commerce.

That is an enormous profit. It is a remarkable transaction to sell a ship for what it earns on a single trip.

Mr. BINGHAM. But, Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am asking for information; and if the Senator from Connecticut has more information than the Senator from Florida, I shall be glad to get it from him.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understood the Senator from Florida to say something different from what the Senator from Arkansas understood him to say. I understood him to say that after the ship was sold, and went into private hands, and was operated by a private company, it then proceeded to earn $10,000 a trip—not that it was earning anything when it was sold.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator means when operated by the Government operators it was not earning anything? I can not say as to that. They can make a showing, as to any of these ships, that they are losing money, any time they want to; and it is possible that the ship was losing money under Government operation. I do not know about that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Connecticut is correct. I did not correctly understand the statement of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. But the question raised by the Senator from Arkansas is entirely in point and pertinent. Why sell that sort of a ship at that price when it is capable of earning as much money as that? The only explanation of that is that the board have the power, and they have the fixed policy, as laid down by the President, to get out of this business as quickly as possible.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, a partial answer to that, at least, is that under the present operation the ship is not earning anything, and a purchaser would, therefore, have little assurance as to what would be its earning capacity after it passed into private hands. I thought the statement was that while it was a profitable carrier it was sold.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know about that; and, to tell the truth, I think as a matter of fact there has not been until recent times anyhow—I will not say there is not to-day—a serious, deliberate purpose on the part of the Shipping Board or of the Emergency Fleet Corporation to make a success of operation. I think, on the contrary, the whole scheme has been to get out of shipping; and one of the arguments in support of that would be to point out the losses that have been incurred by the operation of the ships, and that sort of thing; but I think that is over. I hope it is. I think now they are reducing the cost of operation. The United States Lines are reported to have earned some $337,000 net last year.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, the United States Lines did not count the interest, did not count depreciation, and made no provision for replacement. It was purely a matter of paper profit. The United States Lines have made no money. They never can make any money, as I see it, and according to the testimony, unless there are material replacements; and the other shipping lines, the other services of the Shipping Board, have not made money.

Mr. FLETCHER. As a matter of fact, at different times certain routes, certain services, have, as they say, reported "in the black." Taken as a whole, they require an appropriation now of some twelve or thirteen million dollars to meet the losses incurred by operation of some 380 ships; but the United States Lines is a more or less profitable line now. That is a very important line. It needs some additions.

Two ships like the Mount Vernon and the Agamemnon, added to the Leviathan, would make it one of the most powerful lines in the world; and my information is that it could easily expect to earn, net, a million dollars a year if those two ships were added to its service. I can not say what that would be, but I know this: I know that there is really but one line of the Shipping Board ships that is operated by the Government, and that is the United States Lines. The other lines are operated by private operators, not directly by the Government at all; and some of the contracts heretofore were perfectly absurd contracts, because originally the S-O-4 contract practically provided that the more money the operators lost, the more profit they made; so there could not be any successful operation under it. I do not, however, want to go into all those questions now.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a very brief observation in connection with the question of the Senator from Arkansas a few moments ago?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. I can not help feeling that the figures which the Senator from Florida brought out are in themselves a very cogent argument against Government ownership and operation, and in favor of private ownership and operation when given some form of governmental assistance, the form in this case being selling the ships at public sale at a very low price, thereby giving the private company a chance to make money on ships when the Government, which already owned them, did not succeed in doing so. The facts which the Senator has just been pointing out with regard to the operation of the Shipping Board seem to my simple intelligence to point to the fact that Government operation is not successful.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have not the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Why should the private owner of a ship which cost $10,000, and has earned $10,000 each trip, have any form of aid from the Government?

Mr. BINGHAM. The only aid the Government gave was by letting him have the ship at a price which he was willing to pay for it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Just take that point. Here for seven years we have been offering private enterprise at $5 and $7 a ton ships which cost from $200 a ton up, and why have they not gone in and taken over the ships? What greater subsidy do they want? If subsidy will bring about private ownership and operation of merchant ships, what greater subsidy could they ask? The Senator has just said that was a kind of aid or subsidy, but we have been trying to do that for seven years, and yet we can not get them interested. Evidently they have not been adding to our overseas tonnage at all the ships we have been selling them. They have been operating those ships in the coastwise business and otherwise, scrapping them, or whatnot, perhaps taking the machinery out of them. We sold many of them for less than the machinery in them was worth, and they have not been added to our foreign commerce and trade at all. What could they ask more than the subsidy we have been giving, in effect, by enabling the Shipping Board to go on and sell the ships at the sacrifices at which they have sold them? Yet we do not get any addition to our merchant marine in overseas trade under the American flag owned by private individuals.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARAWAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator if we have kept faith with the men to whom we have sold these ships? I have in mind a line running on the Mediterranean—I have forgotten its name, but when we sold the ships there was an implied contract at least that we were going to permit them to carry the mail, and that contracts were going to be entered into for a period of 5 or 10 years. This last year, by an amendment to an appropriation bill, all those contracts were canceled, and the Postmaster General now is permitted to make contracts only within the terms and for the time of the appropriation. We have done everything in the world that we could do to discourage the operation by private individuals of these ships, even after we have sold them at this cheap rate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, we should not do that. That is a matter of administration which ought to be corrected. But we do keep faith with them in that we do not compete with them; we do not let the Shipping Board ships operate in competition with lines purchased by private individuals and part of the American merchant marine.

Here is what I am afraid of, Mr. President. I have here a quotation from the New York Times giving a communication, special, from London, dated January 15. It goes on to tell about what is being done by other countries. Thirteen new liners, including two of the largest ever launched, will be on the stocks by the end of this year if the companies carry out their present intention. The White Star Co. has ordered one boat of 25,000 tons, and other lines named here are the Cunard Line, the North German Lloyd, the Hamburg-American, the Swedish-American, the Norwegian-American, the Scandinavian. All those are contemplating building new ships and are actually laying the keels of new ships. This article concludes:

> British shipping men who have been watching the American situation with great interest are confidently predicting that the United States Lines will eventually be purchased by the International Mercantile Marine.

I think it is pretty well understood that the International Mercantile Marine is a British-controlled concern. Most of their ships are under the British flag. A majority of their directors are British people. The article from London continues:

> America, it was pointed out here, can not build up a big Navy without a mercantile marine.

That is one of the things we are contending for. That is quite true. Therefore we ought to have a mercantile marine under our flag.

> And she can not afford to operate merchant ships under Government ownership unless she wishes to pay heavy and continuing losses.

That is the consolation they take to their hearts over there, that the people of this country will get weary of the constant losses, and will quit operating the ships, and go out of the business. That is the hope they have.

> But she will not allow the United States Lines to pass into British hands—

Of course, they will not sell them to foreign interests—> and therefore she will sell them to Franklin.

That means Franklin, of the International Mercantile Marine. That is the prediction in London, that we are going to sell these United States Lines, our only Government-owned passenger-carrying trans-Atlantic line, Mr. Franklin, of the International Mercantile Marine, a British-controlled concern.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] can perhaps tell me how many ships owned by the Dollar Line are under foreign registry. Mr. Dollar, or the Dollar people, bought the seven President ships on the Pacific, and those ships are under our flag, under their contract, and must be for five years. But

Mr. Dollar has other ships. Will the Senator, if he has that information, give it to us?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Melville Dollar was transferred to the Japanese flag in 1916. The M. S. Dollar was transferred to the British flag in 1915. The Mackinaw was transferred to the Japanese flag in 1915. The Robert Dollar is still under the British flag. The Alice Dollar has never been under the American flag. The Stanley Dollar is under the British flag and the Esther Dollar is under the British flag.

Mr. FLETCHER. Those are the people who have bought the finest fleet of combination passenger and cargo ships in the world, on any ocean, brand new ships, which cost $40,000,000 and were sold for $4,500,000. Those are the people, in my judgment, who are laying for the 36 freight ships on the Pacific now and expect to get them about February 10, unless something is done. What do those people care about the American flag?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I know nothing about it beyond the statement made to me by Mr. Stanley Dollar last week, that the last British ships that they had they sold within a few days, that every ship now owned by the Dollars is an American ship. Furthermore, let us bear this in mind, that not a single ship sold by our Shipping Board to the Dollars can ever be under any other flag except by permission of the Shipping Board. That is the law.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that, but they can take those ships out of the service in which they are engaged at the end of five years and put them into the coastwise trade if they find it more profitable.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, can it be possible that some British influence or British interest is in the Dollar Line Co. to-day?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Nevada kindly answered my question, and I presume he has authority for his statement. I will inquire of the Senator where his information comes from? Does it come from the department? But I do not care about that. The Senator makes the statement, and I do not care to press as to how he gets it. That is sufficient for me. I did not know but that some one else might want to know, in view of the statement of the Senator from New York, whether this is an authoritative statement or not, or whether it is just the Senator's opinion.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Department of Commerce is authority for the statement I have made regarding five of the Dollar ships, and I have had it on authority that I consider reliable that the last two named, the Stanley Dollar and the Esther Dollar are still under British registry.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have just read this communication from London. I am finding no fault with opinion there. I am not criticizing it; they are looking out for themselves, they are going to have a merchant marine, and let us not forget that. Their opinion is that we are going out of this business, and that as the result of that, while we will not sell the ships to the British, we will sell them to the International Mercantile Marine, which is a British-controlled concern.

That is in prospect. If it is left to a majority of this board, to four members of the board, will there be any reason to find fault hereafter with Congress because we have given this power to four members of the board to get rid of these ships, and pass title to the ships by way of getting the Government out of business?

So far as I am concerned, when seven men unanimously are of the opinion that they are accomplishing the purpose of Congress in establishing and maintaining an adequate American merchant marine in foreign trade in voting to sell the ships, I am willing to let them go, but I would not be willing, so far as I am concerned, to leave it to four members of that board to decide an important question like that, settling not only our property values, not only our place on the high seas, but settling the policy of the Government contrary to the purpose and intention of Congress.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I had hoped that we would be able to get the pending amendment disposed of this afternoon, but it is desired that we shall have an executive session.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day we shall take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES. I want to express the hope that we shall be able to act on the bill to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), under the agreement previously entered into, took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, January 26, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, January 25, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TILSON.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Spirit of God, teach us that Thy will is love; teach us that Thy love is wise. May our heart's supreme wish be to give to our fellows good thoughts, strong principles, supporting comforts, and heavenly ideals. By grace help us to win the victories of faith and to do justice and to love mercy. Through chastened devotion to the public service may we animate others to follow our example. In every situation give us the light that never fails and the strength that never breaks. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BOOK AND MAGAZINE CENSORSHIP

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for just a few minutes on a matter that is somewhat personal to myself and my State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, this matter is not at all serious, and I am not presenting it in a serious way; but I think some reference should be made to it.

This morning I received through the mails a clipping which I presume was taken from a paper in Chicago. No name is signed to the clipping and the paper in which it appeared is not named. I desire to read it into the RECORD and then comment briefly upon it.

Representative TILLMAN, of Arkansas, introduced a bill in Congress Friday to establish a national board of book and magazine censorship. On the same day in an examination at the State University of Arkansas one student in answer to the question, "Who is Charles A. Lindbergh?" said he was a prime minister of Sweden in the fifteenth century; another said he was a German general in the World War; and a third that Lindbergh was a leader of the bolsheviks in Russia; and a fourth student thought Lindbergh was the battle line the Allies had such difficulty in breaking in the World War. Please write your own wheeze.

Ordinarily I would not say anything about this, and what I do say will be more or less in the spirit of a jest.

I do not know whether it is true that four students in the University of Arkansas made these silly answers to the question as to who is Lindbergh. They may have made those answers and made them jestingly, or ignorantly, for that matter. The University of Arkansas, however, has students from every State in the Union and from several foreign countries, and my information is that these four students who were supposed to have made these answers actually came from the city of Chicago and are not permanent residents of the State of Arkansas. [Laughter.]

But this newspaper man seems to find objection to a bill of mine to create a censorship to suppress indecent books and magazines. He does not, in fairness, state that this bill proposes to prevent the circulation of lewd and lascivious matter in magazines and books. That is the only purpose of the bill, and is a laudable one. The last sentence of the gentleman who criticizes Arkansas for a lack of literacy is himself illiterate. The objectionable sentence is this, "Please write your own wheeze." That is doubtful English, but I am suggesting the fact that even the mayor of Chicago is somewhat opposed to pure English. [Applause.] The sentence quoted is distinctly Chicagoese and is low-brow, slummy, coarse.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I ask unanimous consent, while this subject is warm, for 25 minutes to-morrow, January 26, immediately after the reading of the Journal, in which to discuss this particular bill, which proposes to curtail or eliminate altogether the circulation of magazines or books that are lewd, lascivious, or indecent. If the bill were enacted into law the book that has recently been bootlegged over America, full of filthy fiction, I think, could not have been circulated, and I expect to pay my respects to-morrow in a few words to that book.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, he may be allowed to address the House for 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Speaker, on invitation of the United States Shipping Board, I had the pleasure of addressing a conference called by that board on January 10, 1928, for the purpose of discussing with representatives of private American shipowners and allied interests ways and means of aiding our merchant marine. I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD my statement, which includes excerpts from Senate Report No. 477, Sixty-eighth Congress, on foreign-trade zones in ports of the United States, as an aid in the development and maintenance of an American merchant marine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement before the Shipping Board at a conference held January 10, 1928:

Mr. Chairman and members of the United States Shipping Board, in response to your invitation to be present here to-day for the purpose of a full discussion between the members of the Shipping Board and the American steamship owners of the Atlantic, Pacific, Gulf, and Great Lakes regarding the development and maintenance of an American merchant marine, may I ask if your board and the shipping interests of the United States so well represented here have given consideration to H. R. 8557, introduced by me in the House of Representatives, and a companion bill, known as S. 742, "A bill to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes," which was introduced by Senator JONES in the Senate?

Chairman O'CONNOR. Free ports?

Mr. WELCH of California. Free ports or foreign-trade zones. We prefer to refer to them as foreign trade zones; the former appellation is misleading and tends to convey the impression that they might interfere with our present tariff system. Quite to the contrary, foreign-trade zones as provided for in this bill which I have introduced in Congress, have absolutely nothing to do with tariff regulations. Foreign-trade zones are magnets in the world's commerce. If established in this country, they will build up our merchant marine which is so vital to our national security.

The Senate Committee on Commerce (65th Cong.) on May 3, 1918, referred to the Tariff Commission Senate bill 4153, with a request that said commission furnish the committee with suggestions touching on the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage; the bill had for its purpose the establishment of foreign-trade zones in ports of the United States.

In accordance with the request of the Committee on Commerce, the United States Tariff Commission submitted its report on November 20, 1918, concerning the policy of establishing foreign-trade zones in ports of the United States, together with comment concerning Senate bill 4153. The said report was signed by F. W. Taussig, chairman; Thomas Walker Page, vice chairman; David J. Lewis, William Kent, W. S. Culbertson, Ed. P. Costigan.

In the course of the investigation hearings were held in San Francisco, New York, and Philadelphia by members of the commission.

Information and data were sought through investigation by representatives of the commission in New Orleans and Galveston. A questionnaire was sent out to several hundred merchants and shippers. Study was made of the history and working of the free ports of free zones in Europe and of the laws and regulations controlling them. Interviews were had with those familiar with free-zone practice, and information as to recent foreign development was secured through the State Department.

From data thus obtained the report was compiled with favorable recommendations from the following:

Report of committee of New York Chamber of Commerce.
Resolution adopted by Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

Subsequently hearings were held before a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, Sixty-sixth Congress, on Senate bill 3170, "A bill to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite foreign commerce, and for other purposes."

This report to my mind is one of the most complete and comprehensive of its kind ever made to Congress. Much of this report is taken from the reports submitted in the Sixty-seventh Congress on Senate bill 2391:

"The Commerce Committee held extensive hearings during the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress in connection with Senate bill 3170."

Mr. Arthur McGuirk, special counsel for the board of commissioners of the port of New Orleans, said:

"A free zone is the necessary complement of a protective-tariff system; the higher the tariff the more essential. Without such facility no high-tariff country can successfully compete in world trade with foreign nations, because the terms are not equal and they are not fair. American merchants in foreign trade can carry a handicap. That handicap results from the imposition of the customs system with its consequent expense and necessary delays to trade which does not enter, but merely touches or is deposited in the country at different points. By so much as the American merchant pays the customs on goods intended for reexport and not for domestic consumption is he handicapped and discriminated against. As the goods can not enter the country without payment of duty, the situation as to domestic producers and manufacturers will remain unchanged. They remain protected as before. The free zone as to them is extraterritorial; it is foreign country. The customs officers are simply transferred from the ship to the gates of the zone. The same customs duties are collected, only they are collected at a different place; dutiable goods taken from the zone into the country to pay the duty just as before. The free zone or area is an inclosed district free of customs restrictions, without resident population, equipped with wharves and warehouses where vessels may enter and leave and where goods may be deposited and reexported either in their original state or changed by manufacture. In legal contemplation it is foreign country. It affords a stopping place for goods in transit. Freedom of transportation and manufacture afforded by transshipment or transit zones implies only exemption from charges other than such as are imposed by way of compensation for the use of the property employed or for facilities afforded for its use. Commerce may be carried on in the zone and commodities may be purchased, sold, exchanged, and manufactured therein. Anything may be done with the goods in the zone that could be done outside of it, only they can not be brought from the zone into the United States without paying the same duties or being subjected to the same regulations as in the customs part of the port.

"The United States is a protected zone. The country is covered by a protective-tariff system imperfectly balanced by a system of drawbacks, bonded warehouses, and bonded manufacturing warehouses, so as to afford some limited scope to foreign commerce. Without some such device Congress would not have regulated but have prohibited and wholly crushed foreign commerce. Commerce is of two kinds—foreign and domestic. The framers of the Constitution contemplated our engaging freely in both under sensible regulations, but example as well as precept in Government demands the use of modern and up-to-date facilities in commerce and transportation. The free zone is a well recognized institution in world commerce. It has passed the experimental stage. It is the necessary adjunct of the protected zone; but it does not exist in the United States. If the tariff is a protective as well as a revenue system, if its object is to protect domestic trade and commerce, so will a free-zone system be a protective system, protecting by encouraging, safeguarding, and promoting foreign trade and commerce. Combined, they will form a harmonious, logical, well-balanced commercial system for the development of both foreign and domestic commerce.

"And so it is with the United States, at the end of the Great War, with hundreds of ships, manned by youthful, eager, and vigorous mariners, full of the spirit of adventure, and anxious to compete in world trade. 'We have the men, we have the ships, we have the money, too.' It therefore becomes our manifest duty to quickly provide the facilities without which the operation of the ships and the employment of our sailors in foreign commerce will be practically impossible. Under such circumstances it would be a public disgrace to revert to pre-war conditions when 90 per cent of our foreign commerce was carried in foreign bottoms. Our merchant marine must be preserved. Our future safety depends upon it. The control of the transportation of a country means the political control of that country. Neither our land carriers nor our sea carriers should be foreign owned. It is as essential to control our sea lanes as it is to control our public highways. Both are vital to national sovereignty."

Hon. John H. Rossiter is an experienced shipping man, and he presented the importance of this legislation and its bearing upon the development of our merchant marine, as follows:

"The foreign-trade zone will in effect bring the market places of other lands to our doors, making our ports the trade marts of the world—that is, will afford our manufacturers the advantages of purchasing raw materials, our merchants a convenient and advantageous buying market and will be of dominating importance to our merchant marine, and will constantly increase the volume of our commerce by providing needed homeward cargo, and, secondly, the operation of transshipment of reexport business."

The Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Treasury have submitted reports on this bill, and their letters are made a part of this report at this point:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, March 29, 1924.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR JONES: Complying with your request of the 21st ultimo, this department submits suggestions touching the merits and propriety of the passage of Senate bill 2570 entitled "To provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes."

In my opinion, properly located foreign-trade zones would facilitate and encourage the export trade of the United States and be of material benefit to our merchant marine, for the following reasons:

1. It will promote and expedite our transshipment trade by eliminating the customs formalities and difficulties under our present system of warehousing for reexport. In the course of the tariff revision of September, 1922, customs administrative regulations have been so liberalized that many of the activities relating to foreign merchandise under section 3 of the bill are now allowed in bonded warehouses without requiring the payment of duties; however, they are so encumbered with requirements, such as filing manifests, of making formal entry to all foreign merchandise whether intended for ultimate entry into this country or not, having goods weighed, or otherwise examined before allowed to be deposited in bonded warehouses, that the privileges available are not sufficiently attractive to be used to any great extent.

2. The establishment of such zones would probably be of considerable benefit to our merchant marine and place this country in a more advantageous condition to take advantage of our large consumption of many foreign raw materials and distribute such among foreign countries. It will also improve the opportunity for full cargoes for American ships both ways and result in a more economical use of our merchant marine by eliminating delays due to customs formalities.

In my opinion the bill is designed to accomplish the foregoing, and I therefore indorse it and recommend its passage.

For the committee's information, I am inclosing herewith a memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade to the Senate and House of Representatives, indorsing and recommending the passage of Senate 2570.

Yours faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER, Secretary of Commerce.

PHILADELPHIA, March 27, 1924.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

This memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade respectfully presents:

"That the board strongly indorses the general purposes of Senate bill 2570, authorizing the establishment of foreign trade zones.

"That the successful results attending the establishment of 'free ports' (free zones), noticeably at Hamburg and Copenhagen, would seem to justify the authorization of such facilities for the handling of our foreign commerce.

"That the transshipment of the commerce of the world runs into billions of dollars and the participation of the country in the development of this business will be greatly hastened by a recognition of the advantages to be gained through a free interchange of goods as provided in the bill under consideration.

"That the many advantages that would follow the enactment of a 'free zone' measure are to numerous to enumerate in detail, but the more important may be briefly summarized as follows:

"(a) Saving time and expense on part of the Government in handling imports in free zones.

"(b) Avoidance of complications attending bonding and securing drawbacks on reexporting arriving merchandise.

"(c) Additional facilities for profitable business in rehandling, packing, mixing, etc.

"(d) Advantages to manufacturers in their ability to establish factories in free zones, when dependent upon dutiable raw material, avoiding thereby the troublesome drawbacks on their exported products.

"That the free ports are a necessity if the merchants of this country may hope to control a reexport trade, and the relief from customs barriers as provided in the bill will prove of inestimable value.

"That under proper regulations, as will doubtless be adopted, the interests of the Government in the collection of duty can be protected when goods are released for domestic use or consumption.

"That the hearing on the subject of 'free ports' (free zones), held in Philadelphia in 1918, gave almost unanimous indorsement of the wisdom of the legislation then set forth and now again proposed.

"Therefore your memorialist, the Philadelphia Board of Trade, earnestly petitions for the enactment of Senate bill 2570, for the reasons set forth in the foregoing.

"And your memorialist will ever pray."

[SEAL.] PHILADELPHIA BOARD OF TRADE,
WM. M. COATES, President.

W. R. TUCKER, Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 8, 1924.

HON. W. L. JONES,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have the honor to refer to your letter of the 21st ultimo, transmitting for report a copy of the bill S. 2570, which provides for the establishment, etc., for foreign-trade zones.

After careful consideration of the bill I perceive no objection to its passage, so far as the interests of this department are concerned. I inclose herewith for your further information a copy of a letter dated the 6th instant from the collector of customs at New York, and invite special attention to his remarks with reference to section 562 of the tariff act of 1922, which authorizes manipulation warehouses.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE,
New York, March 6, 1924.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of department letter dated the 1st instant, E. W. Camp, director of customs, inclosing copy of so-called free zone bill (S. 2570), requesting an expression of the views of this office thereon, so far as customs matters are concerned.

The proposed measure has been carefully perused, and the proposition submitted involves a question of policy concerning which it is not believed this office is called upon to express opinion.

In so far as the customs interest in the measure is concerned, nothing appears to be presented which might not be taken care of with additional personnel, and this would appear to be provided for in that portion of the proposed bill which states that the cost of maintaining the additional customs service shall be paid by the operator of the zone, thereby constituting no additional burden on the customs appropriation.

The operations contemplated in the proposed free zone appear to have their counterpart in section 562 of the tariff act of 1922, with the exception that in the proposed free zone bill the additional privilege is granted of intermingling foreign with domestic merchandise. This privilege, it is understood, was proposed and sought by interests concerned when the present tariff act was under consideration, but was not finally incorporated in the law.

There has been no great response to the privileges granted under section 562 of the new tariff act, wherein manipulation of merchandise in warehouse is authorized, and, in fact, no warehouse for this specific purpose has yet been bonded at this port.

Respectfully yours,

H. C. STUART,
Assistant Collector of Customs.

The establishment of foreign trade zones—

Will not affect the principle or policy of protection to American industry and labor;

Will aid in better carrying out that policy;

Will encourage the investment of American capital in new industries;

Will employ American labor in work and enterprise now carried on in foreign countries;

Will develop American business in foreign markets and foreign trades;

Will build up centers in the United States for the distribution of merchandise throughout the world;

Will simplify, facilitate, and cheapen the handling of exports and imports;

Will establish great transshipment points in the United States;

Will expedite the loading and unloading of ships;

Will aid in securing return cargoes for American ships; and

Will aid in the development and maintenance of an American merchant marine.

Will involve no change of principle, but merely one of procedure.

Will require no expenditure of money on the part of the United States.

The law will be permissive only.

American foreign trade was carried in American ships—	Per cent
In 1830	89. 9
In 1910	8. 7
In 1920	42. 7
In 1924	36. 3
In 1925	34. 1
In 1926	32. 2

The year 1927, as I have been informed by the Department of Commerce, will show a further decrease in our foreign trade.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the members of the United States Shipping Board and the shipping interests will carefully consider this bill. I represent a big shipping center, San Francisco. San Francisco while still a young city ranks second to the great port of New York in foreign trade. In my judgment if this bill is enacted into law it will help solve the serious problem of saving our merchant marine. * * *

I would like to leave with you, to be incorporated in the minutes of these hearings, excerpts from this report of the Senate Committee on Commerce.

The excerpts referred to are as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM REPORT OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE—REFERRED TO BY CONGRESSMAN WELCH OF CALIFORNIA

So long as tariffs are levied ports of entry must be maintained and special steps taken for the collection of such tariffs. Tariffs levied solely for revenue are more easily determined and collected than when they are levied for both revenue and protection. Whether levied for revenue or for protection, or for both revenue and protection, the simpler and less vexatious the means necessary to protect the Government the better the system will be for business.

We now have in connection with our tariff system the bonded warehouse, the drawback, and the bonded manufacturing warehouse. There is a great deal of vexatious delay in the handling of goods through these agencies. Vessels are delayed in unloading. Complex regulations hinder transshipment of reexport. Much difficulty is met in working out drawbacks. Any system that will remove any of the obstructions to commerce that now exist should be welcome and will be welcomed by all business people who have to deal with the present system and who do not now possess some special advantage that might be affected.

This bill provides a means to do away with many of the evils of the present system. It does not do away with the present agencies, but it does open the way for another agency that may be made use of to avoid many of the vexations of the present system.

The only substantial objection that has been urged to this measure is that it is a subtle device to undermine the protective tariff system. The Republican members of the Commerce Committee gave this objection special consideration. They are protectionists from principle and would not favor any measure inimical to that system. They came to the conclusion that this measure does not affect in any way the principles of a tariff, either for revenue or for protection. It provides for a very valuable instrument in connection with either system. If it has any special relation to either system it is especially desirable in connection with the enforcement of a protective tariff and will strengthen rather than weaken that policy. Action under it will add greatly to the value of protection. This is the view of every man who came before the committee urging the passage of S. 2391. As a matter of fact, it presents no new principle. It broadens and simplifies the principle or policy embraced in the present warehouses and drawbacks of existing law and has been applied for years.

It is urged that this bill would be a menace to the American export trade because it gives the foreign producers every advantage which American producers have so far as locality is concerned, with the added advantage of lower costs. Foreign goods have an advantage in lower costs. That is sought to be offset by a protective tariff, and foreign goods can not come into our domestic trade from these zones without paying that tariff. Foreign goods that go from these zones into the export trade in competition with our goods must bear a burden which our products do not bear, and that is the cost of transporting them from their origin to these zones. This is a considerable burden, but it is a burden upon foreign goods and not on our goods, and instead of their being on an equality they are at a decided disadvantage in competing for the export trade because of this added burden. As a matter of fact, these zones will not be used by foreign exporters, primarily, to compete with us in our export trade because of this advantage.

It is said that these goods would "snatch the export trade" from American producers because those seeking to make purchases of German goods, for instance, would not need to go to Germany. Granting this for the sake of argument, but they would come here. We would do the business. Business relations would be built up that would redound greatly to our benefit and would far more than offset any disadvantage.

It is urged that goods would be stored in these zones "awaiting the removal of import restrictions which would follow the election of a free-trade President and Congress." Such an objection is very far fetched. We know that foreign goods are imported in increased quantities immediately preceding the passage of a lower tariff bill. That occurs now, but no one thinks of bringing goods here for storing in anticipation of the passage of a tariff bill two or three years hence.

DEFINITION AND PURPOSE OF A FREE ZONE

A free port or free zone is a place limited in extent, that differs from adjacent territory in being exempt from the customs laws as affecting goods destined for reexport; it means simply that, as regards customs duties, there is freedom unless and until imported goods enter the domestic market.

A free zone may be defined as an isolated, inclosed, and policed area in or adjacent to a port of entry, without resident population, furnished with the necessary facilities for lading and unlading, for supplying fuel and ship's stores for storing goods, and for reshipping them by land and water; an area within which goods may be landed, stored, mixed, blended, repacked, manufactured, and reshipped without payment of duties and without the intervention of customs officials. It is subject equally with adjacent regions to all the laws, relating to public health, vessel inspection, postal service, labor conditions, immigration, and, indeed, everything except the customs.

The purpose of the free zone is to encourage and expedite that part of a nation's foreign trade which its government wishes to free from the restrictions necessitated by customs duties. In other words, it aims to foster the dealing in foreign goods that are imported, not for domestic consumption, but for reexport to foreign markets, and for conditioning, or for combining with domestic products previous to export.

THE POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES

The policy of the United States has not been unfavorable to the kind of commerce that the free zone is designated to promote. On the contrary, it has been the obvious intention of the Government to relieve reexport trade from the restrictions incident to the administration of the tariff and customs laws, and to that end three institutions have been devised.

(1) The bonded warehouse, where goods for reexport may be entered and held free of duty.

(2) The bonded manufacturing warehouse, where without payment of duty imported goods may be handled, altered, or manufactured solely for export, either with or without the admixture of domestic materials and parts.

(3) The drawback, which is a repayment of 99 per cent of the duties paid on imported goods when they are exported.

The provisions and retention of these three devices show clearly that it has not been the purpose of the United States Government to place unnecessary obstacles in the way of its citizens when engaged in international trade. That such obstacles have arisen is due to the fact that the three devices mentioned were inadequate wholly to relieve foreign commerce from the regulations and restrictions placed upon the importation of foreign goods for domestic consumption. It would therefore involve no change of policy to supplement these devices by a system of free ports or free zones such as have proved singularly effective in other countries.

INADEQUACY OF BONDING AND DRAWBACK

The purpose of the bonded warehouse is to relieve importers from the payment of duty on foreign products that in unchanged form are destined for reexport and also to permit the postponement of payment of such duties until the time when, during a period of three years, the owner desires to remove them. It can not aid in expediting the entry and clearance of shipping or the handling of merchandise, for vessels must submit to the same formalities and requirements, whether they bring dutiable goods or goods to be placed in bond, and the goods themselves, whatever their destination, must be valued, sampled, weighed, and tested before removal from the dock. Much of the delay necessary incident to the proper assessment of duties on imports for domestic consumption is equally imposed on goods destined to be reshipped.

(a) To protect the public revenue from unauthorized entry on goods into domestic trade, the owner of the goods is required, under present procedure, to give bond in double the amount of the duty, which is forfeited if the goods are stolen, lost, destroyed, or fraudulently removed.

(b) Even drayage, between dock and warehouse must be done under bond.

(c) In addition, from the time they enter port until they are reshipped, the goods are under constant customs control and supervision.

(g) Handling, sorting, mixing, or repacking of the goods is prohibited; only where serious damage is threatened can the original package be opened, and even then it must be done by special permission and under customs supervision.

(h) Subject to these regulations, the expense of which it should be noted is made a charge upon the goods, an owner may leave his merchandise in bond for three years, but at the end of that time if duties are not paid they are considered, to use a technical expression, as "abandoned to the Government," to be sold by the Government accruing charges and expenses deducted, and the remaining proceeds turned over to the owner.

BONDED MANUFACTURING WAREHOUSE

The mere statement of the regulations sufficiently indicates the limited usefulness, so far as export trade is concerned, of the bonded storage warehouse. Even more stringent are those applying to the bonded manufacturing warehouse. In the latter institution foreign materials may be entered free of duty and worked up into manufactures ready for consumption.

(b) Before beginning operations the proprietor must file with the Treasury Department and with the collector of customs a statement of all the articles he intends to manufacture, giving the names of the articles, the exact kind and quantity ingredients, and the formula of manufacture, and he must adhere rigidly to the formula set forth.

(c) He must also give bond in double the value of the goods he intends to produce.

(d) From beginning to end materials and operations are under strict customs supervision. A multitude of restrictions make the procedure intricate and expensive, and the penalties for violation are very heavy. Only in the most highly standardized industries is it possible to avoid frequent disputes and misunderstandings.

DRAWBACK

The law authorizing what is known as drawback permits an importer, instead of placing his goods in bond, to pay duty on their entry and then to draw back from the Treasury on their reexportation 99 per cent of the amount paid. This provision, of course, can not any more than the bonded warehouse relieve commerce from the delays and other burdens incident to customs enforcement. The intent of the law is to aid production for foreign markets by relieving from customs dues imported materials that are manufactured or finished in this country and then shipped abroad. But the relief thus afforded, except in the sugar and tinplate industries, has been relatively small, as may be seen from the following table.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE INADEQUACY OF THE PRESENT SYSTEM

At the hearings conducted by the Tariff Commission and in the replies to its questionnaire numerous instances were adduced illustrating the inadequacy of the bonding and drawback system. To a few of these attention may be here directed.

Rice milling is an industry for the successful prosecution of which all conditions appear to be favorable in the United States except a sufficient supply of raw material. The industry is now limited almost entirely to the preparation of the domestic product for domestic consumption, and this does not furnish full employment. It requires expensive specialized machinery and much skilled labor that must be engaged by the year. But testimony was presented showing that the largest mills are idle much of the time, because the domestic crop can keep them in operation for only half the year.

Efforts have been made to use the idle months in cleaning and milling oriental rice, the supply of which is very large, for reexport to the West Indies and Spanish America. To do this work profitably the rice must be imported in full ships' cargo and handled in bulk through grain elevators. These cargoes usually are about 6,000 tons, and as there is an average duty of one-half cent a pound on rice, the duty that must be paid on a full cargo is $60,000. The importer, of course, would be entitled to a drawback on such quantity of rice as was reexported; but it was the unanimous testimony of the mill officials interviewed that business had to be discontinued because of the difficulty, delay, and expense of securing the drawback.

Again it was found that imported flowers and feathers and imitation feathers are extensively used in this country for trimming women's hats, the model or frame of which is an article of domestic production. Also panama and imitation panama hats for the use of both men and women are imported from Central and South America and finished in the United States with the use of domestic materials. The industry has been almost entirely limited to supplying the domestic market, for our manufacturers have found themselves hampered in competing for foreign markets by the restrictions of our bonding and drawback system.

The effect of these systems on dealers in highly finished goods is perhaps best seen in the case of laces and embroideries. These are manufactured for which Spanish America offers a large and lucrative market which heretofore has been almost entirely supplied from Europe. Commodities of this character are apt to be included in the same order with a variety of other goods, and the order naturally goes to the dealer who can fill it as a whole at the lowest price, in the shortest time, and in the most convenient form. The order often includes specialties covered by trade-mark that are produced in different countries. To engage successfully in this trade, therefore, the merchant must be able not only to furnish the goods of his own country, but also to assemble, sort, and repack foreign merchandise for convenient delivery. This kind of commerce American merchants are precluded from entering except under the greatest difficulties.

In many parts of South America merchandise has to be transported for long distances in carts or on the backs of mules or llamas. It must be packed, therefore, with the least possible weight and in such form that the packages may be evenly balanced. Furthermore, dry goods are usually dutiable in those countries at specific rates by weight, so that the lighter the carton or covering the lower the duty will be. But our bonding system does not permit the original packages received from Europe to be broken and rearranged. And if American manufacturers of clothing use imported laces and embroideries in making women's wear the difficulty of identification and the expense of collecting a drawback are so great that when they export such goods they frequently prefer to forego the claim. One American exporter testified that his firm found it necessary to take goods from bonded warehouses in the United States and ship them to a West Indian port where they might be repacked and thence forwarded to destination.

Such are specific illustrations brought out at the hearings and in the correspondence conducted by the Tariff Commission showing the need of American industry and commerce for more liberal arrangements in handling and transhipping foreign products. Before pointing out how this can be accomplished through the establishment of free zones, it should be said with the greatest emphasis that the advantages to be enumerated can be attained in full measure only through the observance of certain prerequisites such as set forth in the bill, comment on which forms the second part of this report. The free zone or port that is here contemplated is one of the character provided for in that bill.

THE FREE ZONE AND IMPROVED PORT FACILITIES

The most important prerequisite is that such a port shall provide properly coordinated, modern, and efficient physical facilities for the lading and unlading of cargoes, the entry and clearance of vessels, and the handling of merchandise. In the main, wharves, docks, piers, terminal facilities, and other necessary features of American ports have developed with few exceptions by a process of planless accretion. They are exposed to frequent fluctuations between slackness and congestion, and recent experience has proved them altogether unprepared for emergency.

EFFECT OF NEW FACILITIES

The subject of providing new facilities can not be dismissed without reference to its probable effect on facilities already existing and the investments that have been made in them. The prospect that a publicly financed free zone with its elaborate equipment would destroy the usefulness of the facilities already constructed at great cost in our ports would arouse a widespread criticism, and not unjustified, to its establishment. The inquiries of the Tariff Commission, however, lead to the belief that no such destruction would be entailed. The experience of foreign countries has been that the growth of business in a free zone has been accompanied by a material, although smaller, increase in the use also of the previously existing facilities. The trade, for example, in the free port of Copenhagen grew in seven years by 400 per cent, while at the same time the trade of the old, or customs port, not only escaped a loss, but actually showed some gain.

THE BUSINESS PROPER TO A FREE ZONE

The question now arises: Whence is the new business destined for a free zone to come, and in what way will it profit the country? The business proper to a free zone consists in receiving and manipulating foreign products and reshipping them in the direction and at the time to take advantage of the best foreign markets. This is not only a profitable business, it is also becoming a necessary business to our industrial and maritime growth. For however wide the range of goods we produce and however effective our methods of production, we can sell our products to best advantage only when the purchasers are able to pay for them with products of their own. If we do not accept their products, they must sell them in some third country and transfer to us the credit they thus acquire unless they forego buying our goods at all and make their purchases in the country where they make their sales.

THE LATE ADMIRAL VICTOR BLUE

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a few days ago one of the most distinguished naval officers of the United States passed into the great unknown and beyond. I refer to Admiral Victor Blue, a native of North Carolina.

He was born in Richmond County, N. C., on December 6, 1865, and when nearly 18 years of age was appointed to the Naval Academy on September 6, 1883, from the first district of South Carolina by the Hon. J. S. Richardson. He graduated in June, 1887, as an engineer officer, and began a long and distinguished naval career which was terminated only by his death on January 22, 1928, at the age of 62.

In his early days he served on the ships of the old Navy, the Pensacola, Quinnebaug, Charleston, Alliance, Thetis, and the Bennington.

In December, 1892, he was transferred from the Engineer Corps to the regular line as an ensign, and thereafter continued in the line of the Navy.

In 1896, after nine years of nearly continuous sea duty, he went to the Naval Academy for two years shore duty as an instructor. While there he was commissioned a lieutenant (junior grade). In 1898, at the outbreak of the war, he went to sea duty in the Atlantic Fleet. While on duty with the fleet, off the Cuban coast, he twice penetrated the enemy's country in the vicinity of Santiago, Cuba, and obtained valuable information concerning the location of the Spanish fleet, commanded by Admiral Cervera, information which led to the eventual destruction of that fleet in the Battle of Santiago on July 3, 1898. For this heroic deed he was given the special meritorious medal and advanced five numbers in rank by the President of the United States.

After the war he again resumed the normal occupations of a naval officer in peace time and served on the Massachusetts, on the staff of the admiral of the Asiatic station, and on the Kentucky, Wisconsin, Buffalo, Bennington until 1905, when, after this long period of sea duty, broken only by eight months at Cramp shipyard, he was ordered to duty at the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. There he remained until 1908. During this time he was commissioned a lieutenant in 1899 and a lieutenant commander in 1905.

In 1908 he served as navigator of the armored cruiser North Carolina. In 1909 he took command of the Yorktown; became chief of staff, now with the rank of commander, of the Pacific Fleet in 1910; and in 1911 came to shore duty again with the General Board in Washington.

In 1913, while still only a commander, he received the unusual assignment to duty, for an officer of that rank, of Chief of Bureau of Navigation. He continued in that duty until August, 1916. During the World War period he was in command of the Texas, and after the war, in 1918, returned again to duty as Chief of Bureau of Navigation. His arduous duty in that assignment, coupled to his long and trying service in the past, reacted on his health, and in July, 1919, he was retired for physical disability (angina pectoris) received in line of duty. While chief of bureau he had the rank, from the office, of rear admiral; but his promotion in his own right had continued, and he was made a captain in 1914 and a rear admiral in April, 1919.

He never fully recovered from this heart affection and finally died on January 22, 1928, from a heart attack.

For his war service in command of the Texas, which was a unit of the American battleship detachment sent abroad to work with the British Grand Fleet, he received the Navy's highest award (short of the medal of honor, which is given only for individual heroic acts), the distinguished-service medal, with the following citation:

For exceptionally meritorious service in a duty of great responsibility in command of the U. S. S. Texas, operating in the war zone in association and cooperation with the British Grand Fleet.

Thus passes from the scene of activity one of the great naval officers of the country. He will go down in history as a great and good man. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will defer his request, I will be pleased to yield him 10 minutes during debate upon one of the bills which we will have up to-day.

Mr. ENGLAND. Very well.

REFERENCE OF A BILL

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 96) to prohibit the transportation, sale, and reception of stolen property in interstate and foreign commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

I make this request by authority of the Committee on the Judiciary. I have conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and also with the minority leader. The bill is entirely penal and belongs to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This can be done only by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

STENOGRAPHERS IN UNITED STATES COURTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is Calendar Wednesday. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 9024) to authorize the appointment of stenographers in the courts of the United States and to fix their duties and compensation. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of this bill, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] will resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9024, with Mr. CRAMTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on last Calendar Wednesday, there had been consumed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] 27 minutes, and by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] 15 minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas does not wish to consume further time in general debate, I have no requests from this side, and I will ask that the Clerk read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the district court of the United States in each district shall for the purpose of perpetuating the testimony and proceedings therein, appoint one or more competent stenographic reporters, as the business to be done may require, who shall be known as the official reporters of said courts and who shall hold office during the pleasure of the judges appointing them, or of the successors of said judges. Such reporters as may be appointed from time to time shall attend all sessions of or hearings before the said district courts, and shall upon the direction of the court or the request of either party in any civil or criminal action or proceeding take in shorthand the testimony and all proceedings had upon the trial or hearing, except the arguments of counsel, and shall, when directed by the court or a party to the proceedings, transcribe the same within such time as the court may designate and preserve the original stenographic notes for a period of not less than five years.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. DYER: On page 2, line 5, strike out the word "except" and after the word "counsel" insert the words "or any part thereof."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, this will make the language of the section read as follows:

Such reporters as may be appointed from time to time shall attend all sessions or hearings before the said district courts, and shall, upon the direction of the court or the request of either party in any civil or criminal action or proceeding, take in shorthand the testimony and all proceedings had upon the trial or hearing, the arguments of counsel, or any part thereof, and shall, when directed by the court or a party to the proceedings, transcribe the same within such time as the court may designate—

And so forth.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman left out the word "except."

Mr. DYER. Our amendment provides that that word be stricken out, so that this will include the arguments of counsel when directed——

Mr. STEVENSON. That makes it read that the reporter must take down the arguments of counsel.

Mr. DYER. When directed by the court or requested by either party to the suit.

Mr. STEVENSON. But not otherwise?

Mr. DYER. No.

Mr. McKEOWN. Do I understand that under the gentleman's amendment and the language of the bill there will be no question about the charge of the court being taken down as a part of the proceedings?

Mr. DYER. The charge will be taken and the arguments of counsel will be taken if directed by the court or requested by either party.

Mr. EDWARDS. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is it possible to construe the language to mean any part of the evidence on request or the whole of the evidence?

Mr. DYER. This refers only to the arguments of counsel. All the evidence will be taken down.

Mr. EDWARDS. This amendment relates to the arguments of counsel alone?

Mr. DYER. That is all.

Mr. EDWARDS. I think it is a good amendment and covers the point which I raised the other day.

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Would it not be better in this case to let the argument of counsel be taken down only upon direction of the court and not by request of counsel? It seems to me the argument of an attorney should never be taken down except when directed by the court upon the request of counsel. I do not think a mere request of counsel should warrant or compel the court to have the reporter take down such argument.

Mr. DYER. This is necessary and is provided for in some of the States, because, for instance, one of the counsel may make some remarks to which the other counsel may take exception, and, of course, would want that part of the argument taken down.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It was the opinion of the members of the Judiciary Committee, as I understand it, that the language of the bill as it was introduced in the House was sufficient to authorize the taking down of any part of the argument of counsel which constituted a basis of exceptions or of other objection, but in deference to the question that was in the minds of a good many Members of the House the matter has been made perfectly clear by adding the language which the chairman of the committee has directed the House's attention to. As the chairman has explained it will not be made obligatory for the stenographer to take down any part of the argument of counsel except that part which becomes a matter of controversy.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is there any question in the gentleman's mind or in the mind of the committee that this does include the charges of the judge?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; and there is no question in my mind that under the bill as originally drawn it covered the taking down of the whole proceedings in the court, including that part of the argument to which counsel makes complaint. But, regardless of that, this amendment offered by the chairman of the committee makes it certain.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "appoint," insert the words "in accordance with the civil-service rules and regulations."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I discussed this amendment fully the other day and will not take much time to-day. I pointed out the necessity of appointing court stenographers under rules and regulations laid down by the Civil Service Commission. These are not judges' stenographers; they are not to act in any confidential capacity to the judge. They are purely court stenographers.

It was pointed out last week the necessity of having accurate transcript of trials and hearings, and it will appeal to every attorney that has any experience in the trial of causes that it is to the advantage of all parties to have a court stenographer who is not absolutely and entirely under the control and at the mercy of the trial judge. I placed in the RECORD a week ago indorsement for my amendment by Chief Justice Taft and various Presidents in office at the various times of the appointment of court stenographers was before Congress. I believe our State pays the highest salaries to court stenographers of any State in the Union, and it appoints the court stenographers through the State civil service commission. I do not believe there is a State in the Union that has civil service that does not appoint court stenographers through that service. If they acted as confidential secretary to the judges, then there might be some force in the argument presented by some Members opposing my amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman says that he knows of no other State where the court stenographers are not appointed through the civil service. Let me say that the State of New Jersey has probably the most comprehensive civil-service system of any State in the Union, and it does not dream of not letting the judge appoint his own court stenographer.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then that shows that it is not so comprehensive as the gentleman would indicate. These are not the judges' stenographers. They do not hold any such confidential position.

Mr. WELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. WELLER. If the gentleman's amendment was agreed to, what provision would be made for the removal of the stenographers?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman will find that question fully answered in the letter from the Civil Service Commission on January 17, 1928. That is in the RECORD of last Wednesday.

Mr. WELLER. I understood the gentleman from New York to say last week that there would be no way under the civil service of removing the stenographer?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No trial or hearing is necessary unless the removal officer desires.

Mr. WELLER. Would it not be in all fairness to the stenographer necessary to have a hearing? Is he not entitled to know upon what ground he is going to be removed? Is he not entitled to be heard and, if necessary, to be represented by counsel?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not under the civil-service rules.

Mr. WELLER. Under the civil-service rules, if he is not entitled to a hearing, does the gentleman feel that his amendment is fair to the stenographers?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is more fair to the stenographer than for him to be at the mercy and will of the judge who may dismiss him without even written notice.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The court stenographer does hold a confidential relation to the judge, and in most cases the court stenographer acts as the personal stenographer to the judge and handles his correspondence.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But in a busy court it is impossible for a stenographer, in the nature of things where the court holds daily sessions, to do any other work than to report the proceedings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. This seems to me to be the situation: Each Federal district court, in the nature of things, must be a unit of procedure and adjudication. The judge must be held responsible for the procedure in his court. In order that responsibility should lie, power and discretion must be associated with the individual whom you propose to hold responsible. It seems to me, at least in the beginning—if abuses are found, they can be later corrected by the Congress—that the judge ought to be given the power and responsibility of selecting that individual who is to assist him in the procedure of his court. That is what this stenographer will do. For that reason I beg to express the hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] will not be agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I doubt if there is any necessity for further debate. I feel that I should invoke the rule. The Committee on the Judiciary is opposed to this amendment. I do not believe it should be agreed to. I think it would be very dangerous and would take away from the judges the opportunity to select men in whom they must have great confidence. We now permit the judges to select their clerks, and certainly the stenographer is nearer to the judge in the transaction of public business than anyone else. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to take only a minute of your time. I do not want to delay the bill at all. The discussion we have just had brings up a matter that I have been interested in for a long time. The Civil Service Bureau has become a very ambitious bureau. It has reached out for everything in sight, and if it keeps on reaching out as it has been in the last two years, the next thing you know you will have to stand a civil-service examination before you can be elected to Congress.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Did the gentleman ever hear of a civil-service employee being discharged for laziness?

Mr. McKEOWN. I never heard of many being discharged on any charge. I am not an advocate of what is called the spoils system, but I say here now that administrative positions ought not to be put under the civil-service control. We have had an example of that recently in our prohibition agents' examination. I was quoted as having said that the civil service at one time made an examination of three questions. I did not say that. I said that a story is told that at one time there was a bar examination, and the applicant for admission to the bar was asked three questions. Two of them he answered by saying that he did not know. That was correct—he did not know. The third one he tried to answer and missed it. Of course, he made two-thirds grade, because he answered two of them correctly when he said that he did not know.

Mr. HASTINGS. And was he graded 100 per cent perfect on that?

Mr. McKEOWN. No; they gave him 66 per cent perfect. I am glad to see the House turn down this proposition of putting these court stenographers under civil service. No matter what you think, they do occupy a confidential relation to the judge. I take this opportunity to make reference to this expanding policy of the Civil Service Commission. Where a position calls for scientific knowledge and special training, I think there is nothing better than the civil service, but when it comes to the selection of administrative officers, the civil service ought not to have anything to do with it. The Civil Service Commission can select postmasters, perhaps, but I would be willing to wager that any Congressman in this House can pick a better postmaster in his district than any Civil Service Commission can pick for him, because he will pick the man that will give the service and satisfaction. My good friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is a great friend of the Civil Service Commission and is always pushing forward the civil service. This may be all right where as in New York State they employ all employees under that system and they get a large share in Washington, but the rest of us do not get quite so many appointments.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the gentleman is not living in a Tammany stronghold.

Mr. McKEOWN. That may be true, but I will say to the gentleman that we are living in some other stronghold. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. I would like to know my colleague's experience with the recognition by the Post Office Department of the lists that have been certified over by the Civil Service Commission for appointment as rural mail carriers, and whether there is any juggling, and whether they are always recognized.

Mr. McKEOWN. For the past eight years I have had little to say about anything of that kind. I have not had much to say since I have been in Washington, because shortly after I came to Washington a rule was announced by the President that all postmasters would be put under the civil service, which left my opponent's friends all in office. He did require that the person making first grade should get the appointment. It did not make any difference whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, if he got the first place, he was appointed, and under the present system they select three and permit the Congressman to say which out of the three he recommends, and maybe no one of them is his friend. As a result of that he does the best he can, unless it is some case where they call another examination.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman does not mean to say that they appoint the man whom the Congressman indorses?

Mr. McKEOWN. They send him a list. I do not know whether they indorse or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes more.

Mr. DYER. Under the rules of the House on calendar Wednesday the debate must be on the bill. The gentleman is not confining his remarks to the bill. I ask that the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The compensation of such stenographers for services and transcripts and their duties, and the rules and regulations relating thereto, shall be prescribed by rules to be adopted by the district court in each district. The compensation shall not exceed such as is now or may be hereafter provided by law in the State courts in the State in which such district court is held, if such law there be. Such compensation for services shall be paid to the stenographers herein authorized in the same manner as the salaries of the judicial office are paid. The fees to be paid to such stenographers by the parties to actions or proceedings in said courts shall be prescribed by rules to be adopted by said court in each district. They shall not exceed such as are now or may be hereafter required to be paid to the State stenographers in the respective States in which said district courts are held, if any such there be.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 3, line 2, after the word "stenographers," insert the words "for transcript."

Mr. DYER. As the amendment proposes, provided it is adopted, the fees to be paid to such stenographers shall include fees for transcript.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to say that that is just the point that I desire to offer an amendment to for the purpose of clarifying the language. Would it not be better to go on and explain by saying, "transcript of proceedings," the word "transcript," of course, being of itself not a well-defined term and might be deemed indefinite, whereas if you said "transcript of proceedings" it would be clear?

Mr. STEVENSON. "Transcript" is the word set out in paragraph 3.

Mr. DYER. In section 4 we come to the word "proceedings" and say "The compensation of such stenographers for services and transcript." I think that covers it.

Mr. McSWAIN. Very well. I agree.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If they have stenographers, how shall the compensation be fixed?

Mr. DYER. It will be fixed by the court.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Without any rate being prescribed? That is the effect of the bill?

Mr. DYER. Yes. That is the effect, in my judgment.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TILSON, as Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. CRAMTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 9024) to authorize the appointment of stenographers in the courts of the United States and to fix their duties and compensation, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote desired on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DYER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DECLARATORY JUDGMENT BILL

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 5623, known as the declaratory judgment bill. It was considered in part in the House last Wednesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri calls up the bill (H. R. 5623), which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5623) to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section, to be No. 274D

Be it enacted, etc., That the Judicial Code approved March 3, 1911, is hereby amended by adding after section 274C thereof a new section to be No. 274D, as follows:

"SEC. 274D. (1) In cases of actual controversy in which, if suits were brought, the courts of the United States would have jurisdiction, the said courts upon petition shall have jurisdiction to declare rights and other legal relations on requests of all of the interested parties for such declarations whether or not further relief is or could be prayed, and such declarations shall have the force of final decree and be reviewable as such.

"(2) Further relief based on declaratory decree may be granted whenever necessary or proper. The application shall be by petition to a court having jurisdiction to grant the relief. If the application be deemed sufficient, the court shall, on reasonable notice, require any adverse party, whose rights have been adjudicated by the declaration, to show cause why further relief should not be granted forthwith.

"(3) When a declaration of right or the granting of further relief based thereon shall involve the determination of issues of fact triable by a jury, such issues may be submitted to a jury in the form of interrogatories, with proper instructions by the court, whether a general verdict be required or not.

"(4) The Supreme Court may adopt rules for the better enforcement and regulation of this provision."

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 2, line 5, strike out the words "all of the" and insert in lieu thereof the word "any," and after the word "interested" strike out the word "parties" and insert in lieu thereof the word "party."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Can the gentleman inform us with reference to the committee amendment?

Mr. DYER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] to explain this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, on last Wednesday this bill was before the House. Unfortunately, in my judgment, it was referred back to the Committee on the Judiciary, because the precise question at issue could have been cured by an amendment in two or three minutes. The dispute turned upon the question as to whether this procedure of declaratory judgment could be invoked by one party or by all parties. The question was put to me, I having been designated by the committee to report the bill. I personally thought the initial right should be accorded to one party, but the bill said, "interested parties," and therefore might mean all interested parties. But by subsequent reference to the Committee on the Judiciary this view has been unanimously sustained, and I understand that the application may be made by any interested party.

Upon reflection, gentlemen, it is quite obvious that if left to all interested parties no advance has been made, and we have accomplished nothing.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is now proposed that one party can invoke the power and action of the court?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. In order for the court to act effectively the other parties to the issue must be brought before the court?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; the gentleman is correct in that, and for the simple reason that the judge could not enter a judgment upon the question affecting the parties unless those parties were before the court, yet the procedure may be initiated by one party.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. It is true that the controversy at the time the bill was recommitted to the committee was over the matter the gentleman has just referred to, but there was quite a sharp difference of opinion among the members of the committee as to whether this procedure could be invoked only on issues in pending litigation or whether it could be invoked before litigation had been instituted on matters in dispute between the parties. Now, which is which to-day?

Mr. MONTAGUE. There was a dispute, but I do not think it was among the members of the committee. I do not recall as to that, but certainly there was a dispute on the floor of the House as to what is meant by actual controversies—whether a suit must be pending when application is made or whether the application could be made independently of the existence of suit. Do I not state it correctly?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I come back, therefore, to the fundamental basis of this bill. It gives the power, in the absence of a suit or in the absence of litigation, and for the purpose of forestalling litigation, to determine certain preliminary questions in cases of actual controversy. The actual controversy may not be in the court at the time, but it is impending in such a manner that it must be in the court. For instance, the gentleman and myself have a contract and we appoint an agent. He comes to me and says, "Has the agent under our agreement the right to do so-and-so?" I say, "I think he has." The gentleman says, "I do not think he has." Then I could make an application—which, by and by, is a suit in itself—to have the court determine the meaning of the contract in the particular that has caused a difference of opinion and consequent rights of the parties.
